> In the exercise of this authority over navigable waters Congress has, from the commencement of the Government, erected lighthouses, breakwaters, and piers, not only on the seacoast but in the navigable rivers of the country, and has improved the navigation of rivers by dredging and cleaning them and making new channels and jetties and adopting every other means of making them more capable of meeting the growing and extending demands of commerce. It has extended its supervision in an especial manner to the Ohio River. Amongst other things, it has overcome the obstacle presented by the falls at Louisville by the construction of an expensive canal. It has created ports of delivery along the river, of which the city of Parkersburg itself is one, and others are at Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Madison, Jeffersonville, New Albany, Evansville, Paducah, and Cairo. It has regulated the bridges which have been thrown across the river by authority of the States. It authorized the Wheeling Bridge to stand after this court had declared it to be a nuisance, requiring the officers of all vessels to regulate their pipes and chimneys so as not to interfere with the bridge, thus extending its common protection to commerce by land and commerce by water. It required the Newport and Cincinnati Bridge to be moved or placed at a greater height above the water, after having been constructed in accordance with the laws of the States and of the United States.

But if the learned judge who rendered this decision, more than 35 years ago, should inspect the bill before us and see to what extent we were now extending our Government paternalism, I wonder if he would not, along with many of us, ask the question, For whom are these special benefits created, and for what return? There is not a Member on the floor who has courage enough or, shall I not better say, who is imprudent enough to stand in his place and propose that a subsidy or some special benefit be given by the Government of the United States to any railroad in this country. Surely what the governments of foreign countries—and that whether the improvements are made by private enterprises or by the Government—long ago inaugurated in imposing reasonable tolls for such privileges ought not to be unjust when applied in this country, where dollars to their dimes are annually expended. Even automobilists are taxed in order that they may contribute to the better improvement of our highways, while in our reclamation and irrigation projects no one would think for a moment that the Government ought not to be reimbursed by those who are especially benefited by such improvements.

But what are we doing for these great water highways? While no one would think of extending that aid to the railroads, yet for the steamships which ply upon our Great Lakes and upon our larger rivers we virtually, though figuratively speaking, give to them the right of way—in fact, do the grading, lay the ties, and furnish the rails for them; nay, more, we erect beacons and danger signals for their guidance. And we do not ask a single dollar in return. Is this just?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I will ask not to be interrupted just now. It is because the people have come to understand that certain privileges of this kind are unfairly given, though they do not perhaps know just how, that they believe that the greatly increasing concentration of wealth in the hands not alone of our transportation companies, but in many other lines of activity, has been due to this practice, and they look upon any further legislation in their interests with suspicion. I may say, as amplifying the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], when he asked if there had been hearings upon this bill, it would not be a bad practice, as I look at it, if hereafter in all of these bills appropriating, as the chairman of the committee has said, for many, many different items, aggregating several hundred, if there was—especially in the absence of the printing of these hearings—appended to the bill with each appropriation a statement, not necessarily involving more than three or four lines in length, that would show not only what the present appropriation of money is, but what has been the total up to date and what tonnage is carried upon those particular waters. Then this membership of 391—370 of whom are not members of that committee and are not in touch with the work, thus having no special knowledge of the facts presented—would have some basis on which to rest their judgment when they come to vote. This is only a suggestion. It is intended in no way as a reflection upon the judgment or good intent of this committee, for the personnel of which, collectively as well as individually, I have the highest regard.

I speak from a decided conviction on this subject as coming from a personal observation of many years. Recently, within the past few months, I have had these views somewhat accentuated, and I have been more than ever confirmed in the belief that I am right in my contention that those who are specially benefited ought to contribute to the Government in making these great appropriations to the extent at least of the cost of maintenance. Recently I had occasion to appear before the Board of Engineers upon a matter calling for a survey of a river entering a harbor located in my district. The answer of that board was about what I expected. I was not disappointed in their reply, nor in the position they took. It was entirely consistent, in so far as the answer itself went, when the board said it would be very glad to make this recommendation of an extension of the Government work back of the harbor line, if possible, but that precedents had been set which commit the Government to making improvements only to the shore line. The board frankly expressed the opinion that the Government was unable financially to make any improvements involving so great an expenditure. They believed such work ought to be placed upon the shoulders of the community in which the project was located. Now, I would as soon take the judgment of that board as to the necessity for and value of our river and harbor improvements as I would the opinions of any other set of experts in the United States, because they have had to consider many phases of legislation involving a great variety of projects. When, however, they took the position that the community or city located at the mouth of that river ought to itself make these improvements, this thought came to my mind very strongly. If the Government of the United States, by the authority given to Congress under the Constitution to develop and regulate commerce, can not afford to do this, why should a community be asked to do it? Possibly I may indulge in some sophistry in asking this question. The answer probably would be because the community obtains certain special benefits which would be derived from the improvement of the harbor. While the logic of this answer seems sound, is there any good reason why it should not be carried to its legitimate conclusion and place upon the carriers, for whose more expeditious and economical operations these improvements are made, a just proportion of their cost? A little more than three years ago the rivers and harbors bill contained a provision as follows:

> The Secretary of War is authorized to appoint a board of engineers to examine those harbors on the Great Lakes and elsewhere in which the whole or a part of the harbor is improved at local expense, which board shall make recommendations with a view to determining whether the improvements so made by local authorities should be undertaken or maintained by the General Government and to establishing uniform rules in making harbor improvements.

In accordance with such authority the Secretary appointed a board of officers of the Corps of Engineers, which board, after visiting many harbors, not only on the Great Lakes but several upon the Atlantic seacoast, made a most interesting report containing several recommendations covering the questions involved. One of these recommendations reads as follows:

> 2. That no work of construction or maintenance be undertaken by the Government at any harbor constructed by and operated in the interest of a corporation or private person, and adapted to the promotion of such interest only.

The recommendation further declares against the General Government undertaking to maintain improvements where they have been carried on at local expense. In reviewing the report, however, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors qualified the conclusions above referred to to the extent that there might be such conditions where improvements already made by local interests might be further improved or maintained by the General Government.

The most interesting part of that report consists in the differentiation of the classes of harbor or river projects as concerns the disposition of the freight or tonnage business respectively carried on. With much justice it was maintained that where a large proportion of such tonnage was merely in transitu—that is, was not to be stopped at the harbor of entrance for fabrication into finished products, but was to be carried on to distant points—the duty of the local community to improve such harbor was at least not so clearly established. In such cases, to use the language of the report, "they could properly be provided and maintained at the national expense." But with an equal degree of justice it was pointed out that the case would be entirely different where practically all of the tonnage was to be manufactured into finished products in the city where the harbor was located. The benefits of such manufacturing industries to the communities are fully discussed, not only as they have to do directly with the growth of population of the community, but also as the increased value of real estate is affected. Again, let me quote from the report mentioned as bearing upon these last-named conditions:

In the ordinary improvements made in cities, such as the paving of streets, the laying of sewers, or the opening of parks, the property immediately benefited is made to pay a part at least of the cost of the improvement, and the city can in time recoup itself for the rest by the increased taxes that will follow from the added value of the property. In the improvement of a harbor the United States can not do this, for these things are out of reach of the General Government and can only be dealt with locally.

It follows, therefore, that in the case of harbors or parts of harbors devoted to the class of commerce destined for local consumption or distribution, or for local manufacture or milling in transit, there is a special local interest, advantage, and profit in excess of the general interest and value. There is a gain in which the general public does not and can not share, and there are sources of revenue resulting from such harbor development that are accessible to the local government, but are beyond the reach of the General Government. Therefore in the improvement and maintenance of harbors or parts of harbors where the commerce is of this character there ought to be a division of cost between the local and the General Governments in a proportion that should bear the same relation that the local and special profit and value of the commerce bears to the general profit and value.

While of no particular interest to the present discussion, it seems to me there is still some application in the fact that the city of Lorain, whose interest I was pleased to represent, although having a population of somewhat under 30,000 according to the last census, has in years past bonded itself to the extent of more than $500,000 to improve the river entering into that harbor, and yet more than 80 per cent of the tonnage of the harbor, which is one of the most important on Lake Erie, found no lodgment there, but was carried out over the railroads for general distribution to distant points. Clearly the character of that commerce comes within the exception made by the board of engineers under which the harbor "could properly be provided and maintained at the national expense." Into that harbor arrive and depart the largest steamers on the Lakes, rivaling in size those that sail on the ocean, and which, during the past season alone, carried into and out of that port more than six and a half millions of tons of freight in less than eight months of navigation. How many tons of freight do you think those great lake steamers carry? I have seen them time after time leave harbors up at the north end of Lake Superior having in their holds a tonnage that 4 freight trains with 50 cars to a single train, each a half mile long, could not carry. The report of the National Waterways Commission, to which I will refer later on, states that as far as the Great Lakes are concerned this tonnage can be brought down from a fifth to a sixth of what it can be carried for by rail.

This great economic saving in the cost of transportation has not been accomplished in a day nor at the expense of any ordinary sum of money. In so far as the traffic on the Great Lakes is concerned, the volume was comparatively light until 1885. From that time down to the present the percentage carried has increased from something more than 3,000,000 to approximately 60,000,000 tons. These figures are confined to the business going through St. Marys Canal alone; they do not include a considerable traffic which did not go through the canal. While the discovery of large beds of iron ore at the head of the Lakes had much to do with this increase of business, yet it could not have been possibly accomplished without the use of many millions of dollars expended by the Government in improving navigation. These aids have taken the form of construction of additional locks at the Soo Canal, the widening of channels, dredging of rivers, and deepening of harbors. The extent of such improvements may be illustrated in the fact that during the past seven years upward of $35,000,000 have been expended in this kind of work alone. One of these improvements, the Nebish Canal, extending something like a mile in length and involving the removal of many thousands of tons of solid rock, cost upward of $4,500,000. Many other projects less ambitious in character have been constructed by the Government.

We are all familiar with the methods of getting under way these projects involving the improvements to navigation. Sometimes the movement is started by those directly engaged in the transportation business, thus being the special beneficiaries of such legislation, sometimes by the communities in which the expenditures are to be made, and very frequently by the joint efforts of both. The ultimate object presumably—and it is entirely proper that it should be so—is the securing of better transportation facilities which follow from the ability to carry freight with greater expedition and in larger volume at a material reduction in cost.

Assuming that the survey for such project has been authorized and it is found to be a meritorious proposition, the improvement as recommended is commenced. In due time, its duration depending largely upon the character of the improvement and the expedition with which it is prosecuted, the work is completed at an expense to the Government running all the way from a few thousand dollars to many millions. It needs no uncommon discernment to see to whom the benefits, in a large measure, of the Government's aid go. Why, they go to those who are carrying on commerce in the transportation business, just the same as the railroad companies are carrying on theirs. There is no difference in its character except that one cargo is carried by water and the other is carried by land. That is the only difference.

And the railroad companies, be it said to the credit of their shrewdness, in more than one instance upon the Great Lakes, as you will find, and upon our larger rivers, seeing that for some reason or other the Government is so much kinder to the fellow who carries a cargo by water, have themselves done a little business of their own in that line, and have taken to the water. They, too, own some big boats. I do not quote the figures from official sources, but I am surely warranted in saying that whereas 20 years ago there were 90 per cent of the vessels upon the northern lakes of less than 3,500 tons capacity, to-day 80 per cent of this tonnage is carried in boats from 500 to 600 feet in length, bearing cargoes of from 8,000 to 12,000 tons. As a natural sequence of this evolution in the development of transportation, the inevitable result followed—the small boats have been driven off from the Lakes. While this may be considered as merely an incident in the inexorable law of commercial and industrial progress, yet such advantages have been made no less truly possible by our Government's beneficence.

Would I oppose Government aid to our navigable waterways? Not at all. On the contrary, where the development of a project can be predicated upon a reasonable belief that a legitimate competition in the carrying of freight can be secured and to such an extent as will justify the expenditure, I think it properly affords an object for governmental aid. Neither have I any criticism to offer of those, big and little, who have been fortunate enough to receive such aid under the present system of river and harbor legislation. It would indeed be unfair, in pointing out the extravagance or lack of merit of some of these propositions, to lose sight of the fact that through them in very many instances, especially where deep-waterway projects have been involved, the benefit to commerce has been very great. Undoubtedly in the past, before transportation by railroad became so general, such cooperation was absolutely necessary to facilitate the carrying of freight at any reasonable cost. But with the enormous development of our country in population and resources transportation problems have greatly changed in their character. To-day for every ton of freight carried by water there are more than 12 tons carried by rail. While admitting that the alternative choice of shipping by water has had a most salutary effect in affording competition with the charges made by railroad companies, yet it is undeniable that in many instances such competition is out of the question, no matter to what extent artificial aid may be given to navigation in its development.

I am not at all so sure, gentlemen, and I feel a little diffidence in putting up my own views against the riper experience, born of long knowledge, of the members of this committee, when I say that I am not at all sure that there are not many items in the present bill of unimportant waterways and harbors that never ought to be encouraged by a single dollar.

In considering such projects, Mr. Chairman, may I not draw an analogy with the plant which can not stand alone but must find its strength in the latticework upon which it grows, and the higher it grows the tighter it clings to its friendly support? That is often the attitude of the paternalistic objects of governmental aid. Two years ago, by authority of law, a commission was appointed called the National Waterways Commission. Senator BURTON, for many years the able chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, headed this commission. It made a most elaborate and instructive report. That report covers almost every conceivable condition that would be desirable to know as it affects European waterways as well as those of this country.

While in poring through the commission's report I did not find any specific recommendations for establishing tolls in this country—for, as I stated in the outset of my remarks, such a system would be a radical innovation in our practice—yet it nowhere, so far as I am able to discover, contains any criticism of the efficiency or justice of the tollage plan as applied to European waterways. Its findings and recommendations are certainly interesting, as they have to do with what I may properly term a reformation in our own practice of making appropriations for navigable waterways.

Nearly every page contains facts as to foreign waterways on which they impose tolls and the satisfactory operation of such a system. This tollage question, as you know, has been emphasized more recently upon this floor in the matter involving the maintenance of the Panama Canal. We know what has been done as to the Suez Canal. That canal cost nearly one-third as much as the Panama Canal, something like $125,000,000, but that great work has not only been self-sustaining almost since the day it was completed, over 40 years ago, but it has yielded millions of dollars of revenue for the stockholders of the concern, and, if I am correctly informed, the company has a provision in its franchise that whenever the earnings exceed a certain amount the tollage will be automatically decreased. I believe that to be a fact. President Taft has seen fit to impose a toll for the Panama Canal somewhat less than that of the Suez Canal, not upon the freight carried but upon the net tonnage of the vessel itself.

Let me now apply the principle of the payment of tolls or tonnage tax to the traffic upon our own domestic navigable waters. During the past few years there has been in excess of 130,000,000 tons of freight annually carried upon our navigable waters, about one-half of which is handled at the harbors on the Great Lakes. Would it be unjust to impose upon these shippers handling this immense tonnage such a duty as would at least maintain and repair all such Government-aided improvements? I believe the imposition of a moderate duty ranging from 5 cents to 10 cents per ton—less than the average rate imposed in other countries—placed upon the net tonnage capacity of the vessels would fully meet these demands. Such a toll so levied should yield a net annual revenue exceeding $8,000,000. Under such a manifestly fair plan of raising revenue, and which I hope in due time to see authorized by Congress, the maintenance items in this bill totaling, as the chairman of the committee points out in his fair-minded report, $2,222,650, could not only be readily taken care of, but the balance expended in making additional improvements where warranted. Indeed, aside from the inherent justice of the proposition to require a fair return from those who reap these special benefits, I believe such legislation would be in the interest of a better development of our waterways.

I referred a moment ago to the plan recently decided upon in reference to the imposition of tolls for the use of the Panama Canal. To those of my colleagues who have not had an opportunity of reading the report of Emery R. Johnson, special commissioner of Panama Canal traffic and tolls, I would recommend its early perusal. I can not speak in terms too high in its praise. Not only is the information therein contained of great value, but it is most logically and systematically presented.

As bearing upon the contention which I am making, I can not do better than to quote from one who has given an exhaustive study to the subject of levying tolls in return for special privileges under our navigation laws. Under the subhead of "Principles and considerations that should control in fixing tolls" the author says:

> The canal will cost the United States Government $375,000,000, much of which has been or will be secured by borrowing funds. The interest and principal of this debt must be paid either from funds secured by general taxes or from the revenues derived from canal tolls. It seems wise and prudent that the United States should adhere to sound business principles in the operation of the canal and in levying tolls. Public expenditures are increasing rapidly. Funds are required in increasing amount for the promotion of the public health, for irrigation and reclamation, and for maintaining the military power and naval prestige of the United States. Large expenditures upon rivers and harbors are urgently needed. Taxes must inevitably increase. The demands upon the United States are certain to be much greater in the future than they have been in the past, and it does not seem wise for the Federal Government to construct and maintain at the expense of the general budget such a costly public work as the Panama Canal. Those who derive immediate benefit from the use of the Panama Canal may properly return to the Government a portion of the profit secured from using the canal, provided this policy can be followed out without burdening commerce.

In summarizing his conclusions, the author, Mr. Johnson, further says:

> The United States should adhere to business principles in the management of the Panama Canal. The Government needs to guard its revenues carefully. Present demands on the general budget are heavy and are certain to be larger. Taxes must necessarily increase. Those who directly benefit from using the canal, rather than the general taxpayers, ought to pay the expenses of operating and carrying the Panama Canal commercially.

If there is any difference of principle involved or reason therefor concerning the levying of tolls as to the subject matter just quoted, as it applies to the navigation of our domestic waters, I fail to see it. If it is urged that the Panama Canal is a much greater proposition because it has cost so great a sum of money, my answer is that the aggregate of appropriations for river and harbor improvements in this country is still much in excess of that amount, great as it is.

If it is still further urged that the volume of business to be carried on at the Panama Canal is much larger, I am again sustained in my argument by pointing to the fact that the traffic upon our Great Lakes alone each year amounts to three times the tonnage that is estimated to go through the Panama Canal 10 years hence, while upon all of our navigable waters it is six times as great. Are you aware of the fact that within the past five years, including the amount of the present bill—$40,872,958—there has been a total sum appropriated by the Rivers and Harbors Committee exceeding $175,000,000, and that, with a single exception, the appropriation each year has greatly exceeded that of the preceding one? Indeed, the right and propriety of levying such tolls has been sustained time and again by our State and Supreme Courts. When the ordinance of 1787 was set up in the early cases as a defense against the imposition of such tolls the decisions of the courts uniformly considered its provisions as referring to navigation in its natural state. Upon this point, in the case of Huse v. Glover (119 U. S. Repts., 543), Justice Fields succinctly says:

> The provision of the clause that the navigable streams should be highways without any tax, impost, or duty has reference to their navigation in their natural state. It did not contemplate that such navigation might not be improved by artificial means, by the removal of obstructions, or by the making of dams for deepening the waters, or by turning into the rivers waters from other streams to increase their depth. For outlays caused by such work the State may exact reasonable tolls. * * *
> By the terms "tax, impost, and duty" mentioned in the ordinance is meant a charge for the use of the Government, not compensation for improvements.

The same view was taken some years later by the learned Justice Campbell, of the Supreme Court of Michigan, in the case of Manistee River Improvement Co. v. Sands (53 Mich. Rep., 596), in which he says:

> The idea that tolls for the actual use of passage over land or water highways can be treated as taxes and as invasions of private property does not appear to us tenable. They are not levied on property or on persons as their share of any public burden laid on the people, but they are a fixed compensation in lieu of a quantum valet for the use of that which has value and which is actually used to advantage. * * *

While decisions of similar import could be quoted from many other cases in our highest courts, I would like to refer to a rather curious and, I think, little known provision of an old-time instrument of historical interest, which, while specifically directing that duties shall be levied upon navigation improved by Government aid to pay the cost thereof, also sought to narrow the power to appropriate money for any internal improvement for commercial development whatever. Let me quote a section of the constitution of the Confederate States of America adopted in 1861. In enumerating the powers of the general government, I find this language:

> To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes; but neither this nor any other clause contained in the constitution shall ever be construed to delegate the power to congress to appropriate money for any internal improvement intended to facilitate commerce except for the purpose of furnishing lights, beacons, and buoys, and other aids to navigation upon the coasts, and the improvement of harbors and the removing of obstructions in river navigation, in all which cases such duties shall be laid on the navigation facilitated thereby, as may be necessary to pay the costs and expenses thereof.

How impotent, indeed, would be the efforts of those of my colleagues under such a constitution in behalf of so many of their favorite projects. Indeed, the laudable plans now contemplated in the further improvement of the Mississippi River with its great tributaries, the Missouri and Ohio, even for sanitation purposes and the better security from inundations, let alone for purposes of navigation, might be seriously endangered or at least much retarded by such drastic restrictions of such a constitutional provision. Fortunately I believe there is no sentiment or feeling on the part of Congress against granting appropriations for such purposes. But the reasoning of the framers of that old Confederate instrument, in so far as levying reasonable duties or tolls upon navigation facilities by Government appropriations, to my mind is still sound.

While, Mr. Chairman, the remainder of the time allotted me is short, I am reminded of the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] as to whether ultimately the consumer would not have to pay this additional toll or tonnage charge so levied. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman in a better way than to quote from a most excellent treatise by Prof. Harold G. Moulton, instructor in political economy in the University of Chicago, which is devoted to a consideration of many of the problems now under discussion. Upon the particular point which the gentleman raises, Prof. Moulton says:

> Freight rates have now become so small in proportion to the value of the commodities of traffic that in most cases nothing short of a tremendous cheapening of transportation would be reflected in the prices of the articles, and rate reductions now usually accrue almost wholly to the benefit of middlemen.

Quoting from McPherson, on railroad freight rates, the author says:

> The transportation charge on the material entering into a pair of shoes made in a St. Louis factory averages 1¼ cents. The transportation charge required to place that pair of shoes in the hands of the consumer in any part of the United States averages between 2 cents and 3 cents. This makes a total charge of approximately 4 cents.

Suppose our waterways should effect even a 50 per cent reduction of freight rates, we should have a saving of only 2 cents on a pair of shoes. It is hardly probable that such a saving would cause the shoes to retail at 2 cents less than formerly. The saving would be absorbed by the shipper and middlemen, and the consumer would be benefited not at all. But this charge, even as small as it is, applies to half of the entire freight charge on a single pair of shoes. Surely it would not be seriously contended that the buyer of such pair of shoes would be required to pay his proportionate share of a toll charge of 5 cents on a whole ton of such footwear.

In considering the more bulky kind of freight, which after all constitutes a very great proportion of the tonnage carried upon our navigable waters, for it is of that class of freight in which I take it that the greatest economy is effected, the author quoted says:

> Even with the more bulky class of freight the cost is not greatly different. The railways which carry coal to Chicago were recently permitted to make a freight raise of 7 cents a ton on coal. The result was a 25-cent increase in the price of coal, 18 cents of which represents the increased profits of middlemen. Is it reasonable to believe that under reversed conditions a reduction of 7 cents a ton in the railway charge on coal would lead the coal dealers to lower their price 25 cents a ton, or indeed at all?

He adds the sage conclusion, which is coming to be quite generally recognized, that "this is fast coming to be the age of monopolized retail trade." If I remember correctly, Commissioner Johnson, in his canal report referred to, takes substantially the same view of this question. As a matter of fact, however, too well known to be controverted, especially as the statement applies to navigation on the Great Lakes, a very large proportion of the tonnage carried is owned by the vessel owners themselves. In such cases they often own the mines, the products of these mines, the boats which carry them, and the mills which convert them into finished products.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHARP. I would like to have one minute more.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. SHARP. It would be an interesting digression for me, if I had the time and you had the patience, to consider the merits of these different phases of the subject as they relate to advantages accruing from lower rates. I thank you very much for your patience in remaining here so late in the day and hearing me talk. But the main point I wish to fix upon your minds, Members of this House—because I know I speak in the interest of equal taxation and justice—is that those who get these special benefits ought to pay their just proportion of the burden, which, under our present system, is wholly placed upon the shoulders of the American people.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. May I ask the gentleman just one question?

Mr. SHARP. Just one question.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. The gentleman says that there have been something over $100,000,000 expended on the Great Lakes. I should like to ask him if there is not now passing through the Detroit River a commerce approximating 70,000,000 to 75,000,000 tons annually, carried at an actual cost to the American people of about eight-tenths of 1 mill per ton per mile as compared with an average railroad cost of about 7¼ mills per ton per mile? And I should like to ask the gentleman, if you compute this enormous commerce, approximating 70,000,000 tons carried at this very cheap rate, benefiting thereby the whole American people—for they all get the benefit of cheap coal and cheap iron ore—if you compute that commerce at the average rail rate, would not the American people have had to pay about $300,000,000 annually for transportation in excess of what they now pay?

Mr. SHARP. May I have time to answer that question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. SHARP. I am very glad that the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who is the chairman of an organization favoring this legislation, and knows very much about the subject, has asked me that question. I think if there is any sophistry that can be plainly seen and easily uncovered, it is that which is so thinly veiled in his statement as it relates to the cost.

The cost to whom? When you figure the cost to a railroad, you figure the cost of the construction, the cost of the operation and everything combined; but when you figure the cost of the transportation upon these Great Lakes and rivers of our country, do you ever stop to figure the cost that the Government has paid, and not the vessel owners themselves? If you consider the cost to the Government of the United States—that which the people, if you please, have paid for the benefit of these transportation companies in improving our navigable waters—then there would be a different story to tell. But even then is there anything unjust in asking the fellow who shipped the goods to pay it, and not the people at large?

But does not the gentleman's question in itself furnish a sufficient reason for the justice of requiring a fair return for the advantages which he states? Surely, if the improvement of navigation upon the Great Lakes, which is largely due to governmental aid, has enabled the shipping interests to so successfully prosecute their business by means of much lower freight rates, is it unjust to ask from them some return therefor? And is not the gentleman aware of the fact that in many instances the very ability of the larger shippers to carry at such reduced rates has greatly enhanced the value of their holdings in the mines, forests, and other properties from which these products are transported?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I should like to ask the gentleman some more questions.

Mr. SHARP. I should be only too glad to answer them.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized for four minutes.

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 35.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 12th day of February, 1913, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate pro tempore shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate pro tempore, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate pro tempore, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill and read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works hereinafter named.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman withhold his point, as I may not be able to be here on Thursday?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: For maintenance, $25,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish the chairman of the committee would tell whether Chelsea Creek, for which the appropriation was made last year, is wholly within the port of Boston?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am under the impression that it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It bisects the city?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; it runs into the city some distance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Wholly within the city limits?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Providence River and Harbor, R. I.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 919, Sixtieth Congress, first session, $164,800.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the chairman whether the city of Providence or the State of Rhode Island make any contribution toward this improvement?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am under the impression there is none being made at this time. I do not think any ever has been made by the city or any local authorities there. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was under the impression that Rhode Island did make a contribution.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Not to this project, but on another project on the other side of the channel.

Improving Connecticut River, Conn.: For maintenance of improvement below Hartford, $15,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Florida what has become of the appropriation for improving the Connecticut River above Hartford?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not recall. Probably the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] can answer the question, as he is quite familiar with the project.

Mr. LAWRENCE. As I understand, none of the appropriation carried in the last bill for the Connecticut River above Hartford, amounting to $25,000, has been used. I assume this is the reason: There is now pending in Congress a favorable report from the War Department upon a project for the development of power and navigation at Windsor Locks, which is some distance above Hartford. If the corporation which is seeking the right to build a dam and develop power at that point is given the right, it has been recommended that something in the neighborhood of about $1,000,000 be expended by the National Government, which would give very excellent navigation all the way from Hartford up to Holyoke, and while this is pending I assume the War Department will not expend the $25,000 which was appropriated in 1912.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is held up pending the adjustment of the water-power question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Pending the action of Congress on that water-power question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Connecticut is an interstate river?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It runs through Connecticut and Massachusetts?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And taps Holyoke and Springfield and other manufacturing towns?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes. The river has been for many years navigable up as far as Hartford. Above Hartford are the important cities of Springfield and Holyoke, and for some years there has been an effort made to make the river navigable up as far as Holyoke. The engineers have made unfavorable reports because of the great expense involved, and it is to get around the great expense that the proposition is now being considered to have a large part of such expense borne by private parties.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not that about $2,000,000?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The original estimate was that it would cost the Government $6,000,000 to provide suitable navigation from Hartford to Holyoke. If private parties go to the expense of the construction of a dam and lock, the Government will be called upon to expend less than a million dollars.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Jamaica Bay, N. Y.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1488, Sixtieth Congress, second session, $300,000, from which amount the Secretary of War may reimburse the city of New York each month for the dredging and the disposition of dredged material of the preceding month at the actual unit price per cubic yard, place measurement: Provided, That such cost shall not exceed 8 cents per cubic yard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain if the city of New York contributes to the expense of this project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It contributes in this way: It agrees to do a part of that work at a very small unit price. It is a large project, to cost the Government seven or eight millions of dollars. The city is to do certain dredging, for which the Government is to pay up to 8 cents per cubic yard. Besides, the city is to do other work, the cost of which is variously estimated from thirteen to seventy millions of dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Probably no State in the Union has done so much for the improvement of waterways as the State of New York. The question sometimes arises in the discussion of this bill as to whether there is any intent on the part of States or municipalities to help. I desire to know whether in this particular instance an obligation has been laid upon New York State or city to contribute to the expense of this improvement, which, of course, is general.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, the obligation is upon the city. I consider there is a very considerable contribution made by the city of New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In his general statement a little while ago the chairman of the committee [Mr. SPARKMAN] referred to the contribution that the States along the Mississippi have made toward the construction of levee work. He indicated that the Government has spent about $26,000,000, if I remember the figures. He also stated that the States had contributed about twice as much, and that Louisiana has been very strong in its contributions. The question sometimes arises as to whether these large centers and great commercial centers—and that is the purpose of my question to the gentleman—get the treatment they ought to get in the distribution of the public money, and whether an unequal obligation is not laid upon them to contribute of their own funds to bring about national improvements.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Staten Island Sound, N. Y. and N. J., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1124, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $500,000; for maintenance of improvement of Arthur Kill and the waters connecting Raritan Bay with New York Harbor, including channel north of Shooters Island, $30,000; in all, $530,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in his opening address the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee stated that the volume of tonnage there amounted to 30,000,000 tons, I think.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact, now that improvements have actually begun upon this very important stream, which in 16 miles carries this vast tonnage, that for years and years only about $5,000 was required for maintenance?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not recall the amount, but the item for maintenance there has been quite small. I can not remember just at the moment the amount.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The total appropriations for permanent improvements probably in the aggregate would not exceed $100,000, all told.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can give the exact figures. The total appropriations to date are $1,207,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On a stream producing 30,000,000 tons per annum.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Woodbury Creek, N. J., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 635, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $8,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman ready to quit? I desire to offer an amendment at this point, but if I may have the privilege of offering it later, I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to offer a new paragraph here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an entirely new paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Florida that he ask unanimous consent to pass pages 10 and 11.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we pass over line 23, on page 9, to and including line 25, on page 11, without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving inland waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay, Del.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the reports submitted in House Document No. 823, Sixtieth Congress, first session, and in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 51, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $41,725.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave later on to offer an amendment at that point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed without prejudice, to be returned to later.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an entirely new paragraph.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, the gentleman will have that opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this item be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That is, to offer an amendment following line 13, page 12.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is my request.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The committee will have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Susquehanna River above and below Havre de Grace, Md.: Completing improvement, $51,230.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph proposes to improve the Susquehanna River above and below Havre de Grace. The river is quite rocky above that point. I want to know how far it is contemplated to carry the improvement, because it may involve an important question of transportation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is only a very few miles. I forget the exact distance above Havre de Grace.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell me whether any survey has been made recently of the Susquehanna River above Havre de Grace?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; under an authorization in the bill of 1911.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman that I think the committee ought to be informed that the Susquehanna River is an interstate river and traverses the coal sections of Pennsylvania. If opened up for navigation it would have much to do in reducing the cost of living in carrying coal. I wanted to know if this paragraph would carry the improvements so far above Havre de Grace that it would reach the coal fields?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not think it would go that far, but it is a very imposing stream, and no doubt will receive just treatment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $800,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the canal and appurtenant property belonging to the Chesapeake and Albemarle Canal Co. shall have been acquired by the United States by purchase in accordance with the agreement entered into between the Secretary of War and said company under date of February 17, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I want to ask whether there is any authority of law now for the Secretary of War to make an agreement for the purchase of this canal?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes; there is ample authority for that, and the Secretary of War has gone ahead and entered into a contract, the terms of which have not yet been carried out.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to inquire was whether the agreement entered into was some tentative agreement, or whether it was entered into under authority of some act of Congress?

Mr. SPARKMAN. There was authority contained in the act of Congress adopting the project.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I understand that the former river and harbor appropriation bill provided for the buying of this Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal and that up to this time the Government has never received title to this property. I do not know whether the Government will ever get title to it or not. But in a former bill $100,000 was appropriated, if I remember correctly, for the improvement of this canal when acquired by the Government. Now, we have have appropriated already $500,000 for acquiring the canal.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman was going to make a motion to strike out the paragraph. Why not ask unanimous consent to pass it over?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I am willing to do that. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I think this might be disposed of now.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, we could dispose of it without a hundred Members here, because, to my mind, it is an important thing, and I will not let it pass without that number being here.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the item be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. If it is passed over, when does it recur? We do not have to complete the bill before we recur to it?

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is in the option of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. I would like to have some understanding about that for personal reasons.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has any reason for it, let it be understood, and have it taken up the first thing when the House goes into committee again on this bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should have no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection. I should like for these two other paragraphs to go along with that.

Mr. MANN. Which paragraphs?

Mr. FOSTER. The two items following, on lines 21, 22, 23, and 24.

Mr. MANN. They will be taken up when the House again goes into Committee of the Whole on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to pass over the three sections just read, to be taken up when the House again goes into Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Swift Creek, N. C.: For maintenance, $500.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, in listening to the reading of the bill I have heard quite a number of creeks mentioned—several in New Jersey and one or two in North Carolina. I would like to have some information about them. Do we appropriate money to lock and dam creeks? I presume we do. It seems we are going into the improvement of creeks generally in this appropriation bill. In my section of the country a creek is not a very large stream, never navigable.

Mr. SPARKMAN. A creek?

Mr. HELM. What I am trying to get at is the size of these creeks—for instance, Fishing Creek, in North Carolina. I think such a creek was mentioned. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee something about the size of these streams.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman asks that question on Thursday.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will be glad to answer the gentleman right now. These creeks rise to the dignity of rivers. Certainly they are very important streams, and each one of them carries a large commerce, or at least many of them. For instance, here is Coopers Creek, which carries over 264,000 tons of commerce annually. Mantua Creek carries 170,440 tons; Raccoon Creek, 58,107 tons.

Mr. HELM. Raccoon Creek. Where does that stream rise?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is one of the rivers up in New Jersey.

Mr. HELM. I thought the gentleman said it was a creek.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was saying they all rise to the dignity of rivers.

Mr. HELM. I would like to ask the chairman, What is the size of the boats that ply these creeks?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Most of them carry good-sized boats; not ocean-going vessels, of course, but vessels drawing 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, or 10 feet, some of them.

Mr. MANN. Canoes, anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. HELM. What does the gentleman from Florida mean by his statement? Does he refer to the length of the boats?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Draft.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the two gentlemen will yield to me a minute, I think I can cite another precedent which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors wisely follows, to show that the word "creek" is not a provincialism, and that they do not follow provincialisms in selecting terms for use in their bill. My recollection is that when I was a boy and went to Sunday school I read about St. Paul and party being shipwrecked and having trouble many days and nights, but "they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded to thrust in the ship." [Laughter.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am obliged to the gentleman for reminding me of that scriptural reference. I should be glad to have these creeks called rivers. The fact is they all rise to the importance of rivers, as the gentleman from Kentucky will see by a reference to the statements of the commerce they carry.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman tell me what is the total amount of money carried by this bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, about $40,800,000.

Mr. HELM. Could not some of that money be saved if you cut out some of these creek projects?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes. You would save money, of course.

Mr. HELM. How much money in this bill is appropriated for the improvement of creeks?

Mr. SPARKMAN. A very small sum, relatively.

Mr. HELM. How much?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should say about $100,000. Certainly less than $150,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to furnish that information if the gentleman from Florida will permit me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will be glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The appropriations carried for creeks that the gentleman complains of, out of a total of $40,000,000, amount to approximately $130,000. The tonnage carried on these creeks is about 7,000,000 tons; more than half as much as is carried on the Ohio River, for instance.

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman mean to say there is more than half as much tonnage carried on these creeks as there is on the Ohio River?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; more than half as much tonnage is carried on these creeks as is carried on the Ohio River, and there is appropriated for all the creeks about $130,000, whereas the project of the Ohio River, in which the gentleman from Kentucky is deeply interested, contemplates an ultimate expenditure of more than $60,000,000.

Mr. HELM. I do not think this gentleman is particularly interested in the Ohio River.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is one of the great rivers of the world, and I assume that the gentleman is deeply interested in it.

And the value of the tonnage carried on these creeks is approximately $225,000,000 a year.

Mr. GALLAGHER. In other words, they are navigable rivers.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In other words, the tonnage carried on these creeks will, I think, be equal to half as much as the American tonnage carried through the Panama Canal for the first several years after its completion. That canal cost about $400,000,000, and the appropriations carried for creeks in this bill amount to about $130,000.

Mr. HELM. Of course, I may be misled in my general idea of what a creek is, but it seems to me that any commerce that is moving on streams of this size must be largely of an individual or private nature.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is the same kind of tonnage that moves on all other streams. Take Newtown Creek, for instance. It carries a tonnage almost as great as the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is now nearly half past 6 o'clock. There are very few Members present, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 783.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to employ an additional assistant clerk at $1,800 per annum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from New York desire to make any statement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there has been no increase in the clerical force of the Committee on Appropriations in 30 years. During that time the aggregate session appropriations have increased from $355,000,000 for 1884 to $1,019,000,000 for 1913, and the volume of the sundry civil bill, as represented in printed pages, is more than two-thirds as large as all of the annual bills at that time, and the sum it appropriates has increased from $23,679,000 to $142,265,000 for 1912, or much more than one-third of all the appropriations then.

The annual Book of Estimates has increased from a volume of 316 pages to one of 936 pages for the fiscal year 1914.

The House has recognized the augmented labors of the committee during that period by increasing its membership from 15 to 17, and finally to 21, and its office rooms from 2 to 4.

It was not until 1890 that the committee had stenographic reports made of hearings conducted in the preparation of appropriation bills, and at that time they made in all 368 printed pages. During the first session of this Congress they make five large volumes containing 4,675 printed pages.

These hearings have to be edited, duplicated, and irrelevant matter eliminated, headings inserted, proofs corrected, and indexes made. They are available to all, and used by many Members of the House and Senate and by all departments of the Government.

The work of the committee is necessarily continuous throughout the year, and without reference to whether Congress is in session or not, the vacation period being availed of for the preparation of tentative or subcommittee forms of the bills and putting records in permanent shape for reference and preservation.

The entire membership of the House, almost without exception, have to do with the work of the Committee on Appropriations, and an adequate and efficient clerical staff is quite indispensable in giving to the individual Members information concerning matters immediately affecting their constituencies or in reference to the public service, over which the committee have jurisdiction. This relation, too, of the committee to the whole membership of the House and the public generally extends into the vacation periods and is represented by no inconsiderable amount of correspondence and response to personal inquiries.

In 1883, aside from the Appropriation and Ways and Means Committees, only 10 committees of the House had annual clerks; now 36 of them are so provided, and in some cases—Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Invalid Pensions, and War Claims—they have three annual clerks each.

The work of the committee is in such condition that as a temporary relief it has been compelled to ask the Doorkeeper to detail one of his pages to assist the present force. So desperate is the need for additional help that the committee at a meeting directed me to submit this resolution to the House. We have six appropriation bills, and we are the center of information not only for the House but for nearly every department of the Government.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from New York to say that this is a unanimous request of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The unanimous request.

Mr. GARRETT. It is permanent in character.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is to be permanent. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has been with that committee 33 years. The assistant clerk has been there 8 years. One of the present reporters of debates in the House graduated from that committee. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate was an assistant clerk of this committee. It is necessary that these men be trained in the work, so that they may become familiar with all the details of the vast appropriations of the Government, and they go on from Congress to Congress regardless of the political complexion of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON SCHOOL HYGIENE (S. DOC. NO. 1023).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 19th of August last Congress passed the following resolution:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby requested to direct the Secretary of State to issue invitations to foreign Governments to participate in the Fourth International Congress on School Hygiene, to be held in Buffalo, N. Y., August 25 to 30, 1913: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted at any time hereafter in connection with said congress.

At the time the resolution was passed there were three gentlemen in Buffalo whose means and whose interest in the Congress were such that the people of Buffalo had every reason to believe that the expense of the congress would be contributed by these, their citizens. Since that time the three citizens have died, and there is no written obligation on the part of their estates to meet the necessary expenses.

I recommend the appropriation of $30,000 (to which the citizens of Buffalo will have to add a substantial sum) as a contribution of the Government to the fund necessary to make the reception of the congress accord with what we regard as American hospitality.

Personally I am very much opposed to any invitation of this sort at the instance of the Government in which the Government does not assume all the expenses of entertainment. Other countries much less able than the United States never extend an invitation of this sort without having proper preparation for the reception of the guests of the nation.

In the peculiar circumstances of the present resolution I urgently recommend the appropriation of the sum mentioned to enable the obligation of the invitation to be properly met. The proviso in the resolution was an unfortunate one, in my judgment, but, whether it was so or not, under the circumstances it offers no reason for Congress not to take the proper course.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for a moment only. I gave notice last week that I would this morning call the attention of the Senate to S. 6497, a bill to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States, with the hope of securing the consent of the Senate to a vote upon the bill in the near future. I think perhaps I ought to say that at the time the bill was reported in April last I was advised by the friends of the measure not to press for a vote during the first part of the Sixty-second Congress. It seemed to me to be good advice then, and I hope I shall not have occasion to change that opinion. But under the circumstances, Mr. President, inasmuch as the method of conducting the business of the Senate has reached that stage of refinement where it is utterly impossible to secure affirmative legislation without the consent of every Member of the body, there is nothing for me to do but appeal to the Senate to consent to a vote upon this bill.

I have not burdened the Senate with this matter, but since the bill was reported I have received telegrams, day letters, night letters, and petitions in great numbers from all portions of the United States urging me to press the bill to a vote, and I will now ask the Secretary to read two communications, one of which is from Mr. Spear, of Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

2015 BRYAN STREET, Dallas, Tex.

United States Senator McLEAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am glad to notice that you are urging a bill for the protection of migratory birds. The slaughter of robins during extreme cold weather when driven to this country for feed and shelter is beyond computation. Men, void of principle, go to the robins' roosts at night and, by blinding the poor birds with a bright light, the birds are thrashed down by hundreds. I have talked with men who have seen sacks full of dead birds. I have seen large numbers that were trapped as I have noted.

Last winter boys shot 20 to 30 each day for a long period of cold weather. People of the Middle and New England States may conclude that the robins have gone elsewhere when it is noticed that they are not building nests as of yore or that so few have been noticed. The cause of it is that they have been slaughtered in the South during the winter.

Senator CULBERSON is a humane man and no doubt would agree with the writer if his attention were called to the gradual extermination of robins, ducks, and all other migratory birds. You can be told here that we have a law making the killing of robins an act punishable by a fine of $5. This law is not enforced. There are many good people throughout all Southern States that would be delighted to have the Government, through the Agricultural Department or any other department, take measures to more fully protect migratory birds.

With best wishes, I remain,
Yours, most respectfully,

THOS. S. SPEAR.

Mr. McLEAN. I now ask to have this telegram read, which I received a few days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., January 16, 1913.

Hon. GEORGE P. McLEAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

You can't possibly comprehend how widespread and deep is the sentiment generally in favor of your bill for the protection of migratory birds. Your appeal for an early and favorable vote on this matter should have the earnest support of all the Members of the United States Senate who would serve their country by saving for it one of our most valuable and interesting natural resources, now being rapidly destroyed. No measure now pending before Congress is more far-reaching in its importance or is more greatly needed. We strongly urge its passage.

GLEN BUCK.

For John Burroughs and Ernest Thompson Seton.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas will propound the inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut that the only way to get up the bill is by unanimous consent, I desire to ask the Chair if it would not be properly within the rules for the Senator from Connecticut to move during the morning hour to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be in order.

Mr. McLEAN. I thank the Senator from Kansas. I intended to make that or a kindred motion, but I want, first, to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that I have here expressions from two extremes. The letter which was read was written by a practicable, civilized farmer, and, I think, represents the class of appeals that I have received pretty generally from the Southern States. The telegram, as you will note, was received from John Burroughs and Ernest Thompson Seton, who represent the very highest authority we have upon this subject, and it seems to me that it is an authority to which we should lend a willing ear before it is too late.

If there is objection to the consideration of this measure today, I desire to propose a unanimous-consent agreement. I do not know that there will be opposition to its consideration, and I will ask the consent of the Senate to take up the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has indicated. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6497) to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been heretofore read in full. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to address a few observations to the Senate with respect to the bill to repeal certain features of the Panama Canal act which was passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. GARDNER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Lodge	Shively
Bourne	Cullom	McCumber	Simmons
Bradley	Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smoot

Chilton	Johnston, Tex.	Percy	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Perkins

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I again announce, for the day, the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 57 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, as I understand the bill which is being discussed, it provides for the repeal of a clause in the Panama Canal law exempting coastwise vessels from the payment of tolls, or, in the alternative, recommends that the disputed question of interpretation and construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty be referred to arbitration. I am unalterably opposed to both propositions.

It has been stated that the legislation enacted at the last session was ill-advised and hasty and without proper consideration. I am sure when that statement was made to the Senate the Senators who heard the declaration were surprised, because it is within the knowledge of every Member of the body that the bill enacted at the last session for the regulation of the Panama Canal received the consideration of the Interoceanic Canal Committee for many months and was the subject of discussion on the floor of the Senate from time to time for perhaps four or five weeks. Many Senators participated in the discussion; and after very thoughtful consideration of the merits of the bill, with the same objections then urged that we have heard in the last day or two, the Senate adopted the existing law by a vote of 45 in its favor against 15 in opposition.

The great remedy which was sought to be accomplished by that law receives very little attention and was scarcely alluded to by those who opposed its passage. It was sought by the proper use of the Panama Canal to place a wholesome restraint upon the transcontinental railroads in the imposition of their charges. It is common knowledge that for many years the transcontinental railroads looked with disfavor upon the building of a Panama Canal, because those interested in the railroads knew that with the opening of the Panama Canal cheap transportation by water would require the railroads to reduce their rates and would deprive them of the monopoly which they sought to obtain.

There was a time when the Southern Pacific Railroad was found in competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. There was a wholesome competition which worked for the benefit of the people of the country. That competition was destroyed as soon as the Southern Pacific Railroad was able to secure 51 per cent of the stock of the Pacific Mail. Rates were then placed so high as in some instances to be prohibitive; and it appeared from the lips of many witnesses, many citizens from different parts of the country who testified before our committee, that the best results to the people from the use of the Panama Canal could be secured only by prohibiting the use of the canal by railroad-controlled boats. The proposal to enact this legislation encountered opposition at every step, and I remember during some remarks I had the honor of making in this body on the 17th of July last that I called attention to what was really within the knowledge of every Member—that no railroad corporation in this country ever secured the control of a competing water line without destroying competition. I called attention to the fact that every foot of rail east of the city of New York, that every foot of rail through New England, was controlled by one railroad system; that every boat on the Sound engaged in water transportation between New York and New England was controlled by the same corporation; and that that corporation, perfecting its monopoly, had sought, and had almost acquired, control of every foot of trolley-line service through that important section of the United States.

I called attention to the circumstance that the city of Bridgeport, one of the great cities of New England, a great manufacturing center, did not own a single foot of its own water front; that it was owned by the New Haven Railroad; that no independent boat could get a landing in Bridgeport; that the boats of the New Haven road had the business of Bridgeport by water and the railroad had its business by land; that every pound of freight going in and out of that great city was subject to such rates and charges as one corporation saw fit to impose upon the people, and that, contrary to the practice that has prevailed at different times in other parts of the country, the cost of transportation by water on the New Haven Railroad boats was as large as the charge in most instances by rail, although every student of transportation knows that it is less expensive to transport goods by water than by rail.

After making those statements, three of my distinguished colleagues from New England took occasion to say that I was in error in supposing that the New Haven system had any monopoly, and asserted that the people were well satisfied with the service and conduct of the New Haven Railroad. But within two months after that declaration all the people of New England were up in arms against the aggressions of that road. The governor of Rhode Island, the governor of Massachusetts, and the legislatures of most of the New England States were loud in their condemnation of the conduct of the New Haven system, and urged that the municipalities or the States should take over the control of the railroads as their only relief from burdens that were too heavy to bear.

You rarely hear in the discussion of the Panama Canal bill any reference to its railroad features. I concede that the provisions which seek to exclude railroads from the use of the waterways of the country are drastic, but I insist that they are necessary if the people of the country are to be saved from the domination of great monopolies.

We provided in the bill that our coastwise ships should be permitted to use the canal free. We were induced to this course by two considerations: First, to encourage our coastwise shipping, and, second and more important, to secure the cheapest possible transportation by water. Cheap water transportation will compel the competing transcontinental railroads to maintain reasonable rates. The main purpose of the legislation was to reduce the cost of domestic transportation. This clearly presents a question of domestic policy, having no relation to international obligations.

Of course, we hear it said "You have violated the treaty with Great Britain," and we are told from time to time that we must maintain our reputation for national integrity with the countries of the world. But we have not violated the treaty by exempting our coastwise vessels. England, under a similar act passed in 1815 guaranteeing equality to the ships of the United States in the harbors of Great Britain, has for 98 years discriminated in favor of her local shipping. We have some people in this country who are more English than the English themselves in the consideration of our treaty relations.

We are told that possibly a painful impression will be made. I am sure that a painful impression will be made abroad if we surrender one of the most essential attributes of sovereignty. We can never permit a foreign power to intrude upon us its views affecting our domestic policy. If we yield once, further encroachments will be made upon our integrity as a Nation.

The Law Magazine and Review, of London, in its issue of November last has two instructive and illuminating articles on the controverted interpretation or construction of the treaty, both written by Englishmen who are good lawyers, one of whom concludes his consideration of the question as follows:

Much again has been said, with little approach to accuracy, by those who demand investigation, regarding the supposed obligation on the part of the United States to refer, as a matter of abstract opinion, the issue of the validity of the decision of the Legislature of the United States, and the construction of the international documents which such decision may affect, to any international tribunal of arbitration, whether one constituted ad hoc or one existing as a matter of international recognition in the shape of what is shortly known as The Hague Tribunal. The latter court, gradually advancing though it may be to international acceptance, can not yet be said to have reached the point of supplanting the traditional right and efficacy of national courts to deal with questions of international treaty construction. When the United States is directed with newspaper unanimity, but with scant courtesy, to refer the abstract question of the capacity of its Legislature to act in accord with treaty obligations, one has only to consider the probable attitude of Great Britain if a similar statute of its Parliament was on similar grounds called into question. Firstly, Great Britain could point out that, if the perfection of impartiality is demanded, it would be difficult to constitute an international tribunal, the members of which would not be drawn from States interested in the commercial neutrality of the Panama Canal. Secondly, it could point out that its own courts were fully qualified, according to the acknowledged doctrine of international usage, to pass upon any issue involving the application of the law of nations. And thirdly, it could rest upon the immemorial practice by virtue of which an act of its legislature has not been treated as subject to the juridical review of constituted foreign opinion. It would be a courageous jurist who would aver that the Supreme Court of the United States, the ultimate arbiter of the very Constitution of its country, is ill equipped, it would be a courageous statesman who would suggest that that court could not be trusted to hold the balance fairly, for the purpose of enforcing, or at any rate of declaring, the claims of all conflicting interests.

It would appear that recourse to context and preamble would enable the United States, having regard to the "general sense and spirit," to succeed. There is no contractual understanding by any States outside the United States on the one hand, and Great Britain on the other. There is no provision analogous to that contained in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty providing for the adherence to the convention of any third State. The whole of the advantages are to be enjoyed by any State for the time being accepting the conditions of working, without any obligation on the part of any State to remain bound to such conditions further than during periods which may be of intermittent uses. Even between the actual contracting parties, Great Britain and the United States, there are no collateral or reciprocal obligations by way of consideration explicitly undertaken. Any State for the time being using the canal, and so assenting to be bound by the conditions, can, by bounty to its own vessels or in any other way not amounting to a breach of international obligations, differentiate in favor of its own vessels and against those of any other State, including the United States.

To sum up, it is reasonably arguable—

(a) That the United States can support its action on the precise words of the material articles of the treaty, that its case is strengthened by reference to the preamble and context, and that its case is difficult to challenge on grounds of general justice;

This is not the declaration of an American; it is the declaration of a subject of Great Britain—

(b) That there is no international obligation to submit the construction of its legislative act to any process of arbitration; and

(c) That any aggrieved party has an appropriate, an impartial, and a competent tribunal in the Supreme Court of the United States.

That article is written by Edward S. Cox-Sinclair.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator please read that third proposition? I did not catch it exactly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The third proposition is this:

That any aggrieved party has an appropriate, an impartial, and a competent tribunal in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator agree with him on that?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no comment to make at this time with reference to the third point. I am only quoting the English attitude. We have been taught to believe that they look with disfavor upon our legislation. I am demonstrating that they do not.

I now read from the same volume an article by Mr. C. A. Hereshoff Bartlett. I quote:

The provision of the treaty referred to means that there shall be no discrimination by the United States against any one foreign nation, or its citizens or subjects, in favor of any other foreign nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions of or charges for traffic or otherwise. "On terms of entire equality" refers to the equality extended to all nations other than the United States; that is to say, it is prohibitive of the United States favoring one foreign nation as against another. Its purpose was to provide that vessels of commerce of all nations foreign to the United States should enjoy the same equality among themselves; but this is quite another thing from saying that vessels of commerce of foreign nations shall enjoy the same equality as the vessels of commerce of the United States, and that the Federal Government can not, without infringing the terms of the treaty, extend the free use of the canal even to its own vessels engaged in the constwise trade. What else does the expression "there shall be no discrimination against any such nation" mean? It means that no attempt should be made by the Federal Government to promote the interests of one foreign power to the detriment or exclusion of another; that all foreign nations should stand together equal and alike in the use of the canal.

"On terms of entire equality" was intended to prevent the United States discriminating in favor of one foreign nation against another foreign nation. The Federal Government was laying down its own rules, not for the regulation of its own ships of war and of commerce, but for the ships of war and of commerce of the stranger beyond its ports, and it unhesitatingly declared that the canal that might be built under its auspices should be free and open to them on terms of entire equality. No advantage should be obtained by one foreign nation over another foreign nation; there should be no favoritism, no special benefit or privilege extended to one that should not be open alike to all foreign nations. This is what the provision means and nothing more. It would require the interpolation of terms not contained in the treaty itself to sustain any other construction.

There is no invidious discrimination against any one foreign nation under the Panama Canal act. All foreign nations engaged in the same commerce—over-seas trade—are treated alike; are subject to the same restrictions and are entitled to the same privileges under similar conditions. On general principles treaties as well as legislation discriminating against some and favoring others are objectionable; but treaties and legislation which in carrying out a public purpose are limited in their application—if within the sphere of their operation they affect alike all persons or objects similarly situated—are not unjust discrimination.

Specific regulations of one kind of commerce which may be necessary for its protection can never be the just ground of complaint because like regulations are not imposed upon commerce of a different kind. The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons engaged in the same commerce and plying their trade under the same conditions enjoy different privileges. It is only then that the discrimination can be said to impair that equal right which all can claim to whom it is accorded by law.

There is no evasion of the rule of equality where all foreign vessels are subjected to the same duties and liability under similar circumstances.

The treaty could never have been intended to prevent the Federal Government from arranging and regulating its domestic or constwise commerce and in the use and enjoyment of its own property as it saw fit.

No such restriction could have been in view in adopting "as the basis of neutralization" a rule that the canal should be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations on terms of entire equality. It would be absurd for the United States to solemnly declare that its own vessels of war might openly and freely navigate its own landlocked waterways and enjoy the privileges that belong to the Nation as a sovereign power in the use of its own territory. The use of the words "vessels of war" shows plainly that the word "vessels" as used referred only and exclusively to those of all nations other than those of the United States, and that the word "nations" was restricted to foreign nations; that is to say, nations foreign to the United States. What the opponents of the canal act seek to accomplish is to add to this phrase after the word "equality" the words "with its own," so that it would read "on terms of entire equality with its own." But that is precisely what was not contemplated and what was never within the minds of the contracting parties. The United States was not adopting a rule for the use of its own canal—its own enterprise and work achieved at the cost of its own national treasure—but was simply laying down a rule for the equal treatment alike of all foreign vessels in a ship canal that might be built beyond its territory, but under its supervision and direction. That is to say, it was not laying down rules to regulate its own conduct in the beneficial use and enjoyment of its own property, or abandoning what one day might belong to the Nation just as much as Porto Rico or the Philippines. No such relinquishment by the Federal Government was ever within the contemplation of those who negotiated the treaty.

It is inconceivable that the United States, when it agreed in the treaty that the canal should be free and open to the vessels of commerce of all nations, intended to recognize or to feel itself bound to recognize on terms of entire equality foreign vessels of commerce with those of its own engaged in domestic or constwise trade, or to so restrict its sovereign authority over its own commerce that it could not consistently with the treaty abolish tolls on its own shipping that might be entirely foreign to the conceptions of the American people and inconsistent with their commercial interests.

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty not only referred to vessels of foreign nations engaged in foreign trade, but it excluded those engaged in the constwise trade. The contracting parties did not have these in mind in framing the treaty. The disputed provision refers to perfect equality, and therefore must necessarily include only those vessels capable of falling within this term; and the only vessels of commerce that were then, are now, or ever have been treated on the same terms of equality under the usage of nations are vessels of commerce engaged in foreign trade. Vessels of commerce following the constwise trade have never been placed on an equality with those engaged in commerce with foreign nations, nor could they be without violating national laws or the inherent right of a nation to control its domestic shipping. There is a well-defined distinction between vessels engaged in foreign commerce and the local coastwise vessel sailing under its own nation's flag between home ports. Coastwise vessels ply their trade under different conditions from those engaged in foreign commerce. They form a separate and distinct class; they are governed by different laws; they are subjected in their own ports to lesser duties and charges or to none at all; and they are jealously protected by their own government which, invariably by one means or another, discriminates in their favor.

Congress has always adhered to the policy of restricting domestic commerce—that is, vessels trading from one port in the United States to another port in the United States—to American vessels owned and navigated by American citizens. There is nothing special and peculiar in this legislation. It is in harmony with the policy not only of the United States, but of every sea-bound nation, to encourage and protect under special privileges its domestic maritime trade. The same system has been observed by the treaty-making power of the Government, which has frequently given emphasis to the doctrine by express reservations in treaties.

The terms "vessels of a nation," or even "vessels," as used in treaties, have received among commercial countries their own interpretation by long-continued custom and acquiescence, and are universally accepted as not embracing vessels other than those plying between one foreign country and another, so that in the negotiation of treaties the high contracting parties have never had in contemplation coastwise vessels in laying down rules for equality of treatment of the vessels of their respective countries.

In addition to the 3 treaties above mentioned, 28 other treaties of commerce and navigation were concluded between the United States and foreign countries between the years 1825 and 1887, which expressly excepted their respective coastwise trade.

England has always carried out the same policy as that of the United States with reference to her coastwise vessels, either by safeguarding her home trade diplomatically in express exemptions in treaties or by subjecting her coastwise vessels to other and different dues and charges from vessels engaged in the over-seas trade, thus practically discriminating in favor of her own domestic marine.

In principle the two things are the same, the result being that the stranger coming from over the seas, in spite of all the pretense of uniformity, mutuality, and equality of treatment, has to pay larger and heavier port dues than the British coastwise vessel, and this is the practice at British ports to-day, as it has always been, even in spite of the most formal treaty stipulations to the contrary. While to-day England's coastwise trade is open to ships of other nations, yet this was not always so, for at one time it was provided by law that no goods or passengers should be carried coastward from one port of the United Kingdom to another except in British ships, the same act defining what the coastwise trade was, and as late as in 1870 it was provided by act of Parliament that no goods or passengers should be carried by water from one port of Canada to another except in British ships. The whole history of English diplomacy has been uniform with that of the United States and other commercial countries, either in specifically exempting coastwise trade from its conventions and treaties, or by doing so in establishing different and other duties and charges for her coastwise marine than those imposed at the same port on vessels engaged in the over-seas trade.

It may be argued that these treaty provisions specifically exempting coastwise vessels are evidence that Great Britain and the United States in omitting them in their treaties thereby recognized that the treaties between these countries included both foreign and coastwise vessels, but such an argument is without merit, because the fact exists to-day, as it has for generations, that England herself discriminates in favor of her own vessels engaged in the coasting trade. The treaty of 1815 provides:

"That no higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed * * * in the ports of any of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe on the vessels of the United States than shall be payable in the same ports on British vessels."

If England's interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty holds good, then how does she justify, under the language just quoted of the treaty of 1815, her discrimination in tonnage duties in favor of her coasting vessels? And yet this is precisely what she has always done and is doing to-day. No explanation or recrimination can alter the fact that Great Britain has always adhered tenaciously, like other seagirt nations, to the policy of favoring coastwise vessels, and that wherever Britannia rules they form a class separate and distinct from vessels employed in foreign trade, and that they have always been excepted from the term "vessels" as used in all international agreements. So true is this that it would seem unnecessary to go into details, although abundant proof is at hand.

Take, for instance, the port of Bristol. Every vessel entering from or departing for the east coast of the United States of America, including ports of the United States of America in the Gulf of Mexico, pays 1s. 1½d. per registered ton, while every vessel entering or departing for the Channel Islands, Ireland, the Isle of Man, or any part of Great Britain, not including Barry, Penarth, Cardiff, Newport, and other ports to the eastward of the Holmes, pays only 5d. per registered ton.

From a comparison of the foregoing port charges it appears that an American vessel of 5,000 tons on entering or departing from the port of Bristol from or for the east coast of America pays tonnage dues at the rate of 28 cents per ton, or 56 cents for entering and departing, while vessels entering or departing for the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or any part of Great Britain, with a few exceptions, pay only 10 cents a ton, or 20 cents for both entering and departing. At these rates an American vessel of 5,000 tons arriving from over seas is compelled to pay at the port of Bristol on entering or departing $90 tonnage dues, or on entering and departing $180, while if no other or higher duties or charges were imposed than those payable in the same ports on British vessels according to the treaty of 1815, then such American vessel would only have to pay $50 on entering or departing, or $100 on entering and departing, making a difference in the first instance of $40 and in the second of $80. This may not be discrimination according to English views, but it looks exceedingly like it from an American standpoint.

The rates and dues exacted at the port of Liverpool (Mersey docks and harbor board) afford some startling illustrations of this discrimination. Dock tonnage rates on vessels are imposed according to the class of voyage, that is to say, the vessel's destination. Those coming within class 6, which includes all ports on the east coast of North America, pay 1s. 4d. per ton, while those under class 2, between the Mull of Galloway and Duncans Bay Head, including the Orkney Isles and all the islands on the western coast of Scotland, and between St. Davids Head and the Lands End, including the Scilly Island and the east coast of Ireland from Cape Clear to Malling Head, pay 4½d. per ton, and those included in class 3, covering all parts of the east and southern coasts of Great Britain between Duncans Bay Head and the Lands End, including the islands of Shetland and all parts of the west coast of Ireland from Cape Clear to Malling Head, including the islands on that coast, pay 6d. per ton.

Harbor rates on vessels bear out the same discrimination. Those under class 2 pay five-eighths of a penny per ton; those under class 3 pay three-fourths of a penny per ton; while vessels under class 6, embracing the trans-Atlantic trade, have to pay 1½d. per ton, or exactly double. There are also differential dock tonnage rates on vessels in which the same discrimination is carried out as they provide for one-half of the rates specified under classes 2, 3, and 6.

Wharf rates on vessels are as follows: Under class 2, 1½d. per ton; under class 3, 1½d. per ton; and under class 6, 4d. per ton. This is a clear preference in favor of domestic coasting vessels as against vessels engaged in foreign or over-seas trade of 2½d. per ton.

These figures of the port of Liverpool furnish additional examples of the same rigid discrimination in favor of England's coasting vessels. American vessels coming across seas, for entering and leaving port pay harbor rates of 33 cents a ton, while some coasters pay only 9 cents a ton, or 27 cents per ton less than the American vessel.

Tonnage dues at the port of London are as follows: (1) For every vessel trading coastwise or entering inward or clearing outward from or to any place north of latitude 48° 30′ N., and between longitude 12° W. and 65° E. of Greenwich, for every voyage both in and out, 1d. per ton. (2) For every vessel entering inward or clearing outward beyond those limits, 1½d. per ton. (3) For vessels under 100 tons which do not pass beyond the seaward limit of the port, a halfpenny per ton. (4) Coastwise vessels not exceeding 45 tons, vessels bringing corn coastwise, fishing smacks, and lobster and oyster boats are exempt from dues.

This discrimination of 1 cent a ton for entering and clearing port in favor of coastwise vessels and against trans-Atlantic vessels may on first impression seem trifling; but when on calculation it is found that on a vessel of 5,000 tons this additional 1 cent per ton on entering and leaving port amounts to $50, it is evident that all sense of equality between ocean-going vessels and those employed in the home trade only is completely discarded.

If England for a moment believed that the words "British vessels" or "vessels of the United States" as used in the treaty of 1815 included or was ever intended to include coasting vessels, she would not have established and enforced differential rates at her various ports in favor of coasting vessels, for that would then be a flagrant violation of the rights secured to vessels of the United States under the treaty. Not only this, but such an interpretation on the part of England would afford the United States to justly demand that vessels of the United States pay the same dues and charges at British ports as are exacted from British vessels engaged in the coastwise trade, instead of those largely increased and heavier dues and charges that American vessels have to pay.

But, in addition to this, Great Britain, by assent and ratification under circumstances similar to those that have arisen under the Panama Canal act, is not in a position to now insist on an interpretation of the equality clause of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty different from that in accordance with the established interpretation she herself has put upon the treaty of 1815 and of like clauses in other treaties.

The second article of the treaty of 1815 is as follows:

"No higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any of the ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States, nor in the ports of any of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe on the vessels of the United States than shall be payable in the same ports on British vessels."

This treaty was to be obligatory for four years from its ratification; but it was extended for 10 years by the convention of October 20, 1818, and indefinitely extended by the convention of August 6, 1827, so that it is a subsisting treaty to-day.

It will be seen that the provision above quoted from the treaty of 1815 is as broad and comprehensive as the equality clause contained in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and that it embraces all vessels of either country without exception or distinction as to whether they may be engaged in over-seas commerce or the coastwise trade. If, therefore, the expressions "British vessels" and "vessels of the United States" do not embrace vessels employed in the coastwise trade as England has herself interpreted the words for nearly a century, it is incomprehensible that she should now pretend in an outburst of indignation that the words "vessels of commerce of all nations" contained in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty does refer to and include those very vessels that she has always excluded under the terms "British vessels" and "vessels of the United States."

It is an interesting fact not generally known that the provision of the treaty of 1815, to which reference has been made, has been judicially interpreted by the courts of the United States in a litigation ending in a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1904, which declared that a British vessel engaged in foreign commerce was not entitled under the treaty of 1815 to the exemption from paying pilotage accorded by law to American vessels engaged in the coasting trade. (Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S.)

Not only has this interpretation of the treaty of 1815 been adopted and carried into practice by Great Britain for nearly a century, thus giving it the same validity as though a clause excepting coastwise trade had been therein inserted, but England's continued silence and acquiescence and failure to object to a like interpretation by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case cited is in itself an implied ratification and adoption thereof and is equivalent in its consequences to an express declaration of approval.

If, therefore, the words "British vessels" and "vessels of the United States," as used in the treaty of 1815, do not include vessels engaged in the coasting trade, as I feel has been sufficiently demonstrated, it is difficult to understand how the words "vessels of commerce of all nations," as used in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty does include them.

Mr. President, these articles confirm the views presented by Senators when this subject was under discussion last session. They are the views of President Taft and his distinguished Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, and afford ample authority for the conclusion reached by the Senate last August. It has been stated that during the progress of the negotiations preceding the adoption of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty Senator Bard proposed, in substance, the adoption of a declaration that the provisions under discussion were not intended to affect the vessels of the United States. It is said that was voted down at the time, and that therefore it is a concession that no vessels of the United States should be exempted from the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. But I ask whether it is not more probable that the reason the suggested provision was voted down was that many of the lawyers in this body deemed it wholly unnecessary; that the treaty as it was originally proposed conferred that right upon the United States, and needed no modification in that regard?

We are reminded that we have been the apostles of the peace movement; that we would be untrue to our traditions if we did not permit this question to be disposed of by an arbitration court. In some quarters it is forgotten that a year ago, after long discussion, the Senate refused to enter into a treaty with any foreign power by which every controversy was to be settled by arbitration. We have numerous arbitration treaties now, but every treaty excludes from submission to arbitration three classes of questions—those affecting our national honor, our vital interests, and the rights of third parties. And we have solemnly refused to go further in support of arbitration policies.

The question confronting us is, Shall we permit foreign governments to dictate to the United States respecting our domestic policies? If our right to pursue a domestic policy be challenged by a foreign power, our national integrity is impeached if we yield to such an influence.

Senators, I can conceive of no question more vitally affecting our national honor and integrity than a question such as is proposed to us now—that a domestic policy inaugurated by the Congress of the United States for the benefit of the American people must first secure the approval of a foreign nation.

As suggested in one of the articles to which I have invited your attention, can you imagine what would happen if our positions were reversed and if we presumed to dictate to a foreign power what its domestic policy should be, and if when the foreign power refused to yield to our dictation we should say, "Well, this is a proper case for an international tribunal"?

As President Cleveland said on an historic occasion, "There is no calamity which a great nation can invite which equals that which follows a supine submission to wrong and injustice and the consequent loss of national self-respect and honor, beneath which are shielded and defended a people's safety and greatness."

It must not be forgotten that you can never have an international tribunal where the representatives of a foreign power are in sympathy with the Monroe doctrine. Foreign powers tolerate the Monroe doctrine, but they do not recognize it as international law.

If Great Britain had expended almost half a billion dollars in a public enterprise affecting the people of that country, what would be her answer if the United States undertook to impose undue restraint upon Great Britain's use of her own property? Nor should the circumstance be overlooked that in this legislation the very thing of which complaint is made is something which Great Britain concededly can do. Yet she would refuse the like privilege to us, notwithstanding the fact that we built the canal and that the people of the United States contributed over $400,000,000 for that purpose.

England and every European country for years have been subsidizing their vessels going through the Suez Canal. It is fair to suppose that England and other European powers will continue to subsidize their vessels going through the Panama Canal in their struggle for the commerce of the world. While there is nothing in the treaty which would prevent England or France or Germany or Spain subsidizing their vessels, Great Britain would impose certain restraints upon us. That, at least, was the attitude of the British Government in the first message which was received in June or July of last year. I understand the British Government has receded somewhat from the position it then took; that in a measure it now recognizes our right to subsidize our vessels and to remit the tolls, but insists that we must collect them in the first instance; and because we refuse to do that, the suggestion is made that England is discriminated against and that we must have an arbitration.

There is no principle better established than that the law never requires the performance of an idle ceremony, because an idle ceremony is a useless and unsubstantial performance. Yet under one view advanced by Great Britain she would insist that we must collect the toll as our vessel passes through, even though we immediately return it.

Of course, the claim was made at first, in the general discussion last July or August, that we could not under any circumstances return any part of the toll, but I believe that Great Britain herself has receded from that position.

I do not intend, Mr. President, in view of the time I devoted to a discussion of this question on a former occasion, to delay the Senate further than to insist that we have passed a wholesome law, a law that will confer lasting benefits upon the people of the United States, and that we would indeed create a painful impression abroad if this mighty Nation should surrender the control of its domestic policies at the suggestion of a foreign power. That we never can do and maintain unimpaired the prestige and the honor and the glory of the Republic.

BURDEN OF MAINTENANCE OF CANAL HEAVILY AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, after over half a century of diplomatic negotiation, of engineering investigation, and of financial negotiation, the Panama Canal is approaching completion, and within a year will be open to the ships of the world. It is estimated that of the tonnage passing through that canal about nine-tenths will be international tonnage, and one-tenth will be domestic tonnage in the coastwise trade. Therefore the immediate benefit of this enormous enterprise, involving an expenditure upon the part of the United States of $400,000,000, will be enjoyed by foreign countries to the extent of nine-tenths and by the United States to the extent of one-tenth.

In the passage of the act relating to the operation and maintenance of this canal Congress, pursuing its traditional policy of maintaining an untrammeled, an unburdened, and an unfettered domestic waterway transportation, and regarding the Panama Canal, in addition to its international use, as a great domestic waterway connecting the waterway systems of the two coasts and enabling free communication by water between them, declared that no tolls should be levied upon ships passing through the canal engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States.

SOURCE OF ENGLAND'S PROTEST.

England, under the inspiration of Canada—that inspiration doubtless quickened by the action of the Transcontinental Canadian Railroad, whose action in turn was quickened by that of American transcontinental railroads—protests against this declaration that no tolls shall be levied upon ships in the coastwise trade as a violation of the rule of equality fixed by solemn treaty between England and the United States.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has contended that this provision is such a violation of the treaty that we are under obligation either to strip the exemption from our statute or to submit the entire matter to international arbitration.

Mr. President, I shall not enter into any contention as to the character of the occupation of the United States on the Isthmus of Panama as to whether it is there as a sovereign in the ownership and control of a strip of territory 50 miles long and 10 miles wide, with all the powers of sovereignty, or whether the United States is simply there as a trustee for mankind, a trustee for civilization, vested with the occupation and control of this strip, and charged with its administration and under such rules as would attach to any trustee holding a public trust.

I am willing for the purpose of argument to admit that the Panama Canal is to be regarded as a great international public utility, bound by the rule which prevails with regard to every public utility in our domestic concerns to render the same service to all at the same price, and that price a reasonable price. But whilst I am prepared to admit this, I shall contend that it is to be regarded also as a domestic waterway, connecting our two coasts, dovetailed with our entire river and waterway system upon two coasts, and thus constituting a connecting link and part of the great waterway system of the United States.

Assuming that this canal in our international relations is to be regarded as an international public utility which the United States is to administer, I shall contend that it is entitled in justice and right to declare that no tolls shall be levied upon its domestic ships, provided that exemption does not increase the burden of foreign ships engaged in international trade.

NO DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FOREIGN SHIPPING.

Mr. President, what are the facts regarding the construction of this canal and its operation? We first have to maintain its operation. That is to be done by the United States as a trustee of civilization. We have then to maintain the canal. We have then to protect the canal apart entirely separate from our sovereign powers. The protection of that canal is essential to civilization itself, and any expense, however great, which we are subjected to in the fortification and protection of that canal is a charge against the commerce of the world and not simply against the United States as a sovereign.

Then, in addition to that, as a public utility we are entitled not only to a return of the cost of operation, of maintenance, and of protection, but to a fair interest upon an enormous investment of $400,000,000, a return which should equal at least 5 per cent and which could without exaction be increased to 7 or 8 per cent, for we have the example of the Suez Canal in the interest which it exacts from the commerce of the world, an interest amounting, I believe, to about 10 per cent upon the amount of the investment.

Assuming, then, Mr. President, that we have the right to exact 5 per cent upon $400,000,000, the commerce of the world, including our domestic commerce, is subjected to a charge in favor of the United States of $20,000,000 for interest alone annually. Add this to the cost of operation, maintenance, and protection, aggregating $10,000,000 annually, and you have a claim of the United States as the administrator of this trust against the commerce of the world amounting to $30,000,000 annually.

Now, how much of that $30,000,000 do we propose under the Panama Canal act to impose upon the commerce of the world? We have provided that the tolls shall not exceed $1.25 per ton, and we have provided for lower rates upon ships in ballast. The assumption is that there will be some 10,000,000 tons annually passing through that canal, at an average of about $1 a ton, or $10,000,000 annually. So the United States, having a just charge against the commerce of the world of $30,000,000 annually, will for a long period of time be able, under this Panama Canal act, to collect only $10,000,000.

Now, how is that apportioned, and how is it distributed among the nations of the world? Assuming that we must treat them all without discrimination, fairly and impartially, we find that, according to the statistics of the tonnage, only one-tenth will be American tonnage and that nine-tenths will be foreign tonnage. So, having a charge against the commerce of the world of $30,000,000, and our proportionate part of that being only one-tenth, or $3,000,000, the proportion chargeable to the rest of the world should be nine-tenths, or $27,000,000; and having that charge against the international commerce of the world, we let it off for $10,000,000. Yet it is claimed that the United States as a Nation is discriminating against the other nations of the world.

But it is said this condition will not last always, that this proportion will not always continue to exist, that the proportion of American tonnage will increase, and that the foreign tonnage will also increase. We hope it will increase, and we propose to do all we can to stimulate that increase. But at the time the canal act was passed this was the condition of things: We were providing for tolls which would impose upon international tonnage, amounting to nine-tenths of the entire tonnage of the canal, only one-third of our legitimate charge for operation, maintenance, protection, and interest.

REASONS FOR FREEING COASTWISE TRAFFIC FROM TOLLS.

Mr. President, why was it that we declared in the act that no tolls should be levied upon ships engaged in our coastwise trade? We did it, first, because we had imposed upon international tonnage very much less than a fair proportionate charge of our cost of operation, maintenance, and interest, and therefore, in justice to domestic commerce, we could exempt American ships. We did it, further, in pursuance of the traditional policy of the United States, which demanded, so far as our domestic waterways are concerned, that our rivers should be improved, our lakes developed, our canals constructed at the expense of the National Treasury, and without imposing a dollar of burden upon the commerce of the country.

Was it to be expected that the United States, having pursued this traditional policy for over a century, should, when it was assuming the position of a benefactor to the commerce of the world, abandon it and substitute for an unfettered and unburdened domestic commerce a fettered and a burdened commerce?

Now, Mr. President, what is the occasion of this difficulty? What has been the difficulty all the way through with reference to the Panama Canal? Our difficulty has always been the opposition of the transcontinental railway carriers of the country, determined, first, to prevent interoceanic communication and then to paralyze it by the burdens imposed upon it. It was for this reason that for years they prevented and delayed the inauguration of the canal enterprise and that, later on, as its completion approached, they sought to induce us to permit ships owned by transcontinental railroads to traverse the canal, knowing very well from past experience that through their ownership of ships subsidized by the profits from the rail traffic they could paralyze water transportation. Then, having failed in that, they were eager to have us impose a burden upon the domestic transportation between the two coasts in the shape of tolls, such burdens as all the other waterway transportation of the country is entirely free from.

Having failed to influence and control our legislation, they then sought their brother carrier to the north in Canada, a transcontinetnal railway running from ocean to ocean and interested with the transcontinental railroads of the United States in monopolizing transportation between the two oceans and in paralyzing the canal. They sought to make that railroad the instrumentality of foreign interference, and through it they appealed to its sovereign country—Great Britain—to protest against this action as a discrimination against foreign commerce in violation of the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. President, I think I have demonstrated that as between nations no disproportionate cost of the maintenance, operation, and interest charge of the Panama Canal has by the act been imposed upon the foreign shipping, but, on the contrary, having the right to impose upon it $27,000,000 annually we imposed upon it only $10,000,000 annually, and that we have an interest charge against the enterprise of $20,000,000 annually, which for years will remain unpaid.

FOREIGN NATIONS CAN NOT OBJECT TO THIS EXEMPTION.

Will it be contended for a moment that having that charge upon this enterprise we can not relieve domestic ships of their tolls and credit those tolls upon the interest due to the enterprise? And if we credit the tolls which are remitted to the interest upon the enterprise do we not to that extent relieve the burdens of foreign international commerce?

All that foreign nations have the right to insist upon is not that we should allow them to control our domestic policy, but that in carrying out the domestic policy which involves levying no tolls upon domestic ships we should see to it that the tolls remitted are not imposed as an additional charge upon the ships of foreign nations. That is all the right which they have either in morals or under treaty obligations.

It is true that when we passed the act we did not expressly provide, in declaring that no tolls should be levied upon American ships, that those tolls should be entered as a credit upon the interest charge of the Nation against the enterprise, but doubtless Congress had it in mind. Throughout the debate you will find the thought running current that the United States was being put to an enormous annual operating and interest expense in this enterprise, chargeable against the world and from which the world was to be largely relieved, and therefore we had a right, so far as the unpaid portion of the interest expense was concerned, to offset the tolls chargeable against domestic tonnage and to enter them as a credit upon our books against the interest charge.

Now, what is the principle of a public utility, assuming that that principle is to control here?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Senator from Nevada to be taking the position that in fixing rates upon the canal we should estimate the amount of probable commerce and fix a rate that would yield to the United States a given interest upon its investment? Does the Senator think that that would be the proper standard?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think we have a right to demand that, Mr. President. I think we have a right to demand the application of a principle that applies to every public utility, and that is that the administrator of a public utility should receive not only the expenses of operation, maintenance, and protection, but a fair interest charge upon the investment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can not the Senator see that that same condition might impose a rate that would paralyze the commerce of the country, so far as the use of this waterway is concerned?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That might be the effect if you fixed the rate so high that commerce would not pay it.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. There is no danger of paralyzing the activities of the canal by the mere circumstance that a rate is fixed based upon the cost of construction and cost of maintenance; but it is well to bear in mind that the Panama Canal will always be in competition with the Suez Canal, and, irrespective of the question as to what amount might compensate the United States, the United States must always fix a charge which will permit the Panama Canal to compete with the Suez Canal for a large part of the business that may well flow through the Panama Canal.

Mr. SIMMONS. That being so, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me, might that very condition not make it impossible for us to fix a rate based upon a given income from the commerce through that canal?

Mr. O'GORMAN. In my judgment it would be impossible to fix a rate upon that basis, and the rate already indicated by the President was fixed with reference to the rate now charged in the Suez Canal. In passing, I might say, from such knowledge as I have acquired through the Interoceanic Canal Committee hearings and conferences, that there will not come a time in this generation when the United States will receive from the shipping of the world 2 per cent on the money it has expended in the construction and maintenance of that canal.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And therefore has a greater right——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator yield to me further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. After I close my sentence. It has a much greater right to relieve its domestic ships of these tolls provided they are credited upon the interest charge of the Nation. I prefer, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, not to yield further, as I wish to close my remarks.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF THE ACT.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say, in explanation of what I have already said in reply to these interruptions, that the United States has the undoubted right to charge against the commerce of the world the operation, maintenance, and interest charges, aggregating $30,000,000. Whether it can collect that amount from the present commerce is another question. That involves the exercise of discretion by the United States as to the toll which will yield the largest revenue, but it is fair to assume that in time, even at existing tolls, the tonnage of the Panama Canal will advance from its now anticipated tonnage of about 10,000,000 tons annually to 30,000,000. Then existing tolls will furnish a revenue sufficient to pay for operation, maintenance, and interest charges at the rate of 5 per cent, and then, and then only, will the nations of the world have the right to insist that when we have secured a fair rate of interest upon our investment further increases in the tonnage of the canal shall tend toward a reduction in rates rather than an increase in income, applying the ordinary rules controlling public utilities to this matter; but until that point is reached they will have no right to contend that the present tolls are unreasonble or oppressive. If in making these computations we credit the tolls chargeable against American ships to the interest charge of the United States, in the end the commerce of the world is unburthened by the fact that we have refused to levy these tolls upon American ships, but, on the contrary, have credited those tolls as a part payment of the interest with which the enterprise is chargeable.

It would be very simple to arrange this. If it is necessary to give an assurance to the world that we intend to act fairly and justly, as I contend we have acted fairly and justly, all that we have to do is to provide in this very statute by amendment that there shall be a Panama Canal fund dedicated to the payment of the expenses of operation, maintenance, and the interest charges of the United States; that into that fund all tolls collected from foreign ships shall go; and that there shall be credited in that fund against the interest charge of the Nation the tolls properly assignable to American ships in order to do equal and exact justice to the entire world.

RELATION OF THE CANAL TO OUR DOMESTIC WATERWAYS.

Mr. President, the maintenance of our domestic waterway system is of the highest importance. We have expended over $600,000,000 in the development of the rivers of our country, and as yet we have not navigable rivers. We have met in this work always the opposition of the railway carriers, who have been content that we should expend public moneys upon these rivers, provided they are spent in such a way as not to promote navigation. We have been expending these moneys without a proper system, without regarding each river as a unit with all its tributaries and sources, and controlling and regulating the flow of that river from source to mouth as an instrumentality of transportation, holding back the floods, preventing them from pursuing a destructive course below, and putting them to a beneficent use above, by spreading the flood waters over the arid plains, by storing them artificially for the development of water power, and by constructing by-passes in such a way as that when the floods come below they can be distributed and take their way to the Gulf or to the ocean without destroying vast areas of cultivable land within their reach. This policy, which would regard the river from source to mouth as a unit, which would secure several beneficial uses of the waters of the river, instead of simply one beneficial use in navigation, and which would make the river itself, with its connections in coordination with the railways, with transfer facilities and sites, and proper legislation, an effective instrumentality of commerce—this policy we will have to pursue. It is the great problem of the future; it involves every river in the country. No stream tributary to a navigable river can be regarded as inconsequential under this plan. If we will only pursue this system, we shall have, in addition to the splendid development of our railway carriers, a development of domestic waterway carriers, and we shall have them both coordinated with ocean carriers that will carry our commerce to the remotest ends of the world. It is this magnificent system that Germany has pursued, equally and cooperatively developing river transportation railway transportation, and ocean transportation, that is rapidly making her the mistress of the commerce of the world. Shall we discourage that policy, the policy which means an unfettered, unburdened domestic waterway transportation? Shall we, simply because the Canadian transcontinental railway has united with the American transcontinental railways to secure foreign intervention in order to secure them a monopoly of the transportation of the country and in order to enable them to paralyze the Panama Canal as an instrumentality of commerce, shall we meekly yield to this demand—this demand not based upon justice or equity—that we should abandon our traditional domestic policy of a free and unfettered domestic commerce? Will we not discharge every obligation to the nations of the world and will we not further increase their obligations to us by declaring that all the tolls remitted to domestic ships shall be credited upon the interest charge of the United States against the nations of the world for the construction and conduct of this gigantic enterprise?

WE HAVE SHOWN A JUST AND GENEROUS SPIRIT.

Mr. President, I contend that the whole history of this transaction furnishes convincing proof, not of the desire of this Nation to oppressively burthen international tonnage passing through the canal, but of a just and generous spirit—a spirit which recognizes our obligations as an international trustee without contention for domestic advantage. No unjust burthen has been placed by its action upon foreign nations. On the contrary, our Nation is to-day bearing, and will for many years continue to bear, a disproportionate part of the burthen of this great international enterprise. Having only one-tenth of the tonnage carried through the canal, it will for a long time bear at least two-thirds of the charges for operation, maintenance, and interest, and against this charge it will receive only a paltry credit of the tolls which it might, if it saw fit, impose upon domestic ships engaged in the coastwise trade, but which, in pursuance of a traditional policy of unrestricted domestic waterways, it proposes to remit. Such remittance imposes no inequality or injustice upon foreign nations. Such nations can easily pay into the canal fund the tolls imposed upon their ships, if they see fit, and those tolls will be righteously adjusted whether they be paid by the ships themselves or by the nations whose flags they bear.

The credit of the tolls of domestic ships upon the interest charge of the United States against the world is the payment of such tolls, and to hold the contrary is to indulge in a refinement of reasoning unworthy of a logician.

ARBITRATION OF AMERICAN QUESTION BY EUROPEAN TRIBUNALS.

There is no necessity for arbitration. If the purpose of the United States is not clear from the reading of the statute and the records of contemporaneous history are necessary to interpret it, let us amend the statute, not by striking out the provision declaring that no tolls shall be levied upon ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States, but by adding thereto the simple statement that an account of the tonnage of such ships shall be kept and that the tolls assignable to such tonnage shall be credited upon the interest charges of the United States against the enterprise. If, after this has been done, England still persists in her contention for arbitration, which I do not anticipate, an agitation may arise for the termination of all such treaties, for Americans are beginning to realize that the problems which are to come up for determination under them are not the problems of Europe, of Asia, or of Africa, but the purely domestic problems of the American Continent, which are to be determined in large degree by European juries.

Confident of the justice of our position, let us adhere to our time-honored policy of an unburthened domestic commerce, at the same time seeing to it that an accurate account be kept of our domestic tonnage through the canal and that a proportionate charge on this account be credited upon our interest charge against the canal enterprise. Thus, no disproportionate charge will be made against international tonnage and the burthens of the canal will be fairly distributed among the nations using it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, my former vote on the question of tolls on the Panama Canal was the result of my conscientious and deliberate judgment. Notwithstanding the splendid argument of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], I am frank to say that I am still unconvinced of any wrong or injustice in my position.

Mr. President, I feel that the Senator from New York was most unfortunate in that part of his remarks where he referred, at least by innuendo, to those who opposed his proposition as "playing to the galleries." No, Mr. President; higher motives prompted my vote on this question. I yield to no man in love and admiration for the lofty sentiments expressed by the Senator from New York. This, however, is not a question of the peace of the world nor of the honor of the American Nation, but it is a question of right and justice to the American people.

The Senator from New York asks, "Are we Pharisees?" No; we are not Pharisees nor hypocrites, but a brave and honorable people demanding our rights. It seems to me that it comes with ill grace for Great Britain even to suggest bad faith on our part, when her whole history has been that of greed and avarice in dealing with the nations of the earth. Read, Mr. President, the story of Great Britain's occupancy of India and of Egypt, and you find it is one long story of commercialism for England, right or wrong.

The Senator calls for arbitration. History tells us that Great Britain's policy has been to arbitrate only with nations stronger than herself. How well I recall a few years ago when that Spartan band, the Boers, in their heroic contest for liberty, prayed and pleaded for arbitration. Humanity the world over joined in that plea; but the ear of Great Britain was deaf to all supplications. Shall we arbitrate this question of our right to regulate the canal we have built and paid for? No; never.

Mr. President, the whole question, I feel, is summed up in this editorial from the London Times of recent date:

> If this bill becomes a law it will prove a little short of disastrous to British shipowners. With their best brains and energy devoted to their work, the United States will now proceed to turn out vessels on a wholesale scale, and, aided by their freedom from Panama Canal tolls, there is little to prevent them from entering with success all those trades in which British shipowners are now the principal carriers.

As I said heretofore when this question was before this body for consideration, I now repeat that I favor free tolls for American craft, both ocean and coastwise, and desire that the tolls for all other vessels of the world be only sufficient to maintain the physical condition of the canal, and that the cost and interest thereon shall be America's contribution to the world. I believe that such a policy on the part of this Government with reference to the Panama Canal would rehabilitate our merchant marine, and that in a few years we would command the carrying trade of this hemisphere.

Mr. President, I stand by my former vote on this question, and will vote "no" on the proposition to rescind our former action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our King and our Father, from whom cometh life and all its attendant blessings, cleanse our hearts from guile; pour down upon us Thy spiritual gifts that we may control our passions and direct our thoughts in conformity to our highest conceptions of right and truth and justice, touching all the complicated problems of life, that we may quit ourselves as God-fearing men, now and always, in the spirit of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Pensions from further consideration of the bill H. R. 14053, disagree to the Senate amendments thereto, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is it in order to call up this conference report on Calendar Wednesday except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not make his request at this time.

Mr. DYER. Very well, Mr. Speaker, but I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow morning.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5678. An act to ratify an agreement with the Weeminuche (or Wiminuche), and hereafter referred to as the Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, for the relinquishment to the United States of their rights to occupancy of the tract of land known as the Mesa Verde;

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution to appoint George Gray a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; and

S. J. Res. 157. Joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 4, 1913.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4355) incorporating the National Institute of Arts and Letters and the bill (S. 4356) incorporating the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 17260) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 369. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to give certain old Government documents to the Old Newbury Historical Society, of Newburyport, Mass.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 19115. An act making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, asked a conference with the House of Representatives on said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BRYAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5674) for the relief of Indians occupying railroad lands, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. ASHURST as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5678. An act to ratify an agreement with the Weeminuche (or Wiminuche) and hereafter referred to as the Wiminuche Band of Southern Ute Indians in Colorado for the relinquishment to the United States of their rights to occupancy of the tract of land known as the Mesa Verde; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution to appoint George Gray a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; to the Committee on the Library.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds with the regular order of business to-day I wish to state that we have discovered a mistake in the enrollment of the Indian appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent to have read from the Clerk's desk an order, and to have the same adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That a message be sent to the Senate notifying that body that an error has been made in the engrossment of the bill H. R. 26874, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved January 9, 1913, as sent from this House to the Senate, which error consists in incorporating in said engrossed bill a section thereof on page 24, lines 7 to 15, inclusive, as follows:

"The sum of $300,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations in Oklahoma during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood."

Said section having been stricken from the original bill by this House previous to the passage of the bill; and that the Senate be requested to permit the Clerk to correct said error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman that where the word "section" occurs in the order just read it should read "paragraph."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think that is correct.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to adopt the order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; and then I shall ask that the order be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to adopting the order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the statement ought to be made to the House, so that it may go into the RECORD, that that error is in no way whatever the fault of the engrossing clerk.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to adopting the order?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire how the error happened to be made?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois to this paragraph. That point of order was sustained by the Chair. In some way, I do not know how, notwithstanding that, the paragraph crept into the bill, and we find it now in the bill as it went to the Senate. We desire to correct that error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to making this order? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The unfinished business is the Lincoln Memorial report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair is mistaken in that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is mistaken about that; it is the bill (H. R. 18505) to incorporate the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on the Library to ask the withdrawal from present consideration of the bill H. R. 18505.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent——

Mr. SLAYDEN. No, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Well, what does the gentleman ask, then?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am directed to withdraw it, and I will, with the permission of the Chair, read from Hinds' Precedents as to the authority for doing so.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about the gentleman having the right to withdraw it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thought there was a question. No; I made no request for unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the bill, and the call is on the Committee on Arid Lands, and the unfinished business is——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, that is by unanimous consent this bill was to be considered now. The call is not on the Committee on Arid Lands, as I understand it. That is the unfinished business by unanimous consent to come up after other unfinished business was disposed of which precedes it.

The SPEAKER. The situation as the Chair remembers it is this: After the House had begun the consideration of that bill the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] arose and asked that that committee be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. That the bill under consideration be passed over for one week.

The SPEAKER. That the bill under consideration be passed until this Wednesday in the absence of the other gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who had been detained by illness. Then the following parliamentary dialogue took place:

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. My request is, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit, that this bill go over without prejudice and be called up on next Wednesday, just as it is called up to-day, as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hold that if the request is granted, if the House starts on another bill to-day and it is not finished, that the latter bill would have the right of way.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In the instance the Chair now states, is it correct that, on the disposition of that business, although it might take all of to-day and take both matters over to the following Wednesday, this matter would lose its place?

The SPEAKER. Of course, it is purely arbitrary. But in the judgment of the Chair this bill would follow whatever was unfinished.

That is, it would give the Committee on the Library the right to go on and finish that bill and then when that was finished this irrigation bill would come up.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will call the committees.

Evidently under that arrangement the gentleman from Colorado has the right of way with that bill. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 23669, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

RECLAMATION TOWN-SITE FUNDS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23669) providing for the disposition of town sites in connection with reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this bill has reference to the establishment of town sites upon the various Government reclamation projects throughout the Western States. There are some 32 reclamation projects at the present time, and there are something like 30 town sites reserved and designated by the Government of the United States as towns for municipalities upon those various reclamation projects. This bill provides for the aiding in the construction and building up of those various towns. It has been a matter that has been thrashed out by the Department of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, and by the citizens of the Western States for several years.

This measure is not in all respects, probably, an ideal measure, but, nevertheless, it is as near perfect as the Committee on Irrigation, the Department of the Interior, and the people affected could agree upon. Some gentlemen, members of the committee, have objections to it both as to its principle and as to its form, as I understand, but I may say that the majority of the committee, after considering the matter very exhaustively, have determined that this is the best that they can agree upon at the present time, and that if the Congress sees fit to enact this measure it will very greatly accelerate the building up of these municipalities and making them a credit to the reclamation project as well as a benefit to the inhabitants and to the surrounding country. I realize that the matter has been exhaustively considered in the debate on the 8th, in which I did not participate, not having been present, and possibly many of you are thoroughly familiar with it. I am not going into an exhaustive discussion of the measure at this time, but will reserve the balance of my time, and probably take up some further consideration of it later on, or yield to other members of the committee and others who desire to discuss it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] a question. On page 3, commencing with line 17, I would like to have the gentleman's opinion of that provision, which is as follows:

> That in no case shall the operation and maintenance of such building and works by or under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior be continued for a longer period than two years after the organization of a municipal corporation or school district as aforesaid.

Does not the gentleman think that it would be wise to place the provision in the bill as to when the municipal organization should be made? As the bill now stands the matter might be continued for an indefinite period, and during this indefinite period the Government would be conducting the municipality of that town, or school, or whatever the organization might be. Would not that be an inducement to defer organization and leave the responsibility with the National Government to conduct it? Under this provision it has ample power to do so, and it would therefore be a very strong inducement to the people of that locality or municipality not to perfect an organization, so they can take upon themselves the responsibility of government, or shift it from the National Government to the locality. And in that respect, is not this a very dangerous measure and is it not entering upon an untried and a very dangerous and questionable policy?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, the Government of the United States would only be expending one-half of the money that these people themselves have paid into the fund for this purpose, and it seems to me inconceivable that the inhabitants of a town would want to remain unorganized indefinitely merely for the sake of having the Government of the United States expend one-half of the proceeds of the sales of lots.

In reality I apprehend that one-half might be exhausted, and unless there was a continuation of the sales of lots it would seem to me that it would be impracticable. I do not see how that could follow. It is one of the traits of the American people to want to govern themselves, and I have never heard of a municipality or an organization of people that wanted indefinitely to be governed by Federal agents, but, sooner or later, they want to organize and elect their own mayor and boards of trustees, and their own organization, have their own municipal government, and the only reason that these buildings and works and everything should be turned over at once upon the organization was because the Government might be in process of constructing a system of sewers, or of electric light plants, or something of that kind, and it would be impracticable to just stop the work in the middle of the construction and turn it over. I want to say generally, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CULLOP. That is exactly the vice of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to say that this measure, while I do not consider it personally, is nevertheless deemed by those who have had practical observation and experience on the ground to be the nearest workable of anything that they can devise. I may say that this measure has been prepared in this form by people who have had personal observation of these projects and by the Secretary of the Interior and the Reclamation Service, and it would seem to me that their judgment and their experience and their knowledge ought to be considered of some weight in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but the taxpayers of such a locality might find that it would be very much to their financial benefit if the National Government would operate their town, government, or school district government instead of themselves, and I want to call the gentleman's attention now to section 3 upon that subject, which is as follows:

> That all income received from the operation of any such buildings or works, while they are under control of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid into and become a part of the reclamation town-site fund.

Now, by that provision the Secretary of the Interior is given the right to operate the municipal government two or three thousand miles away; and might not such an arrangement be made by citizens of these towns as that they would find it to their financial benefit, in the management of their municipal affairs, to have the Secretary of the Interior, two or three thousand miles away, manage and control their domestic municipal affairs? That seems to me to be clearly a vice in this measure, and one that might lead to very great abuses. In other words, it is the Government entering on a policy of building towns away off from the seat of government, away off from the management. It is to be done at a long distance, and anyone, I think, will concede that that is a very inconvenient process of building up cities and towns. It is proposed thus to operate waterworks, schools, sewerage, and other things necessary to the building up of a modern city.

Now, it may leave it in the hands of men so far distant from the seat of government as that they would lend themselves to imposing these abuses upon the people of such localities. It seems to me that the measure as it now stands, if passed, would become the subject of very great abuses, and burdens could be imposed, and this character of government could be continued for an indefinite period upon the people who are entitled to local self-government. It is long-range government, and it is a dangerous policy.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], not being entirely familiar with the situation—and of course it is impossible that he should be familiar with it—does not clearly understand what is proposed. The Government now takes absolutely raw land which otherwise would be homesteaded, land for which the Government would get nothing—the homesteader would acquire it—and makes a town site of that land; and, as matters now stand, the sums received from the sale of the town lots go as a credit to the reclamation project, and whatever sum is received decreases by that amount the charge against the farmers on the project. No part of these funds remains in the Treasury of the United States now.

Now, this has developed, that the distribution of that fund among the people on a great project is no great relief to them, and the people living in the town are left, under past policy, without source of income with which to improve the town, for the Government sells only a few lots at a time, leaving the major portion of the town site untaxed and untaxable. You have, then, this situation: One hundred and sixty or three hundred and twenty acres in a town site not taxable. Perhaps 10 acres of that tract are sold and taxable. Consequently the sources of income for the improvement of the town is very limited. The town is raw prairie land. Streets are needed; sidewalks, curbing, bridges, and schoolhouses are needed—all of the things necessary to start a town site on the road to growth and development.

Now, as to the receipts heretofore accrued: They run from $5,000 to $20,000 in the different town sites. The Secretary of the Interior is to make the improvements. As to the receipts that will hereafter accrue if the community is organized into a municipality—and all these communities are—when the sales take place half of the proceeds would be placed in the hands of the municipality, to be expended by it for municipal improvements.

The fact is that the half of the receipts of the sale of town lots that the people of the town receive for the improvement of the town will not, in the majority of cases, exceed what the community would receive in the way of taxes if these were ordinary privately owned town sites, because in that case the entire town site would be subject to taxation. The people would do as people ordinarily do in cases of that kind—assess the unsold lots at a pretty high rate and secure from the unsold lots as well as from those that are sold sufficient sums to care for the community—to provide schools, a town hall, and graded streets, and to make those other improvements that are imperatively necessary.

Now it has been suggested that this is taking money out of the Treasury. That is not so at all. These funds go into the fund for the benefit of the project as it is, and this in no way changes the policy as to the sale of the lots. It leaves the whole matter with the Secretary of the Interior. The only change made is to give the town community itself half of the sums received from the sale of the lots. It is an ideal arrangement. It is the arrangement that we would all say was ideal, if it could be generally practiced in town sites.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Is there any provision in the law for the return to the reclamation fund of any part of the cost of these improvements?

Mr. MONDELL. No. The gentleman understands that a reclamation project is built out of the general reclamation fund.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Yes; but the entryman under the reclamation project buys under an appraisal which takes into consideration the expenses of the reclamation project.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. In other words, the entryman on a reclamation project pays nothing for the land. The Government receives nothing whatever for the land.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. But he pays all the charges before he gets a patent.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I will show him that the same thing follows in this case. The entryman pays nothing for the land. The Government receives nothing for any of the land in any reclamation project in any case. The entryman simply pays for the cost of reclamation. So does the town site, because one of the charges assessed against the town site in the sale of the land is the water-right charge for the tract, so that the tract pays the water-right charge per acre, just as if a farmer had taken it, and the net proceeds of the sale of lots are the proceeds over and above the charges against the land, which are the same in this case as they are in the case of a farm. So that, so far as the Government is concerned, it receives just as much from these town-site tracts and no more than it receives for the other land, to wit, the cost of reclamation.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I understood the gentleman to say that no money was received by the Government from the sale of these lots. Is that correct?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; I did not say that. The inquiry was if, instead of these lands being embraced within a town site, they had been homesteaded like the lands around them, would the Government receive anything for the lands? Not at all; not a cent. The Government gives the land free to the homesteader. The homesteader pays simply the cost of reclamation, and following that theory the Government has never expected to receive anything from these town sites except the cost of the reclamation of the town sites—the same amount per acre that is paid for the land all around the town site—because the water furnished is the same and the cost is the same.

Mr. CULLOP. Does not the Government put up these lots and sell them?

Mr. MONDELL. When the Government builds a reclamation project it makes an estimate of what the project will cost. It makes no estimate of the land at all, but an estimate of what the project will cost. If a project costs $1,000,000, the price per acre that the settler pays is a sum which, divided among all the acres, will bring in that $1,000,000.

Mr. CULLOP. The very first section of this bill provides:

> That one-half the net proceeds heretofore or hereafter received from the sale of town lots in reclamation town sites are hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the reclamation town-site fund, to be used in the construction, maintenance, and operation of schoolhouses, water, light, and sewer systems, and other school and municipal improvements in the towns where lots have been or shall be sold as aforesaid in proportion to the amounts received from each of the said towns, respectively.

Now, does not the Government sell these lots?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. It derives money from the sale of them, does it not?

Mr. MONDELL. It derives no money from the sale of them that goes into the Treasury.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, why is this language in this bill, that one-half of the amount received from the sale of these lots shall be set aside in the Treasury for these improvements?

Mr. MONDELL. Under the present law, as I tried to explain a moment ago, the proceeds from the sale of these lots go into the reclamation fund as a credit to the project. For illustration, the Shoshone project in my State contains 100,000 acres, in round numbers, and there is one town site on it.

If that town site should ultimately bring $100,000, the settlers would pay the cost of that great project—over 30 miles in length—less $100,000. In other words, the theory of the law is that the Government is not to make money on these town sites, but the people whose settlements and improvements make the town shall have the benefit of it, and all we do by this statute is to divide the fund between the people of the project generally, many of whom live so far away from the given town that they do not contribute anything to its growth and development, and the people of the town. In doing that, of course, it is necessary to provide as a matter of bookkeeping for a fund. That is simply a designation.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman talks about the right of the people who buy the town site to have half of the money they paid contributed back to them. I will ask the gentleman if when the people buy the lots they do not get the worth of their money in the value of the lots? Does it not come down to the proposition of the Government investing the money back for speculative purposes on the enhanced value of the lots?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all. In the first place, the Government never has a penny of investment in the town. It never has any money in it. Gentlemen will remember that such towns are largely a school center for the entire surrounding country; that the people in the surrounding country can not be taxed for at least seven or eight years while these lands are held as homesteads, and the responsibility devolves largely upon the town to furnish school facilities for the people around and about.

Referring again to the little town of Powell, they have a central school organization and send wagons out and bring the scholars in from the surrounding country. Surely it is not fair to ask a community to do all that and not give them any of the increment of the values they themselves have largely created.

The sums are not great; they are small; they are coming in slowly, and together with the taxes raised in the ordinary way, they will enable the town to provide the things necessary for its growth and development.

It has been suggested that the Government ought to adopt a different policy in regard to town sites, in this, that instead of selling a few lots in the town, the Government ought in the first instance to advertise for sale and sell to the highest bidder, for whatever price they could get, all of the town sites. Whether that would be wise or not, that situation is not affected by this bill in any way, because we do not in any way seek to modify the law giving to the Secretary of the Interior full control of the sale of lots. Personally I do not think that would be wise, because it would result that when all of a town site is all open for sale the entire tract would bring but a song, and the result would be a town of considerable area with no fixed center about which to begin development, and in that case the increase of values would go to speculators and the people of the town would secure no benefits.

I think the plan now followed by the Secretary, which plan is in nowise affected one way or the other by this bill, is a wise one, to wit, to select a proper place on town site for the building up of a business center and surrounding it with a residence section, selling only such area of lots for which there is a real demand, and by reason of this sale of restricted area securing very good prices. In the town of Newell they sold small lots, 50 by 150 feet, I think, for something like $2,000. Those lots brought those prices because they were Government town sites, with a restricted area for sale, and selling the restricted area, it held the town compactly, and then, as there is real demand, additional lots are offered as they are needed and as they will bring fair prices. I am sure the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] will not disagree with me in the proposition that if we can secure a condition whereby the people who create values shall themselves have the benefit of those values, we should do it, and not give the values made by the people of the community to some speculators who may buy lots to hold them for future sales.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am speaking in the time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. CALLAWAY. It has been suggested by the gentleman that the Secretary of the Interior should select the proper place for the center of the town, and then put 2 per cent of the lots on the market, although he is located here in Washington some thousand of miles away from the town.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that on these reclamation projects——

Mr. CALLAWAY. It occurs to me——

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I wish the gentleman would permit me to finish.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understand what these reclamation projects are.

Mr. MONDELL. They have a great enterprise. They have upon them, first, a project engineer, who is an educated man, a man of standing, a man who can command and does command a high salary, and would command a very much larger one if he were in private practice. Then there is the project manager, also a man of standing and reputation, and the other employees, and they are all on these projects. They are men of standing and reputation and judgment. Some one must decide the matter, and I am rather inclined to think that with the knowledge of where the canals are to be built, where the roads are to be built, where the centers of population are to be, they are as good judges as we can get of where the center of the town ought to be, provided, of course, that the Government is to do the job at all.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Is not one of the complaints by gentlemen appearing before the committee on this bill that the town site of Newell is laid out so poorly as to location and elevation that all of the surrounding towns, even 5 miles away, are prospering because the land is in private ownership, and the town of Newell, because of its location, can not prosper? That is the testimony of gentlemen appearing before the Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. MONDELL. Very true; and why? Because Congress has refused to be as enlightened as the private owners of town sites are on the one hand, and on the other hand Congress has refused to give the people themselves the opportunities they have to tax the private owners of the private town sites. The gentleman, coming as he does from a new and growing country, and living many years in that growing country, as I have, knows that ordinarily the taxes that the owners of speculative town sites have to pay are a plenty. I do not say that they have always been as wise as Solomon in deciding how many lots should be sold at a time, and in the case of the town site in my own State, the people have thought they were not selling rapidly enough; but the general policy is a sound one, and that is to open only such area as is needed, by so doing securing quite a considerable sum from the sale, providing that when we secure those sums we give them to the people who really make those values—the settlers and the men in the towns.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], the best-natured man in the world, will give me the time.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that under the condition now existing and always will exist under a new project that the farmer the gentleman speaks of, who is building up that country, will not buy a town lot, because he can not live in the town if he wants to do so? He must remain and reside upon his farm and improve that farm, so therefore the town lots revert and go to those who are dealing in speculation, to those who are running stores and hotels. That is just to show that the farmer does not assist in building up the town lots, as far as he is concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course what the gentleman says is partly true; but I do not see what application it has to the case in hand.

Mr. RAKER. Simply to show that the gentleman said the settler was the man who is getting the benefits from these town lots and——

Mr. MONDELL. Well, if there is anything in the gentleman's statement at all that contains an argument, it is an argument in favor of this bill. His suggestion that the farmer does not buy town lots, and therefore the farmer is not helping to build up the town—following logically to a conclusion the gentleman's premises, the farmer should not have all the benefit which he now has, but we should divide the benefit between the man who purchases the lot and lives in the town and builds the schoolhouses and builds the city halls and improves the streets—divide that with the farmer. I think it is a well-nigh ideal arrangement.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LEWIS. In the minority report it is stated that the proceeds from the sale of these lots under the present law go for the purpose of irrigation. Is that correct?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, in a way that is correct; but the minority might have been—I will not say more frank, but a little more lucid.

Mr. FRENCH. Each project is a unit.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentlemen will permit, the reclamation town-site law recognizes the town site as an asset to the project. I will refer again, if I may, to the project in my State, which is over 35 miles in length. There were several towns in the vicinity of the project, but in the center of it one reclamation town site was considered necessary. Now, the law provides that money received from the sale of town lots shall go into the reclamation fund. To use an illustration I have used often, if an entire project costs a million dollars to the settlers who had to pay for it, as they do, and the town site brought $100,000 out of the land, then the amount they must ultimately pay would be $900,000. The Government does not receive the return; the return goes to the farmer, as it ought to do. Now, we are simply proposing to make it a credit to the farmer and the town people, and the increased value will help both.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so if the gentleman from Colorado will yield more time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say I have promised a number of gentlemen time, and we will take this up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he can tell us any better purpose to which the Government might apply the money from the proceeds of these lots than to irrigation and improve the farming in this country?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not think of any better purpose than the purpose contemplated by the original law as amended by this bill.

Mr. LEWIS. But the gentleman desires to divert it to schoolhouses and sewers and light plants and other projects.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure the gentleman from Maryland, the fairest of men, would not say that the Government should take a piece of valueless land, which it is willing to give to the homesteader for nothing, and make a town site of it and sell a few lots at a time, secure a large amount of money for it, and have that go into the Treasury. Congress never contemplated that and never ought to.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. It followed that policy, and it gave the returns to the farmers as a credit overlooking—and if I had the time I would explain that that was not an oversight; that the original town-site bill contained just such a provision as this, except there were a lot of other matters in connection with it—overlooking the fact that these towns were raw and unimproved; that there is no taxable property within them except the personal property of the people and a small number of lots sold that can be assessed.

The balance the Government retains untaxable, and therefore there is no source of income for the development of the town. If the town belonged to a private individual, that private individual could be taxed during the running of the years until he sold his lots; and those taxes, you may depend upon it, would be high, and through that source an income would be received. We propose the better plan of giving to the people the benefit of those values which they create.

Mr. CANDLER. Why is not the real estate subject to taxation?

Mr. MONDELL. It is Government land, and no Government land is subject to taxation.

Mr. CANDLER. Is there no private ownership?

Mr. MONDELL. The Government only sells a small part of the town site at a time, leaving the balance during the years the town is developing entirely free from taxation.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

RECLAMATION TOWN-SITE FUNDS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing this bill for about three days, and it seems to me we have devoted a great deal of time to a very minor matter. According to the figures furnished by the Reclamation Service, there has been received up to December 31, 1911, a total of $219,793 from the sale of town lots in 10 different reclamation town sites. This bill proposes to set aside one-half of the money received from the sale of these lots and one-half of the money received at all future sales into a town-site fund for improvements in the various reclamation town sites. If this bill passes, about $110,000 will be divided among 10 towns giving, on the average, about $11,000 to each town for such improvements as street grading, waterworks, or schoolhouses.

There was contained in the reclamation fund, according to the tenth annual report of the director, on June 30, 1910, $65,525,446, and he made an estimate that there would be $71,590,572 in the fund on December 31, 1912. So that compared with the total amount of the reclamation fund this town-site money is a very small matter. Now, if the reclamation fund increases in the next 10 years as it has in the last 10, there will probably be twice the present amount, or $140,000,000, on hand, and if new town sites are created in the same ratio there will be about $250,000 in the town-site fund.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman claim that there is $60,000,000 available now in the reclamation fund?

Mr. HAYDEN. The receipts from the sale of public lands, which create the reclamation fund, amounted to $65,525,446.88 on the 30th day of June, 1910.

Mr. RAKER. How much has been expended of that amount? Has not there been in the neighborhood of $55,000,000 expended?

Mr. HAYDEN. About $60,000,000.

Mr. RAKER. And it leaves only a few millions in that fund now?

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand, but I am considering the whole fund.

Mr. RAKER. If they are handling so much money, why do they want to take a part of it and build up a beautiful town on paper, instead of letting the people build up their own town, as they ought to?

Mr. HAYDEN. The argument has been made in the course of this debate that this bill will establish a new system and a bad precedent if we provide funds for the improvement of town sites. I want to read from a bill that passed this House less than two weeks ago, namely, "An act to provide for the opening of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in North and South Dakota." I shall read from this act, and I shall say, further, that every act passed by this House in the last five or six years providing for the opening of an Indian reservation contains practically the same language:

> The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reserve from said lands such tracts for town-site purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause same to be surveyed into lots and blocks and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any one town site, and patents shall be issued to the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other public purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes. The purchase price of all town lots sold in town sites, as hereinafter provided, shall be paid at such time and in such installments as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.

Listen to this language:

> He shall cause not more than 20 per cent of the net proceeds arising from such sales to be set apart and expended under his direction in the construction of schoolhouses and other public buildings, or in improvements within the town sites wherein such lots are located.

This bill was passed not more than two weeks ago. Almost the same language is contained in the act opening the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, which passed on May 6, 1910. Another act opening the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, passed on May 27, 1910, contains the same language. The bill opening the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota, and the acts providing for the settlement of the Fort Berthold and the Cheyenne Reservations all contain the same provisions. I could cite you half a dozen other instances showing that it is not a new thing to set aside a part of the proceeds derived from the sale of lots in town sites for public purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. I should like to have three minutes more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Reclamation Service is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior just as is the Indian service. There has been no complaint about the improvements made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in town sites when the Indian reservations are opened, and there will be no cause for complaint if this bill passes. The theory is that the money spent for improvements will cause a higher price to be paid for the lots when sold at auction, so that this advance of 20 per cent results in a net profit to the Indians. In the case of the reclamation town sites you would not be authorizing anything but what the department had been accustomed to do in connection with the Indian service.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arizona yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that it is not the buildings that make these lands valuable, but the farming country that is developed in the neighborhood, that gives the town trade, which makes the land valuable? Here you propose to take value from the people who imparted the value to the town lots—the farmers and the people under the reclamation project as a whole, people who are creating something instead of being merely traders; you are taking value away from them and from the fund that belongs to them and putting it into a municipality to beautify the town for the benefit of the people who have settled there, not for the purpose of helping the project, but for the purpose of filling their own pockets.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me answer the gentleman by asking him a question. Would he not pay more for a lot in a town site where the streets were graded and a domestic water supply had been provided or an electric light plant installed and schoolhouses built? Would he not pay more for a lot in that town than in a town where none of these improvements existed?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I would pay for the lot in the town in proportion as trade came to the town, and in proportion as I could use it for the purposes for which I was moving to the town; and then when I got in there I would pay my pro rata share for building the streets that I wanted to walk on or for building the town hall that I wanted to sit in unless, as the merchants do, I could get somebody else to pay it. If I could saddle it on the farmers, I would be doing as the merchants do; I would make the surrounding farmers build my schoolhouses and lodge houses and town halls. That is what you are trying to do in this bill—trying to saddle the burden of the town on the community outside.

Mr. HAYDEN. If I believed that the passage of this act would place any burden on the farmers of the community, I would not support it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. It takes one-half of the value of these lands from the people on the project, does it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. It adds to the value of the lots that are improved and yet remain to be sold.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The lots are of no value to the people out in the country. The thing that should be attended to is the payment of the debt that is saddled upon them for this project.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has again expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. May I have one more minute?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. HAYDEN. If I believed that this bill would saddle one cent's worth of burden on the farmers of the community, I would not vote for its passage. But I do believe that a greater sum will be derived from the sale of the balance of the lots than will be diverted from the reclamation fund. Much more money can be obtained for lots that are improved than for lots that are not improved, and this ultimate increase in the price of the lots will redound to the benefit of the farmer.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Would not that depend on the condition existing at any particular place? You would not lay that down as a general rule? The gentleman will not contend that you can build up a town in that way under any sort of conditions?

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, that is true. Even speculators have lost money on town lots.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, we are quite removed from the question that was asked by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], which I wanted to answer, with respect to the possibility of the Secretary of the Interior continuing the management of schools and other municipal institutions for a longer period than would be altogether desirable, providing that the present bill shall be passed. I will say, however, in reply to the gentleman's objection, that the natural pride of the communities in interest is so great that it is impossible to conceive of a condition of that kind obtaining. My judgment is that all of those communities would make haste to perfect their municipal organizations of various kinds. If not, I would suggest that a very simple amendment would cure that provision of the bill. It can be worked out in language something like this: After the word "aforesaid," in section 2, line 21, where it provides for the responsibility of the Federal Government in maintaining the improvements for a period of time, insert this language: "Nor in any event for a longer period than three years." That language will further tend to make each community organize itself into a municipal corporation for town purposes, or into a school district for the handling of school matters.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is a timely one and is applicable here. It also concedes the vice which we have contended is contained in this bill.

If the bill is left to stand in its present form it will enable scheming individuals in the development of these town sites to exploit the people. It will do more. It will be an inducement to prevent the organization of municipal governments for these town sites after they have been established, and will leave it under the control of the Government to multiply officeholders and to furnish berths for office-seeking individuals.

Mr. FRENCH. Does the gentleman think the amendment I have proposed will meet that situation?

Mr. CULLOP. I think it will tend to meet it, and I think that such an amendment is absolutely necessary. I would gladly vote for such an amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. So far as I am advised, representing the committee I will say that we have not the slightest objection to that amendment. We do not feel that the objection made by the gentleman from Indiana is well founded, but nevertheless we are willing to put in a clause obviating what he fears. We do not think it would ever occur, but we have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Suppose such an amendment as is suggested by the gentleman from Idaho should be adopted. Suppose these municipal improvements of various kinds should be made on one of these town sites before any municipal corporation is organized and the Government should undertake to operate them. Suppose the town did not develop to the degree anticipated and that the revenues derived from the operation of these various works is not sufficient to pay the cost of maintenance and operation. I believe the gentleman will agree with me that in that case the people on the town site would have no disposition to assume the burden of operating these municipal improvements which are not self-sustaining, and so would have no inducement to organize a municipal corporation.

Mr. CULLOP. That is exactly the point I am making.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. And, furthermore, if the Government should be required to give up the operation of these works at a definite date, I think a case can be imagined where the people would not organize into a municipality, and if the Government was prevented from operating these improvements beyond a certain date, there would be nobody to operate them, and they would simply fall into disuse.

Mr. CULLOP. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas is a good one. I wanted to call attention at the time I was interrupted to a matter bearing directly upon that point. As this bill now reads, it would be an inducement to prolong the completion of the public works herein provided for. Not only that, but it would have a tendency to induce the people managing these affairs for the Federal Government to let them out gradually—a sewerage system, after the light plant was completed; a schoolhouse, after the lighting plant and the sewerage system; and so on, for an indefinite period. All that time the municipal government, of whatever character it might be, would be under the management of the Secretary of the Interior at long range, three or four thousand miles away, and subject to the worst kind of abuses. It strikes me that the effect of this bill will be to hand over to individuals a ready-made town. The people there would not build it up, but if the provisions of this bill should be adopted the National Government would build a town for the inhabitants. Now, the reclamation fund was never provided for any such purpose. It was provided for the sole purpose of reclaiming the land for agricultural purposes and increase the productivity of the soil, aiding the farmers of our country, encouraging the people to engage in that important industry, and we should not divert that purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. With pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. In order to get the gentleman's idea of the policy, I want to make a statement and then ask a question. It was shown from the gentlemen appearing before the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands that close to the town of Newell is the town of Nisland, a privately owned town, and another town a short distance away by the name of Fruitdale. Newell has over 500 inhabitants, and they claim it is doing nothing. It is a Government town. Nisland and Fruitdale have less than 300 inhabitants, and it is shown that these people have assessable property amounting to $500,000; they have a system of waterworks, good electric lights, and all the facilities, because the people can tax the land. Now, if the Government in the town that they have worked for has made a failure, is it right to put into their hands a further control to handle all the money, when it is shown that there are privately owned towns nearby which are prosperous? Here is a Government town to-day that has made a failure, and is it not going to continue to make a failure if you start out with the idea of the Government building up the municipality?

Mr. CULLOP. It is forcing the building of a town, and that you can not do. Towns must be built up to meet conditions, and you can not force them unless they have those conditions. That has been the history of all boom towns. You can not force the upbuilding of any town which has not the conditions surrounding it to support a town of the size which it is attempted to force on the public. To make the modern improvements alone will not bring population; it is an inducement, that is true.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman does not think that a public official would undertake to build a town where it was not desired by the people in that locality, does he? I would like to ask if the gentleman does not think that people would be safer in the hands of a Government official who was located at long distance in looking after the best interests of the people than they would be in the hands of real-estate speculators and contractors at a short distance? I believe I would select the Government official at a long distance.

Mr. CULLOP. I would not want to select either. I would want to select the sound judgment of the people in the town who are interested in its welfare and leave the responsibility with them. I would not want the National Government to attempt to build a town for somebody out in a far western State, put upon them improvements that when they come into possession of their property the taxes required to support them would exhaust the value of the property in a very short time.

Now, an inducement of this kind of legislation would be to the contractor to work around and manipulate affairs so as to get contracts and put in an expensive sewer system, an expensive lighting system, an expensive water plant, and expensive school buildings far beyond the requirements of the public in these localities, and would burden it with such expense of maintenance that the people would never feel like organizing and taking it out of the hands of the Government. It would do more to retard the upbuilding of the country than it would to promote it, in my judgment.

Now, such things are not only possible, but they are highly probable; they have occurred and they may occur again. So that the bill as it now stands is open to aggravated abuses, and these abuses are possible and probable both when we come to look at the situation as it really exists.

Now, this is the reclamation fund—and a fund created solely for that purpose—and if diverted from that use to the purpose of building up towns in localities perhaps long before the people are ready for them is a diversion of its purpose. That is my objection to the bill. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Idaho, if the bill is to pass, would be a very timely one; but I do not think this bill as it now stands ought to pass. I believe it would prove more injurious than beneficial.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I will.

Mr. RAKER. I watched carefully the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Idaho, and is it not a fact that it makes a limit of three years, and the Government would just get started and about half through its work when you cut off the entire completion of it, and the very limitation would be another condition that would show that it could not be carried out?

Mr. FRENCH. Would the gentleman increase the limitation?

Mr. RAKER. No; I think the private individuals ought to build up the town to suit themselves.

Mr. CULLOP. That is my idea, that the people ought to do this instead of the National Government, and then it will be done as the public requires and demands, but in this way you are building up in advance of the public requirements. That would be the result of this legislation if it should pass. Now if the gentleman from Texas desires time I will yield to him.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Not just now.

Mr. CULLOP. Then I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what I have said on this matter this morning, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a further fact which is worthy of consideration. In one of these towns of 160 acres a small piece of the land is sold or laid off, some 4 per cent of it, in the center. The balance of the land is to be sold after the Government builds its jails, its roads, its schoolhouses, its town hall, and all other things, which may be put off in entirely another part of these 640 acres, leaving out those who have been the first purchasers. Their ideas might change as the administration might change.

The main feature of this matter, and one of the things that seems to be more vital than anything else, is that which, to my mind, appears from the hearings in this case. I want to read just a little bit. I read from page 16 of part 1. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota, speaking before the committee, said:

I am very familiar with these conditions, because right where I live, on this Government town-site tract, the people—because it is a Government town site—can not assess taxes, whereas these other towns right on the railroad and a little nearer market than Newell, although much smaller, are in position to proceed and make their municipal improvements, whereas Newell has so small a per cent of property there that they are not able to turn a wheel.

Now, if you want to build up these towns, if you want to improve them the same as the country that surrounds them is improved—that is, the farming district—comply with the reclamation act and the acts amendatory thereof, and appraise all of the lots in this town site after having platted it, laid off your location for your jail and your public assembly building, and your schoolhouse——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, they do not need any jails out there.

Mr. RAKER. Just give them one for good measure—and all of the streets and byways, and it can then be opened up for bids of those who desire to buy this property, and just as fast as the town is in condition to improve, these lots will be for sale from time to time, and they will enhance in value, and the entire town will be in private ownership. They will then be in a position to assess the land and improve it, and no man will be in a position to hold any quantity of it, because he will be in such a hopeless minority that those living in the town will assess it sufficiently high to induce him to sell off part of it or improve the balance. They will then be able to use the money to improve the town and build up these necessary public improvements as they ought to be built up.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know the gentleman is well informed in regard to these matters out West, but is it not a fact that the system that has been in vogue has been that real estate speculators got hold of these town sites and put up buildings and improved the town for the purpose of selling the property at a high price?

Mr. RAKER. It is not only true as to Illinois, but it is true of the West. Wherever you go, men are bound to speculate in real estate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That being the case, the gentleman seems to feel that a public official is going to place a town site where the people in that locality do not want it. I can not conceive of such an idea. He could not succeed in doing it. He must respond to the will of the people in regard to these matters, and it seems to me the people's interest ought to be better off in the hands of a public official than in the hands of real estate speculators.

Mr. RAKER. There are no real estate speculators in it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have never seen a town yet where there were not.

Mr. RAKER. Then, the gentleman must place himself in a position to say that no man shall be able to advance the town in which he lives. In other words, after a man goes into one of the western towns, or in the gentleman's town, if he improves the street in front of his place, or fixes up his back alley, if he plants trees, and builds a house and sells it to some one that wants it, at a reasonable price, he is a speculator, according to the gentleman, and the gentleman would prefer that kind of improvement——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would prefer it; yes.

Mr. RAKER. I am in favor of building up these towns.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have done those things myself and I know it is the easiest money ever made, but I would stop it.

Mr. RAKER. It can not be possible that the Government is going to take over the policy of building up all your towns, large, small, and intermediate. Is it possible that this great Government is to go out into my State and lay off in one of those desert valleys 160 acres of land and build up a town?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would say to the gentleman, on the contrary, instead of obstructing the progress of the West I would have the Government do this for the protection of the people's interest, so that the West might progress without the obstruction of real estate sharks and speculators.

Mr. RAKER. Well, that does not apply to the West, so far as building up farm communities where the towns are concerned. It may apply to Chicago and it may apply to the additions there, but it does not apply to the West if we give these men a free hand—the farmers and those who come there from other States and those who desire to become a part and parcel of that community and that town. They are not land sharks; they are not speculators. The farmers are going there to build up the country. Those who live in the towns are merchants, blacksmiths, teachers, and what not. They want to buy a piece of land to live on and build up a home, and because some man sells to them they are not land sharks. But you want to put the Government in a position of doing business, not on the ground but 3,800 miles distant; not that the people need them, but you lay out plans and specifications for an imaginary town, with an imaginary beautiful school house, with its plans and specifications, with its marble front and walks and cement driveways to and from it, with its jail in the same condition, whereas a log jail will do for many years and it will have a deterrent effect upon those who try to break the law instead of a fanciful stone structure with beautiful statuary surrounding it.

The same way with all the other buildings, and you would want to put upon the corners of each street a monument to some individual who may be a part of that country in future years. The people in those western towns do not build them up that way. They build them up as the necessities demand, just as the testimony is before the committee upon this same matter. I will read a portion of it:

The entire land is private land and subject to taxation, whereas here 96 per cent of the land is Government town site. The Government, however, had three towns established under the Belle Fourche project—one Newell; Nisland, a private town, and the other Fruitdale, a private town. Newell has more people than both of the others, attracted to it because it was a Government town site and because of these representations, but the people in the other town sites proceeded to get everything they wanted. They have got their waterworks in Fruitdale, although I do not suppose there are over 100 people living in the town.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to have five minutes additional.

Mr. CULLOP. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER (reading)—

But in this town site of Newell we have not any water at all; no means to raise funds for waterworks; they draw it a mile and a half.

Think of that. That is the town site laid out by those who are laying it out in the interest of those who are going to live in the vicinity of this project. They have to haul their water for drinking and washing purposes miles and miles in barrels and leave it standing out in the open, and then they want us to take the money from the reclamation fund and give it for the purpose of building beautiful buildings in these towns, whereas in a little town 4 miles from it, with 100 inhabitants, they have electricity, water supply, good streets, and good school buildings. Now the gentleman says further:

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In a word, an investor looking over those three towns would take this view. He would say, "Here is to be a Government town; they will have every advantage over these other two towns." And the representations in the literature as to what was to be done for the purchasers of lots in the town undoubtedly has had influence to bring these 500 people to this Government town, and put improvements of a half million of dollars on it, as between the other two competing towns. There can not be over 300 people in both of the two other towns, but they have these facilities and conveniences of living, good water, and have put in other improvements, bonding their towns for considerable, whereas the Government town-site people appear to be helpless to do anything or to rely upon the Government to help them.

There, right side by side, is shown what can be done if the Government adopts that policy of selling town lots in these reclamation town sites at public auction after they are appraised. Nobody can be injured and the Government gets the best price, and then you are in a position of improving your towns as they ought to be. The policy of the bill is what strikes me. The idea at this day, at this time, with only a few towns involved, for the Government to start into the policy of building up municipalities seems to me beyond the power and function of the Government.

Those acts referred to by my distinguished colleague from Arizona relate to Indian towns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. RAKER. Now, are you going to compare the building up of these western towns with the handling of town sites and those interested in towns? The Government handles and takes care of the Indians, their money, and their property. Now it is attempting to take care of the people in the West. They do not want it in that way. Furthermore, whatever money has been in any instance allowed, you will find, has been handled and turned over, whatever small per cent it was, to the Government authorities of those towns. And if gentlemen would just call to mind their own local homes, when they were boys, and the building up of their towns, they will remember that burning questions always occurred as to what should be the first improvement, whether it should be the schoolhouse, whether it should be the town hall, whether it should be waterworks, or whether it should be an electric-light system, or some other necessary improvement. But under this bill, under the policy that is intended to be enacted into law by this Congress, these questions are entirely taken from the local authorities; some individual goes into a community or into a town, and for that community fixes their policies contrary to their wishes and their desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he wishes to conclude the balance of his time? I wish to make some concluding remarks in regard to the bill, but wish to make them after the other arguments are all in.

Mr. CULLOP. If the matter stops here now, I do not expect to use it, but the debate may make it such that I will desire to use it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have no further request for time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It being my bill, I would like to have the concluding argument, in order to answer the arguments which have been made, and if the gentleman has any desire to use his time, I wish he would do so.

Mr. CULLOP. I have no desire, I will say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], to use any more of it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the committee, I will take a few minutes in making some reference to the arguments pro and con which have been made as to this bill. The debate has continued over so long a period and has been made in such a fragmentary manner that it perhaps has not been satisfactory to Members of the House who are not, from force of circumstances, acquainted with the facts involved. And I would remind Members in that condition that I think, as is usual, doubt can probably be very easily resolved in behalf of the committee which reports this bill favorably.

A committee of 15 considered this matter and had hearings before it, covering some two or three different periods, and a majority of the committee reports in favor of the bill. Indeed, the minority report is signed by only 2 members of the committee of 15, namely, the distinguished chairman and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], whose positions, I am entirely satisfied, are taken with the utmost sincerity. I believe, however, a closer contact with the conditions which make this legislation necessary and cause it to be recommended by the department and by Members who come from these localities would remove the objections in the minds of any who have felt disposed to question the wisdom of the legislation. It is suggested that it is the adoption of a new policy. It is not a new policy. As the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has said, the Government has not at any time sought to obtain profit to itself from lands within located town sites, and there is precedent for this legislation in effect in bills we have passed from time to time as to town sites created in Indian reservations when the lands about them are open for settlement.

And as we have been reminded by the remarks of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Congress has with great uniformity provided that a portion of the proceeds of the lots sold on these Government town sites made from Indian reservations should be used for public utilities, upon the same general plan and system as here proposed. And, indeed, the general town-site law that has been in the statutes of the Government of the United States for many, many years, under which many towns of the West have obtained their titles, was administered by the Government purely and simply for the benefit of the inhabitants of the towns themselves. Lots that were in actual occupancy in such town sites under the general town-site law were set aside to the persons occupying them without any payment for the lot except a proper proportion of the expenses of administration leading to the passage of titles. As to all remaining areas, the general town-site law gives the land to the municipality, and the proceeds are generally used for the benefit of the school fund as such lots are disposed of.

When we started out with the reclamation town-site act the provisions apparently were not given careful consideration as to their effect. We started out contrary to all our precedents in such matters and set aside the entire proceeds from the sale of lots under the reclamation town-site projects for the benefit of the reclamation fund.

This bill simply proposes to give one-half of the proceeds of the sale of the town sites in these reclamation projects for the benefit of public utilities, such as waterworks, streets, lights, and other necessary utilities for the benefit of the town, and when this law is passed, if it becomes a law, it will still place the occupants of Government town sites upon reclamation projects at a disadvantage to the extent of the other one-half as compared with our general town-site law.

I think it is an equitable proposition. The argument that is made against it is based upon unnecessary fear of the working out of this proposed legislation. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH], the distinguished chairman of the committee, says that it is creating a system of paternalism, to be administered by a bureau chief or a Secretary here in Washington. Well, the charge of paternalism can be made against many of the necessary legislative steps for the proper progress and development of the country, but there is less paternalism in this proposed amendment to the town-site law than there is in the entire reclamation act.

What are the facts there? This whole subject of reclaiming the arid lands of the United States is a piece of paternalism, if we are to measure it by those standards. The Government proceeds and builds these great reclamation projects and puts the Government money into them, amounting to millions of dollars. The Government does the whole service without any compensation to the Government, and simply charges to the settlers under the project the cost of the works when completed. And the Government not only constructs the works, but it absolutely manages them for a period of not less than five years in the interest of the people under the project.

It is paternalism, it is true, if we are captious and insistent upon that idea with respect to legislation; but it has been the means of developing the arid lands of the West in a way that they could not have been developed otherwise. Those works require the interposition of the Nation. The Nation is very much interested in the development of those vast areas of rich land that are naturally without water unless it is brought in artificially; and the progress of the community, the building up of new communities and cities and towns, forming new circles of civilization, is the justification for the Government taking part in these great enterprises.

As to the management of the irrigation projects themselves, the Interior Department absolutely conducts those projects in all of their particulars for the first five years after they are constructed, and only when one-half of the cost is paid for does the management pass to the settlers under the form of water users' associations.

Now, there is much less paternalism in this proposition regarding reclamation town sites. The Secretary of the Interior, having this machinery all about him in the construction of the project generally, is authorized to make the necessary improvements in the town for the public utilities, using only one-half of the money that the town-site occupants themselves put into the Treasury for their lands.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I do.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would not the passage of this bill have the effect of making this land sell for so much more that the Government would not lose anything?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is absolutely true. The Government in any event would not get any of this fund. It goes into the reclamation fund for the benefit of the settlers. But the gentleman is right. The Government must take the initial steps for the improvement of these town undoubtedly, and a much higher price would be paid for the land if the improvements are made.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would it not be improved much better than under the old régime?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes. That is the idea of the Department of the Interior. They claim that they can construct these initial improvements much more economically and under a much better system than is likely to be done in the haphazard way that would apply if the department does not itself start these initial improvements. I think the gentleman's suggestion is right.

And so far as some of these towns are concerned town lots are sold at such a figure as to be very advantageous to the project. For instance, in the town of Newell the land brought $2,000 an acre. Otherwise it would not have brought anything to the reclamation project at all, because it would have been taken by homesteaders under the reclamation act. A small part of the Newell town site was sold to occupants at the rate of $2,000 an acre, and it was upon the expectation that these improvements would be made under the direction of the Interior Department. Under the policy that has been adopted of selling only a small part of the town site at first, this is the only way that these improvements can be made at all. The town site I have referred to has 640 acres in it. Gentlemen differ as to whether the Government ought to throw the whole 640 acres onto the market at once and place it in the hands of speculators away in advance of the time it is needed for occupancy, or whether the Government ought to do what the Interior Department is doing—sell simply the portion needed for occupancy and give the town-site fund the benefit of the appreciation of the other lots as they are needed when the town grows. Whatever may be said by way of fundamental argument on one side or the other, there is no doubt in my mind that the policy of the department of selling only that which is needed for actual improvement from time to time will bring a great deal more out of the future sale of lots than if the whole thing were thrown upon the market at one time. Inevitably the areas not needed for use would fall into the hands of speculators, and the man who came along and wanted a lot would be up against a speculative market, and the speculator would get the profit instead of the farmer. Some one or more gentlemen here, assuming to be solicitous for the farmers, say this bill would operate against the farmers. In no sense. The interest of the community is a common interest.

The farmer is advantaged by having a good town in the center of such a project, where he can obtain his supplies at a minimum of inconvenience, and if he gets one-half the proceeds of the sale of town lots to help reduce the cost of the waterworks that bring to him his water supply, he is evidently favored over any other occupant of public lands. This matter has been up for months since the first hearing. I live out in the general neighborhood of one of these great projects. Other Members from the West live near other projects, and I have heard no suggestion from any farmer or any settler of any objection to this sort of a plan. The equity and justice of it seem to be comprehended by all, and if this were in any sense likely to operate to the disadvantage of settlers and farmers in these communities, do you suppose Members would not have heard of it? Do you suppose the farmers would have been silent all these weeks and months? The objections raised by gentlemen are purely imaginary. The farmer is getting the best of this in any view of the case, and he knows it.

Mr. LOBECK. How far apart are these towns located on the reclamation project?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Do you mean how far apart are the Government towns?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As a rule, there is only one Government town on each project. Taking the case of the Belle Fourche project in South Dakota, Newell is the Government town site, located in about the center of the project, which embraces something like 100,000 acres. It is on the railroad. There are other towns, which are not Government towns, located either in the project or right on the edge of it. That affords me an opportunity to illustrate the difference in the condition of the people in the Government towns and the other towns. As is customary, and as would have been the case here if these lands were in private ownership, the other towns are built upon lands owned by private individuals. If the area of the town is a mile square, which it generally is, or about that, of course all of the land within that mile square is subject to taxation.

Consequently these towns simply proceed to issue bonds to build their public utilities, and the whole square mile within the corporate limits is subject to taxation for the payment of the interest and principal of the bonds. In that way these towns can proceed to make the necessary municipal improvements. But when you come to the Government town, only 4 per cent of the 640 acres is sold, and the balance is held by the Government and not subject to taxation. The result is that whatever they have in the way of schools or any other general advantage has to be done by private subscription. I have here a telegram from the people of that town showing that the assessed taxation is less than $600. Now, if the entire town site was passed over to the municipality or private ownership, it would be all subject to taxation; but under the policy of the Interior Department—a wise policy—they are not selling the surplus lands around, but keep them to give the appreciation in value to the reclamation fund and the inhabitants of the town.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. That would be for the great benefit of the people generally.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There is no conflict between the settlers and the inhabitants of the town; they are all interested in the preservation of the town-site land, because that is for the general benefit.

Mr. LOBECK. And the improvements would be better.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Absolutely; and this town of Newell with the disadvantages, with the inability to proceed and make municipal improvements, nevertheless, being a Government town site, is outstripping the other towns in a business way, but is perfectly helpless in the way of public utilities.

Mr. LOBECK. They have to issue bonds that get into the hands of somebody that forecloses, and then they have the burden to bear. In this way the Government is behind it, and the people who live in the towns are not stuck for final payment.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the policy of the Interior Department is a wise one, and I only took the floor in concluding upon our side of this proposition with the desire that no Member might be opposed to this legislation by reason of lack of knowledge of the facts and the real questions involved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up 15 minutes of the time of the House on this bill, but I do feel favorable to the bill, because I believe all such improvements redound not only to the benefit of the town itself but to the entire community. I do not believe this bill would cost the Government of the United States one cent, because I believe the balance of the lots will sell for more than sufficient to make up the difference for the half allowed for improvements; that they would make up in this way enough to pay for all the public improvements and leave the reclamation fund no poorer.

I have had considerable experience in the development of property, and I know that improved streets and other improvements are always an asset to the town, because when you have improved streets you have a better class of development and a better town, and you develop a community worthy of these improvements. I believe if we pass this bill and this money is expended in streets and public buildings that it will make a far better town and not the Government a whole lot more money.

I do not take much stock in the question of paternalism. I found at the last session, when the army worm invaded the South, we made a large appropriation to go down and destroy the army worm or discover how they might be destroyed and what might be done to prevent them. I remember on my father's place, before the Government undertook the appropriation of money for these things, the tomato worm was a terrible thing and a formidable pest. We did not come to the Government at that time, but we got a lot of turkeys and put them into the tomato patches and destroyed the worm. But I believe the policy of the Government to-day to take care of its people and make possible a high order of development is a proper policy. I believe if this bill passes and the money is used in the construction of streets and the building of schoolhouses, a water system, and a light system, we will build a town as it should be and a credit to the State. When towns start they start in a small way. We do not know how much they will develop, but we know if they start right they are going to develop right, and build into large and creditable towns to benefit the whole country. The assessments will be larger, the tax receipts will be larger, and the Government will be benefited, the State will be benefited, and I for one would like to see the bill pass. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WITHERSPOON). The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-eight Members are present—not a quorum—and the Clerk will call the roll.

The committee rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, that 244 members answered to their names, a quorum, and he reported the names of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. SMITH of Texas (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, if I am in order at this time, I move to amend by striking out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that amendment is not in order until after the first section of the bill has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That one-half the net proceeds heretofore received from the sale of town lots in towns within or in the vicinity of reclamation projects, sold under the provisions of the acts of April 16, 1906, and June 27, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 116, 619), and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and one-half the net proceeds hereafter received from such sales shall be, and the same are hereby reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the reclamation town-site fund, to be used in the construction, maintenance, and operation of schoolhouses, water and sewer systems, and other municipal improvements in the towns where lots have been or shall be sold as aforesaid. And the aforesaid one-half of the net proceeds heretofore received from such sales shall be forthwith transferred from the reclamation fund to the reclamation town-site fund hereby created.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the enacting clause of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was pending before the House on a former day of this session, I discussed it at some length. I do not know that I can say much more now than I said at that time. I believe that if the bill is properly understood by the membership of the House the amendment which I have offered will be adopted, so convinced am I that the bill ought not to pass. The bill provides that when the Government lays out a town site in connection with a reclamation project, surveys and subdivides it, and sells the lots, it shall take one-half of the proceeds of the sale of the lots and donate those proceeds back to the purchasers of the town lots by constructing municipal improvements in the town, without any contribution whatsoever from the purchasers of the lots or the settlers of the town.

Under this bill the purchasers who buy lots receive the full benefit of their purchase. In other words, they have got value received by getting the lots, as the lots are worth the money. This bill provides that one-half of the money shall be returned in the way of municipal improvement, the money which under the present law is credited to the benefit of the farmers who improve the land under the reclamation project.

The bill is broad enough to cover all sorts of municipal improvements—schoolhouses, water, light, sewers, streets, sidewalks, and street cars if necessary—and it is without any limitation on the power of the Secretary of the Interior to do that except by the amount of money that may be available for the purpose. Not only that, but it provides that after these various works are constructed that the Secretary of the Interior shall maintain and operate them; that they may be constructed before there is any municipal government organized, and it provides that the Government shall operate and maintain them until the municipality is organized, and not longer than two years thereafter; and I submit in cases where the burden of doing this is heavy that the people, if left to their own choice, as is done under this bill, will never see fit to organize a municipal government, and therefore the Government of the United States will have to operate them for an indefinite time. But gentlemen say that if these works are constructed by the Government the Government will be out nothing; that it will enhance the lots which may be unsold belonging to the Government. Gentlemen, that is the merest sort of speculation. It may or it may not enhance the value of the remaining lots, and this is a proposition here to put the Government in the same attitude as the town lots and the town-site boosters of the country, to speculate upon the advance in value of the town sites. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a new departure. It proposes to establish a new policy for this Government; and I want to ask gentlemen here why it is that these towns are not permitted and required to grow up in response to the business done as other towns are required to grow up? I take the position that the town with sufficient business and wealth and progress will construct its own municipal improvements——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Texas (continuing). And if it has not the population and wealth and business to authorize the construction of municipal improvements, then they ought not to be made. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed five minutes. I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to ask the gentleman how these people are to get the public improvements in a township like that of Newell, for instance, where only 4 per cent of the lands are to be sold and the balance are still owned by the Government and not subject to taxation?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will say to the gentleman if there is any demand there by the growth of the town that these lots should be sold, there will be purchasers for them just as there are everywhere else, and if there is not such a demand then there is no reason to construct these improvements.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman believe, though, by the construction of these improvements that the town will grow faster and be a better town than it would be without these improvements?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not. I believe the towns are built up by the business that is furnished by the surrounding country and not by the construction of useless municipal improvements, and that is illustrated all over this country.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not a fact that out of these 32 township sites the larger number are not occupied at all?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I think that is the fact.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Only 10 of them?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. That is the fact, and yet this bill proposes to authorize the Government to construct municipal improvements in every one of them where the Government is receiving any money.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is a violent assumption to assume that the Government of the United States is going to uselessly expend the money of the people in the construction of municipal improvements. It seems to me that we can trust the Reclamation Service to only build such improvements upon these town sites as are needed by the people, and when the money to construct these improvements is paid by the people themselves, drawn by the Government out of the inhabitants of this land and put in the reclamation fund, it seems to me there can be no more legitimate expenditure of that money than to devote it to municipal improvements in the way of streets, sewers, and other necessary improvements for the upbuilding of those towns. The very reason that there are 30 town sites and 31 reclamation projects throughout this country and there are only very few towns that are to-day amounting to anything is because there is no money with which to build those towns. And it further seems to me that when the Reclamation Service of the United States had gone over this matter exhaustively, and where every one of us gentlemen from those States affected are here agreeing to this bill, and when the Irrigation Committee reports this bill out with only two dissenting members, it would seem to me that when there is no voice of protest from any one State in the Union that has one of these town sites affected by this bill, that we ought to pay some attention to the wishes, the welfare, and the judgment of the Interior Department and the people who are affected directly by this legislation.

We feel that the House ought, as a matter of justice to the upbuilding of these municipalities in the West, to consider our welfare and our wishes. We thrashed this out for three hours the other day and for three hours to-day, and it would seem this motion now to strike out the enacting clause ought certainly to be voted down in the interests of the development of these 32 irrigation projects throughout the West. Nobody appears here showing that there is any objection from anybody who knows anything personally about this legislation. The opposition is theoretical and speculative. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] says they might never incorporate. We are perfectly willing to make them incorporate or not get the benefit of this act. That objection does not apply. As a matter of fact, the American people will incorporate whenever they get an opportunity. I feel that the objections that have been thus far made are speculative, visionary, and theoretical, and do not come from the people who have the personal knowledge of and the personal welfare of the inhabitants at stake. Therefore I hope that this motion will be voted down.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I wish to call the committee's attention really to the proposition that there are 30 town sites in these 32 projects. Up to date there are only 2 in the State of Idaho; in Montana, 6 towns; South Dakota, 1; Wyoming, 1; and in all the other western public-land States there is not a town site on which there has been an acre of land sold or a lot or a plat of the town made to-day. And as far as the western land States are concerned, there are only these four States, and when you read the record here you will find they are not demanded. It is a speculative idea that these town sites will be a benefit to the community, when you find there are within 4 miles of this town of Newell two prosperous towns, with electric-light and water systems, and in the town of Newell, a Government project up on the hill, they are without water, except where they draw it. It is a question of whether this Government ought to enter into the policy of building up town sites in advance of inhabitants. Ought they to go out there and build town halls, town eating places, waterworks, electric-light systems, and all other improvements, without any inhabitants in the town or in the surrounding country getting the benefit? That is the question involved here and not the question that those individuals will build it up. In every place in the West where you find the town lots under private ownership, so that they may be taxed, you will find the towns are prospering, electric-light and power plants and all other necessary buildings are being built, and just as fast as the demand of that community may warrant.

I want to call your attention to section 2 of the bill.

Mr. LOBECK. What is the mortgage on these prosperous towns?

Mr. RAKER. It will be a mortgage indebtedness if you take the fund from the reclamation project that should be used to irrigate these arid lands for the purpose of building up an ideal, imaginary town, that the people can not afford to assume and pay the price that will be assessed.

In regard to the bill, section 2 says:

That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, from time to time, expend, or cause to be expended, from said reclamation townsite fund, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of schoolhouses—

He may operate schoolhouses, employ teachers, and run the business of schools in these towns—water, light, and sewer systems, and other school and municipal improvements in each of such town sites—

Every conceivable municipal improvement could be built and maintained. And I want to call your attention further to this fact:

The buildings and works so constructed may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be operated and maintained by him or under his authority, and the expense thereof paid from the reclamation townsite fund, pending the organization of a municipal corporation or school district qualified to operate and maintain the same, and upon the organization of such municipal corporation or school district the Secretary of the Interior may transfer to such corporation or school district the said buildings or work.

In other words, under this bill the Secretary of the Interior, notwithstanding the organization of the municipal corporation, may continue forever, in his discretion, not only to build but to operate and run schoolhouses, city jails, city waterworks——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. He may maintain city electric-lighting privileges——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Assuming that there is any foundation for the gentleman's recent criticism of the bill, will the gentleman vote for the bill if the amendment offered by him to meet that objection is carried?

Mr. RAKER. Well, I will answer the question of the gentleman from Wyoming. The fundamental principle——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is against the bill——

Mr. RAKER (continuing). Is such that the Government ought not to go into the business not only of building, but of operating municipalities where there is not a sufficient number of people in the surrounding country to build it up and maintain it as it ought to be built up and maintained. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman's objections are not those that he voices, but other objections?

Mr. RAKER. My objection applies to the bill all through. I have mentioned only a few of my objections to things that appear in this bill. Why should the National Congress enter upon the policy of building and operating municipalities?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The last two words have been stricken out.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. I can see no objection to the bill whatever.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] lays great stress on the fact that the Secretary of the Interior may expend money for all manner of things. The Secretary can not expend more than one-half of what is received from the lots that are sold, and, judging from what the Secretary says, he does not think there will be many lots sold, so that there will not be much money to spend. But, in any event, he can not expend more than one-half of what he receives from the lots that are sold.

The gentleman from California speaks of a town within 4 miles which has electric lights and water, and so forth, but the gentleman does not tell us what the mortgage indebtedness is upon that town 4 miles away. The fact is that in the town of Newell only 4 per cent of the lots can be sold, and therefore a public bond issue can not be made, because you can not tax the other 96 per cent of those lots to secure the bond issue, because they belong to the National Government and are not taxable.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a sufficient answer, if the statement of the gentleman from Maryland is correct, that only 4 per cent can be sold—is it not conclusive evidence that the Government ought not to go into the building up of that town away out there and sell only 4 per cent of 40 acres?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to develop as fine a town there as can be developed. I think it is the duty of the Government to go in and help those people in this way. It is not only an economic question, but also a practical business question, because I know, and every man who has dealt in real estate knows, that when you improve property by a good system of streets and a good lighting system and good schoolhouses you are doubling the value of the land you are offering for sale.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Does not the gentleman think it would be more equitable for the advocates of this bill to come in here and propose that the Government shall contribute its share of the taxes within this municipality for these purposes? The gentleman says that these unsold town lots can not be taxed, and yet he and those who believe with him are coming here and asking that the Government shall devote the whole amount for these improvements.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The fact is that the Government does not pay taxes nor collect land taxes, and therefore that could not be put into effect.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. An act of Congress can be passed to that effect.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman support such a bill if the Government can do that and agrees to do it?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will support a bill providing that the Government shall contribute a proportional part for these improvements.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then, the gentleman talks about paternalism and talks about the Government contributing money to do this thing, when these people only ask for half of the money that the people themselves pay for the lots. What is the difference between paying money from the Treasury to do this work and taking the money from the lots that are sold and doing the work with that? There is not an old city in this country that has not suffered and is not suffering to-day from the fact, and that has not expended millions of dollars to rectify the fact, that the town was not begun aright.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Maryland have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object; but at the end of that five minutes I will demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, as I only have five minutes, I must decline further interruptions. As I say, there is not a large city in this country that is not suffering to-day from the fact that it was not begun aright; that it was not laid out by engineers and public improvements provided for. Take my own city of Baltimore. We are expending $20,000,000, and it may run to $30,000,000, in the construction of sewers. Why? Because we are compelled to tear up splendid improved streets to put down that sewerage system. If we had started out properly we would not be expending these millions to-day.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the testimony before the committee shows that in none of these places have the department laid out a town site? They have selected 10 or 12 acres without any regard to the laying out of the rest of the town site with any regard to roads, streets, sewers, public parks, or otherwise.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is certainly a very loose statement of the evidence to say that the department has laid out these towns without any system. Quite the reverse is true. They have sold only a part of the lots, but the part that they have sold has due reference to the entire town site which the engineers have selected. Being entirely familiar with the testimony, I take the liberty of answering the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will yield if the House will extend my time, but I have only a very little more time.

Mr. CANNON. At the end of the five minutes I shall demand the regular order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was saying that if this town is started properly, and if the Government is allowed to expend half its receipts from the sale of these lots in the improvement of the town, then we will have a town worth while. If, however, you leave it to the building of houses alongside of roads, you can not issue bonds for improvements, because you can not secure the bonds that you might issue, for the reason that the Government owns all the property, and you are going to have a town that is not worth while. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS. The proposition in this bill is to donate one-half of the amount that the land sells for for the purpose of improving the town. Would it not be better for the Government in the first place just to give the people half the lots, donating each alternate lot, and say, "Now, you go ahead and make these improvements and relieve the Government from further responsibility"?

Mr. LINTHICUM. That might work well if you owned all the property, but the fact is that the Government still has 96 per cent of it, which you can not tax. Therefore you can not issue any bonds to construct these public improvements. That is something which must be done by the city. No individual is going to improve the property in front of his few lots when the next individual will not improve his. You can not build a lighting system unless you have the whole town back of you with a fund, secured by bonds or otherwise. You must have it done by a bond issue, and in this case you can not have it done in that way because the Government owns the property and pays no taxes. Therefore you must do it in this way, by taking a part of the proceeds derived from the sale of lots.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] asked the gentleman from Maryland a question a moment ago which indicates that he still harbors the idea that the Government is asked to make some contribution toward the building of these town-site improvements. Is it not a fact that the Government makes no contribution whatever, but simply uses 50 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of lots?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The bill provides that they shall use 50 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of these lots, and you can not expend more than that one-half of those proceeds.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] continues to refer to that as a contribution by the Government. The Government contributes nothing.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think the Government will benefit by this system, because when it is an assured fact that the property is going to be improved by the construction of these schoolhouses and these lighting and sewerage systems I think the lots will sell for more than double what they now sell for, and not only does the Government not pay anything, but the reclamation fund will not be lessened.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order, which is the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Texas) there were 52 ayes and 72 noes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SMITH of Texas and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 47 ayes and 75 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "heretofore," insert the words "or hereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out all of line 4 after the word "in"; strike out lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and on page 2 lines 1, 2, 3, and line 4 to and including the word "same"; and in line 4 insert "reclamation town sites."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, insert after the word "water" the word "light" and a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, insert after the word "other" the words "school and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, insert after the word "aforesaid" the words "in proportion to the amounts received from each of the said towns, respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, is this paragraph, section 1, open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. What is the theory on which the 50 per cent of the total town-site sales is given to the local community for public improvement purposes? Is not this a much larger sum than we have given before to any local community out of the proceeds of any sale of Indian lands, let alone taking from the reclamation fund?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say that the Reclamation Service, the people under the various reclamation projects, have been considering this matter for several years, and they have come to a mutual agreement that that is a fair proportion of the proceeds. There is no objection to that amount made by either the farmers, the homesteaders under the project, or the inhabitants of the town, or the Reclamation Service. It is a compromise arbitrary amount.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not this reduce the total amount of the reclamation fund just the amount that you expend in these local communities?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It reduces that amount of money being spent on further construction, or something of that kind, but it is deemed that it is more important that this small amount should be expended toward the municipal improvements than otherwise. The attention of the House was called to that fact by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], that out of $60,000,000 that has been received from the reclamation fund there is only $200,000 received from the sale of town sites, so that this is to that extent a comparatively small sum. But let me say to the gentleman that in reality it increases the receipts that go to the development of these projects.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think that this bill ought undoubtedly to be amended or defeated altogether, for two well-defined reasons. In the first place, in the sale of the Indian town sites on Indian lands the largest per cent I ever heard of being given to the local community was 20 per cent—that is, in dealing with Indian lands. I think the reclamation fund is even a more sacred fund than that. Each of the several States has contributed to the reclamation fund and undoubtedly have an interest in the total fund. Until the act of 1910 was passed, which partially swept that away, each State had its individual direct interest in the amount contributed.

Now, it seems to me that, while this may not be a heavy drain on the fund, I am advised by somebody—I think the gentleman from Arizona—that it was $110,000, and a half would only be about $50,000. But if we begin to carve out of the fund that ought to be sacred the amount of $50,000 to-day and $50,000 to-morrow, in the last analysis that fund will be dissipated and destroyed.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Has the gentleman offered an amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. I will do so at the proper time. It occurs to me that every man in this House ought to at least try to follow the spirit of that law. The spirit of the reclamation act undoubtedly was that every cent expended for this purpose should be brought back to this fund, and if we begin to divert it here and divert it there it will not be very long until there will be no reclamation fund, and we can all then point to the errors that we have made.

Mr. Chairman, has a motion been voted on to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it has.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "5 per cent."

I would say, in this connection, that I would strike it all out if I could, but I take it that that would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 12, by striking out the words "one-half" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "5 per cent."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by inserting 30 per cent.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman make it 20 per cent, so that it would at least be uniform with the Indian legislation upon the subject? The largest amount that has ever been given of these proceeds has been 20 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by substituting for "5 per cent" "30 per cent."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that one-half, 50 per cent, is rather a large amount to take for these improvements. On the other hand, I am inclined to think that 20 per cent, as provided in the Indian bills, is not quite enough in these reclamation projects. I do not care to discuss the matter at any length. It occurs to me that somewhere below 50 per cent and above 20 per cent would be right, and I have suggested 30 per cent, which comes near to being one-third. Whether that amount prevails or not, I propose to offer another amendment to strike out "maintenance and operation," so that the bill will provide only for the construction of these improvements.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there have been some very remarkable developments in the discussion of this bill. First, the chairman of the committee in opposition to it, in writing his report, stated that the funds proposed to be used for the improvement of the town sites were to come out of the Treasury of the United States. He has discovered his error during the debate.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will not.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I do not want the gentleman to misstate my position.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Where does this money go when the town lots are sold and the proceeds are received?

Mr. MONDELL. When the town lots are sold, as the gentleman knows, under the present law the proceeds go into the reclamation fund to the credit of the project. Not a penny of it ever becomes Government money, not a penny of it goes into the Treasury of the United States to remain there.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Where is the reclamation fund that it goes into? Is it not in the Treasury of the United States? The gentleman can not dispute that.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I suppose if these moneys were paid in silver dollars as a physical fact they might be put into the Treasury of the United States; and if that is what the gentleman is basing his argument upon let the House understand it, that while this money never belonged to the Government, and never could belong to the Government, yet, because of the physical fact that some silver dollars might be placed in the Treasury, the gentleman from Texas asks you to vote against the bill. If that is all there is to the gentleman's argument it does not count for much.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield at this moment. That error has been disposed of. Now comes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who has been unfortunate in not being here during the discussion, and he plunges headlong into the same error, out of which we have finally pulled the gentleman from Texas. He does not want the reclamation fund dissipated. He wants to save it to build some reclamation projects in Oklahoma, and not having heard the debate, not knowing the facts or understanding the law, he imagines that we are proposing now to take some moneys out of the reclamation funds.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman recites the fact that we are expecting to have some of the fund expended in Oklahoma. I call his attention to the fact that we have contributed six and one-half million dollars to the fund and have had nothing, so it would not be absurd if we did hope to get something after a while.

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all; the gentleman will have just as much in Oklahoma, and there will be just as much in the reclamation fund without regard to whether this bill passes or not, because the moneys received from the sale of town lots are a credit to the people of the community, and all there is in this bill is the proposition whether you shall give it to all the people in the community in the towns and country or shall you give to the people of the country alone the benefit. That is all there is in the legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] I wish to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. Agree to it.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. I do not intend to agree at any time, now or in the future, to vote for any provision in any law in this House anywhere that will take any part of the reclamation fund out and divert it for any other purpose. Now, we did not issue $20,000,000 of bonds a year or two ago for the purpose of letting Tom, Dick, and Harry build bridges and schoolhouses and build waterworks and local plants for local communities, so that the money would never come back into this fund——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. MANN. In the Indian bills which we have passed, which come from the gentleman's committee, which proposed to use 20 per cent of the sale of town lots where towns are laid out in the Indian reservations, for local improvements, does the gentleman consider that is robbing the Indians of that much, or that it comes back in the increased sale of the lots?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's question is entirely pertinent, and the committee has considered precisely that phase of it to which the gentleman referred, and the theory of the committee has been this, that by giving 20 per cent to the local community it would encourage the people to bid a larger amount for the lots, so that in the last analysis perhaps the Indians would not lose anything, but let me call attention to the difference in this case. These town lots have already been sold——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Oh, no; a very small proportion.

Mr. FERRIS. What per cent?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Not over 2 per cent of the lots have been sold under the entire project.

Mr. FERRIS. They have already been appraised, have they not?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. A very limited appraisement so far.

Mr. FERRIS. They are almost all appraised or the prices fixed. This appraisement, of course, was made not knowing of any such provision, hence in the face of this legislation it would be an unwise appraisement and really would not represent the value of the lots.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Only in 10 towns out of 30 have lots been sold at all.

Mr. FERRIS. May I inquire of the gentleman how many will be sold by competitive bid and how many will be sold at a fixed price?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They are all sold upon the condition that they must bring as much as the appraisement. They are all sold upon competitive bid, and the minimum must be the appraised value. They can not be sold for less.

Mr. FERRIS. I am asking purely as a matter of information. Is it or is it not the fact that these town sites on a reclamation project are sold to the highest bidder as we do anything else?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. And that is true in every case?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that statement was made here and not contradicted before. The lots that were sold were sold by competitive bids. That was the statement made here the other day that that was the policy of the department.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think, so far as the lots that have already been sold, the theory of getting the bidders to bid more by reason of local improvements that are being constructed would be inoperative so far as those lots that are sold are concerned?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had happened to have heard the remarks I made on this subject the other day——

Mr. FERRIS. I regret no little I did not hear them——

Mr. MANN (continuing). I called attention to that very thing.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. FERRIS. I have only a moment's time—go ahead.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman unfortunately was not here when the debate was on. As to the town of Newell the sales were made under representations that the money would be used for betterments, and the lands brought something like $2,000 an acre under those circumstances.

Mr. FERRIS. Who had the right to make those representations?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They did that through some authorization——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. If I can proceed for five minutes more—I did not get the use of any of this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. I again repeat that I am opposed to the use of one penny of this money for any local purpose at any time or at any place, but if any amendment should be adopted at all—which, in my judgment, would be wrong—it ought not to exceed 20 per cent. There is no theory by which you can take more than that, and the theory is quite a poor one to take 20 per cent of it. I again repeat that the act of 1892, the reclamation act, was express in its terms that every cent of that money should be paid back to the Federal Government to build other reclamation projects. It is a revolving fund and no one ought to consent to let one cent of it get entirely away.

Let me call your attention to the inequality of such a proceeding as this. We will suppose Wyoming has four million to her credit and Oklahoma has six and one-half million dollars; even these large amounts will not irrigate scarcely any per cent at all of the lands to be irrigated in those States. What is the result? We irrigate for Mr. A to-day. Why? Because on the theory that on to-morrow he will pay back every penny, and we will irrigate for B to-morrow, and we will irrigate for him on the theory that he will pay back this fund, and we can irrigate for C. But if you begin to allow this fund to be used for public improvements—for schoolhouses, jails, paved streets, and to dig sanitary sewers—in a short time you will have a few people who have had their lands irrigated and you will have millions of acres of homesteaders' lands that can have no irrigation and who can raise nothing without irrigation. This will be a condition that no one will cherish, that all will be sorry for.

Mr. PADGETT. And what about the repayment of the bonds that are issued?

Mr. FERRIS. And the Federal Government will necessarily hold the sack on the $20,000,000 that is issued. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will be voted down.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is basing his opposition to this legislation entirely on a misunderstanding of fact. He is opposed to it because he fancies in some way the passage of this legislation will decrease or shorten the amount of the reclamation fund, when, as a matter of fact, it can have no such effect. The funds from the proceeds of these town lots now go to the project as a credit, and all that is proposed in this bill is to give a part of the credit to the people who live in the towns and a part to the people in the country. It does not shorten the reclamation fund one penny.

The gentleman from Oklahoma endeavors to draw an analogy between these towns and the Indian towns. In that case the Indian is the proprietor. He owns the land. The money is his. We take from him by main force 20 per cent of it and use it for the improvement of the town.

In the case before us these moneys are the property of the people of the community, and the question simply is whether we shall divide it equally in the community or unequally, as at present, and there can be no parallel drawn between these town sites and the town sites on Indian reservations. If it is proper to take from the Indian proprietor, without giving him any direct return, 20 per cent of that which is his, on the theory that you may increase the value of the balance, it is certainly proper that these funds which belong to all the people, their credit on the project, shall be equitably distributed—one-half to those living in the towns, who must support largely the schools for the entire surrounding territory, and one-half to the farmer in the surrounding region.

Mr. FERRIS. How can the gentleman advocate a theory that will not use the same discretion and the same judgment and the same economy for the Federal Government that is used for the Indian?

Mr. MONDELL. Again the gentleman falls into the slough that we are trying to pull him out of. The Federal Government has not any interest in these moneys. No part of them now belong to the Federal Government. It is a credit to the people in the project.

Mr. GARNER. Why on earth do you have to come to Congress to get permission to do this?

Mr. MONDELL. Again, another Texas gentleman falls into a pit-hole of error.

Mr. GARNER. From what I can understand from the gentleman from Wyoming, he is in that pit and he can not see anything else but that everybody else is in the same pit.

Mr. MONDELL. We have the gentleman's colleague [Mr. SMITH of Texas] now opposing the bill on diametrically different grounds from those on which he started to oppose it. We have gotten that far along, and we will have the same from the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] if he will give us time. It is a good thing to know about the facts in a case before arguing.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. You say that this money arising from the sale of town lots belongs to the people of the community?

Mr. MONDELL. It goes to the project owners as a credit; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Every dollar of it goes back to the Federal Government, and the Federal Government is the ultimate owner of it.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; the gentleman now rings on us——

Mr. SMITH of Texas. And the gentleman proposes to divert it to a purpose where it will stay and never come back to the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman rings on us the physical fact that the Government does have the dollars, and that the dollars as a physical fact might go into the United States Treasury. But as a legal fact, as a real proposition, no part of it now belongs to the Federal Government. It is the property of the people of the locality, and the only question before the House is how you will divide it among the people of the locality.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman is right in his theory——

Mr. MONDELL. It is no theory; it is a fact. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] admitted it this morning, after denying it the other evening.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I did not admit any such thing.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wyoming has asserted here, with all the force that he has, that the Federal Government has no interest in this fund at all. I ask the gentleman why the Federal Government has no interest in this, when in 1910 it was necessary to issue $20,000,000 in bonds to take up the various blunders of the Reclamation Service?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not see what the point of the gentleman's statement is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. How does the Government get their bonds?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment or two on this.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw my request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAKER. I believe that the committee ought to have the facts on which to base an argument. In other words, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], in speaking now upon the facts, ought to have some premises upon which to act. Now, the argument of the gentleman from Wyoming is not based upon the facts or upon the law as they actually exist. I want to read to the committee the law governing the disposition of the funds in these town sites. It says the funds are converted into the reclamation fund. The reclamation fund is all the money that is obtained from the sale of public lands. The bond issue of $20,000,000 and the payment of the money that is obtained from the settlers for their lands, and the water rights when they pay it back to the Government, all goes in under the reclamation fund. The gentleman from Wyoming says——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In a moment. The gentleman from Wyoming says that the proceeds from the sale of these town lots do not go into the reclamation fund. That is not the fact. That is not the law. It is not practiced that way. It could not be practiced that way, because it is in direct contravention of the statute. I want to read it to you. In the act approved April 16, 1910 (34 Stat., 116), occurs this provision:

> Reclamation funds may be used to defray the necessary expenses of appraisement and sale, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the reclamation fund.

In the act approved June 27, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 519), there is this provision:

> And the proceeds of all sales of town sites shall be covered into the reclamation fund.

Now, turning to the report of the committee as to the money, we find from their own report that $219,793.55 from the sale of town lots has been conveyed into the reclamation fund. That money is in the general reclamation fund to-day, and the purpose of this bill to-day is to reach into this sacred fund and draw out over $110,000 and divert it from the purpose of reclaiming the arid lands and putting it into local town sites for city jails and for other improvements and other purposes. [Applause.]

I want to say to the Members of this House that the very object and purpose of the Congress and the people in maintaining this reclamation act is to see to it that the money that goes into this trust fund shall be used for the maintenance of the Reclamation Service and shall be kept a sacred fund to be expended for those purposes and all matters incident thereto and the works and improvements and repairs occasioned thereby and that as the money comes back it shall be again used for those purposes. The argument of the gentleman from Wyoming is based upon wrong premises and upon a wrong theory, and therefore his argument of necessity must fall.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. The question now recurs on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, page 2, line 12, by striking out the words "one half" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 per cent."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly evident that this amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma—who I am sorry has not had the benefit of the entire argument in this case, but has jumped into it with the vehemence, the enthusiasm, and the energy with which he devotes himself to all public questions—is simply an effort to kill the bill. The gentleman from Oklahoma is a distinguished member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Therefore the gentleman knows that as to Indian town sites, although the Indian has no interest in the sale of the lots further than to get good prices for them, and where the Government is the trustee of a sacred trust, to wit, the Indian funds, it has been the habit of Congress, on the recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to devote 20 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of town lots on Indian town sites to general improvements and betterments. That is taking money from the Indians to improve the town under the idea that eventually it will come back in higher prices for the lots, and I think that idea is justified. But the position of the gentleman from Oklahoma in seeking to defeat this bill is inconsistent. This is proposed to be done for the benefit of all parties interested, the farmers in the neighborhood of the town, and the people in the town who buy the lots.

These gentlemen who are opposing this bill have become very much interested and have rushed loudly to the defense of this fund because they say it is taking something from the farmers on the outside of these towns. They seem to forget entirely that if this town site was not there, and if this land was not laid out into town lots, no money would come into the reclamation fund either locally or generally. Any homesteader could take his share of the 640 acres as a homestead and nothing whatever would come into the reclamation fund.

Mr. RAKER. Could not the same argument be made in a case where you expend a large sum of money to develop a water power that is worth millions of dollars?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The cases are not parallel at all. Here is a case of land which could be taken as a homestead, which is reserved for the building of a town, but whatever the settlers get out of it is that much clear gain. There is no parallel between the two cases at all. Certainly this amendment to reduce this appropriation from 50 per cent to 5 per cent is only an effort to kill the bill. The friends of the measure, who defeated the motion to strike out the enacting clause, should for the same reason sustain the bill and defeat this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FERRIS) there were—ayes 39, noes 62.

Mr. FERRIS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FERRIS and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 63.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. FERRIS was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "one-half" and insert "20 per cent"; and I want to be heard just a moment on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, page 2, line 12, by striking out "one-half" and inserting "20 per cent."

Mr. MANN. Make it 25 per cent.

Mr. LOBECK. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has the floor.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested—and the proposition undoubtedly has some friends here—that this ought to be 25 per cent instead of 20 per cent. Now, at first blush it looks as though there is not much difference between 25 per cent and 20 per cent, and it may seem to some gentlemen that we ought to make it 25 per cent. There is, however, a well-defined reason why we should not make it 25 per cent, and the difference is greater than the mere difference in percentage.

The facts are these: In the State of Oklahoma, the State of South Dakota, and in other States where there are Indian tribes Indian town sites have been opened, and there is a provision in each bill that 20 per cent of the net proceeds from the sale of town lots shall be used for local improvements. The theory of this sort of legislation has always been that it would induce bidders to bid more for the lots, and I think that has proved to be true.

But if you make this 25 per cent it would be a breach of the rule and a raising of the limit, so to speak, until the next bill that comes in from the Indian Committee will in all probability be 25 per cent instead of 20 per cent. I want to say that I have supported amendments in this House in the past to have 20 per cent of the net proceeds taken from the Indian fund for town-site improvement purposes. That has worked pretty well.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman explain why, if he is in favor of 20 per cent taken from the Indian fund for town-site purposes, he sought in his previous amendment to reduce it to 5 per cent?

Mr. FERRIS. I thought I answered that before, but I am very glad to answer it again. I do not think a penny should be taken from the reclamation fund. I believe 20 per cent is a lack of wisdom and 50 per cent is a lack of a great deal more wisdom, but as there has been an amendment voted down to strike out the enacting clause and the amendment providing for 5 per cent has been voted down, 20 per cent seems to be the best we can get. I think probably 25 per cent would be agreed to, but it cuts deeper than it appears to on the surface, because there will be an effort to raise it in Indian town sites to 25 per cent, and that ought not to be done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides "that one-half the net proceeds heretofore or hereafter received from the sale of town sites shall be used in the construction, maintenance, and operation," and so forth, of these municipal functions. I had expected to offer an amendment to reduce the percentage and to strike out the word "heretofore" and to cut off the maintenance and operation, so that the bill would only provide that the percentage which would be carried in the bill received from the sale of town sites hereafter sold, which would probably bring a larger price, because of the fact that it could be used for the construction of these improvements for municipal purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I wondered if the gentleman in his amendment to strike out the word "heretofore," which undoubtedly ought to be done, would agree to have the words inserted "or hereafter sold at competitive bids at public auction," so there would be no chance of letting them go in and appraise the land and divest it of the feature of competition?

Mr. MANN. I think that would be a proper proposition. Of course, I do not know whether such a proposition as I have suggested will prevail in the House, but if that should be done, or something like it, it seems to me we could afford to make the amount 25 per cent. It is true that heretofore the Indian bills that have passed have carried 20 per cent. It is also true after experience in the sale of Indian town sites, it has been stated to the House by gentlemen on both sides acquainted with the facts, that the lots, in fact, were usually sold for more than enough to make up the amount deducted, or at least the amount that was deducted. I think we can afford to pay 25 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of the lots hereafter. To test the sense of the House I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma by making it read, in place of "one-half," "25 per cent of."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by substituting for 20 per cent the words "25 per cent of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 39 ayes and 25 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma as amended by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the word "heretofore."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the words "heretofore or."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. So far as the particular town site of Newell is concerned, the Members of the House who did me the honor to hear the remarks I made know the facts involved. The department started out at the beginning with the idea that the original law gave them authority to use all of the fund that would come from the sale of the town lots for the betterment of the town. They later discovered that it was not a correct interpretation of the law; but as to the sale of the town lots in Newell, they were sold on the representation not of an arbitrary amount of 20 or 25 per cent, but that the whole was to be used in the betterment of the town.

I have in my hand here one of the circulars or booklets compiled under the direction of the Reclamation Service, which contains a statement to this effect, and it would amount to nothing less than obtaining money under false pretenses if that money, or a liberal portion of it, is not used in that way. I read from page 9 of this booklet:

A new town, for which a section has been reserved, is to be built by the Government in the center of the irrigated district. The Government will conduct the sale of lots, and with the proceeds streets will be laid out, a sewage system constructed, and every possible measure taken to improve and beautify the city.

That literature went over the United States. It brought people from various States. I know an instance where a man sold out his business in the State of Indiana and came there, relying upon the representations in this circular.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did not the Government authorities use the money as they advertised they would use it?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They discovered, before they got further along, that it would require a strained, if not an incorrect, interpretation of the town-site law to do it. There is no time to go into a discussion of that mistake now; but that was a mistake on their part.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, what is the document from which the gentleman is reading, and who issued it? Did the Government have anything to do with it?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes. On the front of the booklet is the following:

BELLE FOURCHE IRRIGATION PROJECT, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Information compiled by the United States Reclamation Service, October 1, 1909.

On the back of it it says:

Further information may be obtained by addressing any of the following:

"Project Engineer, United States Reclamation Service, Bellefourche, S. Dak.

"Statistician, United States Reclamation Service, Washington, D. C.

"Information bureau, United States Reclamation Service, 777 Federal Building, Chicago."

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman states, then, that that was issued with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the Government of the United States?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am sure the gentleman will decline to state that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The Reclamation Service has sought to relieve themselves, not from the responsibility of its issuance, for it evidently was issued, but responsibility for all of its statements. But, as far as the public is concerned, it is a statement that went out, and land right there on the prairie that any homesteader could have taken but for this reservation sold for $41,000 for less than 10 acres upon those assurances.

Mr. MADDEN. Was anybody ever called to account by any Government official for circulating these false statements as to what disposition would be made of the funds?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It has never been repudiated. They have expressed regret that it got into that shape.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How much of this town site has actually been sold?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Out of the 640 acres in all 4 per cent has been sold, and that brought the $41,000. The balance of it, or 96 per cent, remains still to be sold.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman that the Reclamation Service wholly repudiates that circular. They say they are not responsible for it, but it was circulated by some railroad company, and they absolutely repudiate any responsibility for it whatever.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, we went into this on general debate, when we had unlimited time, and I read a great deal on the subject from the testimony and otherwise. A succinct and fair statement would be this: The attitude of the Reclamation Service is that they permitted an agent of the service to prepare this literature; that probably their attention was not called specifically to this statement, separate from others, until it was in fact public, but they did know of its publication very soon after it was issued.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think the Federal Government ought to be bound by circulars or advertisements placed in newspapers by railroads and boomers?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is not placed in newspapers by boomers or others.

Mr. FERRIS. What is the document?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is a reclamation document.

Mr. FERRIS. The chairman of the committee says that a department came to his committee and repudiated the document.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for four minutes more in which to complete my statement.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Is it true, however, that these 10 acres were sold for the $40,000, and that there has been nothing sold since that time, and that the money goes into the fund?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Absolutely true.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me that settles it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask for four minutes more in order that we may have a correct understanding of this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, then I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment may close in six minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. I object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman reads from or what he has in his hand, but whatever the facts may be or whatever representations were made to them, they did it in the face of the reclamation act, which reads as follows on page 15 of the act:

> And the proceeds of all sales of town sites shall be covered into the reclamation fund.

Now, whatever the gentleman may read from or whatever may have been represented to the settlers through the newspapers, you can not bind the Federal Government by it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the gentleman will read the whole act, he will see that in the act of 1906 there was certain implied authority given to the Secretary of the Interior as to reclamation improvements. It is very vague and there is no time to debate that here, but this is the fact: A field representative of the Reclamation Service, with the knowledge of the service, prepared this booklet.

I do not know what the fact was, whether or not the chief of the service here in Washington saw the booklet before it was prepared or not, but that it was prepared under the knowledge and direction of authority there can be no doubt. It was later discovered that that was an unfortunate statement, but the mischief had been done and this literature had gone out to the country. I have a telegram from the Newell Commercial Club of date of January 14, 1913, in which they say this:

> Booklet relative to Belle Fourche project was distributed here entirely by Reclamation Service and not by railroad. Distributed all over the country by thousands by Reclamation Service.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think even if there be a particular case where there is a hardship that is the reason for providing by a law that will cover 32 projects, a permanent law——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman will notice that of the thirty-two-odd towns but a very small proportion have been sold. Two towns in Idaho brought $135,000; six towns in Montana only $23,000; the single town of Newell, S. Dak., project, brought $41,103, and the Wyoming project only $17,000. Now, probably 98 per cent of all those lands remain to be sold, and by doing justice to those we are not in any way harming anybody. In my State a prominent citizen of the State capital of Pierre is under prosecution by the Federal authorities and is now facing a judgment and decree and a sentence to the Government penitentiary, based upon the charge of selling lots by representing through literature that a street railway ran across some suburban lots, an addition, when it was not there. He was prosecuted and convicted of making those false representations, and he is facing a penitentiary punishment to-day. Here is an instance of a Government project in which it must make its representation good or the citizens of my State and your State have given up their money under false pretenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment shall close in 10 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. I want time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] to have five minutes, and the gentleman from Wyoming to have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman had better not do that. I want to make some remarks myself.

Mr. MANN. We have spent two Wednesdays on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment shall close in 10 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think I shall have to object to that.

Mr. MANN. I move that the debate on the pending amendment be closed in 10 minutes. How much time does the gentleman from Oklahoma want?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know how much I may want.

Mr. MANN. Two minutes will do, will it not? I am not asking any time. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment close in 11 minutes, 5 minutes to be given to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I will do without any time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment close in 11 minutes, 5 minutes of the time to be given to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I can not speak on this subject with authority. I merely rise to suggest the state of facts presented to the House, if I understand that state of facts.

The first fact is that these public lands belong to the whole people of this country, and their benefits and advantages should be distributed as far as practicable to the whole people of the country. Taking the disposition of these lands up with that end in view, I understand irrigation legislation has been passed under the terms of which Congress first supplies the capital for the irrigation project and then fixes upon the lands that are profited by irrigation a system of liens to the extent of the benefits that accrue. In determining that disposition of the public lands Congress was doubtless influenced by the fact that agriculture is the mainstay of the Nation, and that any policy that would improve the agriculture of the Nation would result in a profit to all. Accordingly I am advised that when town lots are sold, town values themselves being results of irrigation values and the irrigation policy, the law provides that the product of the sale of town lots shall be applied to the reduction of this lien indebtedness of the irrigation farmer. That is, to the extent the project is successful in creating land values which the Government sells, those values shall be applied to lightening the burdens of the farmer in reducing his liens and thus further promoting the spirit and success of agriculture in the country. That may be called a subsidy to farming and to improve farming, but it is a subsidy that perhaps the majority of the people of the country would sustain at any time.

Now, it is proposed, however, that the subsidy given to the irrigation farmer shall be half taken away from the farmer and handed over to the real-estate owner of the town. Now, I want to say in this presence if there is one citizen, if there is one proprietary interest under the sun that should be the last to be subsidized by the Government it is the landowner in a town or city. What is he now? He is an idler upon the face of the earth. His land he leaves vacant—a garden of dirt and weeds—while his industrious fellow citizens build a town around him and make his land valuable. This measure proposes to further subsidize an owner like that. It proposes to subsidize him in the measure it may reduce his burden of supporting the schools of his town, paying for the sewers of his town and those other common municipal conveniences in the way of public utilities. I do not think this country would sustain as a public policy the taking away of half of the aid now granted to this irrigation farmer and handing it over to the speculator in town values in any part of the Republic, and it is in order to have this statement of facts before the House, if it be a correct statement of facts—and I think it is—that I have made in this brief address. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, how unfortunate it is that the opponents of this measure can not agree as to the facts. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] still insist that these are not credits to the reclamation project, although they can find out their error by inquiring at the reclamation office. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], however, who always goes to the foundation of things in a way, has learned the truth, and he is opposing it for an entirely different reason than that given by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from California, and based upon an entirely different statement of facts.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is correct as to facts. He says, however, that none of the benefits should go to the people in the towns. We believe that what is proposed in this bill would be fair, equitable, and just, because the people of the town furnish much of the school facilities for the people of the surrounding region, and they are as much entitled to some of the benefits of the increase of values as the farmers, some of whom live 30 to 40 miles away, and who have little to do with increasing the values in the town.

The sum has been reduced by an amendment to 25 per cent. It is now proposed still further to reduce it by having the bill apply only to future receipts. Why, in the case of the town site of Newell the town lots were sold with the understanding that all the money was to be used, and while that representation was not made to the same extent or in the same way in my State, yet there was a general understanding when the people bought these lots at a high price out there on the raw, bald prairie that they were to get back some of the high prices they were paying for the improvement of the town; and if they shall have no aid now until more town lots shall have been sold, the Lord only knows when they are to receive any benefits, because the lots have been sold quite recently up to the present necessities of the town, and possibly up to the necessities of the town for two or three or four years to come, and now those people who paid high prices, with the understanding that a part of the money was to be used for the improvement of the town, would be robbed of the benefits to which they are entitled and of which they will be deprived for years to come.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to advocate the adoption of the amendment by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which, in effect, keeps this bill from applying to town-lot sales that have already been made, where the money has already been covered into the Treasury.

If the gentleman's amendment is not adopted, they will not only receive 25 per cent on what they sell in the future but also on what has been sold in the past, so that I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is fair and should be adopted.

The only reason why this legislation was ever adopted for the Indian tribes was to stimulate bidding. In the town where I live they sold an addition to the town where 20 per cent went to the people for improvements and the auctioneer, in auctioning off the lots, would say, "Eighty dollars for the Indian and $20 for the people of Lawton; $4 for the Indians and $1 for the people of Lawton." In that way they really did some good and made the lots bring a larger sum than they would otherwise have brought. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is not adopted, there will be no way of stimulating bids and getting a larger price for the land and it will be, in a way, the taking out of the Treasury and out of the reclamation fund moneys that have already been placed there. I think the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] suggests that it will be taking money from the farmer that we agreed to leave with him, and I believe that is true also. I did not, however, deal with that phase of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the amendment offered to make this amount 25 per cent instead of one-half applies on page 2, line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LOBECK. An amendment should also be made in line 3 of page 1, so as to make it read "25 per cent of" instead of "one-half." I move that the words "25 per cent of" be inserted in line 3, page 1, in lieu of the words "one-half."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the words "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof the words "25 per cent of."

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 4, after the word "lots," by inserting the words "sold at public auction."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 4, by inserting after the word "lots" the words "sold at public auction."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the necessity for that amendment will be apparent to all from the debate that we have just had on the subject. If these lots are to be sold by appraisement, there can be no reason on earth why the local citizens should have part of the funds derived from the sale; but if they are to be sold at public auction, then a part of the funds will go to the local community, and it will stimulate the bidding. I hope the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand that under the provisions of the present law these town lots are all appraised and then sold at public auction, provided they bring more than the appraised price? If they do not bring more than the appraised price, they are not sold at all. Now, if the gentleman's amendment has any effect at all it will provide for the sale of the lots, even if they do not bring more than $1 apiece.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. This would not repeal the present law.

Mr. MONDELL. If it did not, what purpose will it serve?

Mr. FERRIS. It is not compulsory that any of the lots shall be sold.

Mr. MONDELL. That is exactly the effect of the gentleman's amendment as to lots that are ordered, although I do not think he meant that.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think it has that effect at all. On the contrary, the department has the power to offer the lots in the same way that it is now necessary to offer them. The fact that there is an appraisement merely limits the minimum price at which the land can be sold, and it is up to the department to get all they can for the lots. If a lot does not bring the appraised price, it is turned back and held by the Federal Government. No harm is done. If the lots bring the appraisement or more, they are sold, and the local community gets 25 per cent of the amount received. There can not be anything in the argument of the gentleman. This provision repeals nothing. It only makes that portion of the law apply where the lots are sold at public auction, and it ought not to apply elsewhere.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the present town-site law as carried out by the department provides for the sale of these lots at public auction at an appraised minimum price. The result is that unless the lots bring a fair price they are not sold at all.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to have the lots sold at any price that they would bring, because he does not provide in his amendment for a minimum price.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. You can not sell them now unless you get the appraised price, can you?

Mr. MONDELL. No; but under the gentleman's amendment they will be sold at whatever price is offered, because the gentleman provides for their sale at auction without any other limitation.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. The necessary interpretation of that is that they shall be sold at auction. If they are offered, they must be sold at any old price.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is entirely in error. From my practical experience all over my State in the last 20 years, during a part of which time it was a Territory, I can say that they have sold lots at public auction after they have been appraised, and if a lot did not bring the appraisement it was turned back and retained by the Government; but if it brought the appraisement or more, then the lot was sold; and they almost always bring more than the appraisement.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is the gentleman's theory——

Mr. FERRIS. That is the fact.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is the gentleman's theory in regard to his amendment, then it is absolutely unnecessary, because that is what is done under the town-site law now. It is not amended in this particular by this act. The town lots are appraised and sold at auction at what they will bring above the appraised price, and if they do not bring more than the appraised price they are not sold at all, whereas under the gentleman's amendment any lot offered would have to be sold at whatever price it would bring.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. This is simply an effort to give speculators a chance to buy lots at whatever they may bring, and if the Secretary of the Interior should be unwise enough to offer all of these town sites at one time speculators would come in and buy up a whole town site for a mere song.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not want to be contentious, but does the gentleman think my amendment repeals that appraisement law?

Mr. MONDELL. If it does not repeal it, then it is without any force or effect and is senseless.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, not at all. The gentleman is in error worse than I ever knew him to be before.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment has no force, and therefore there is no rhyme or reason in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, after line 15, page 2, by inserting the following proviso: "Provided, That one-half of the proceeds received from sales heretofore made of lots in the Newell town site in South Dakota shall be reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a portion of the reclamation town-site fund of the said town."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that identical proposition has been voted on; that it was involved in the same town-site proposition along with others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the amendment is in order and will overrule the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, as I have already reminded the committee, I know nothing of other town-site sales, but justice can not be done to the people who have been induced to purchase town-site lots and made purchases without an amendment of this kind, and in this case only half justice will be done. I will read again the representations upon which these town-site lots were sold, or, rather, misrepresentations:

The Government will conduct the sale of lots and with the proceeds streets will be laid out, a sewage system constructed, and other means usually taken to improve and beautify the city.

It is not represented that a portion of the proceeds will be taken, but all the proceeds. I may say that when this idea of using the town-site fund for the betterment and improvement was first broached it was for a time considered that all the proceeds of the sales should be used for the betterment and improvement of the town. It seems to me that in general legislation, these facts being before Congress, it will save the necessity of special bills being brought in to incorporate that proviso in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The gentleman says that it was supposed that the Reclamation Service had the power to make these improvements some time ago. Will the gentleman refer me to any law from which any such inference could be drawn?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think it was a strained interpretation, but if the gentleman will look at one of the sections in the original law of 1906 he will find where it authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to take certain steps toward a water system for the town.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. The sale of water rights?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No; to provide water rights for the town and, I suppose, get remuneration; but, as I say, the interpretation was not justified, as I have said many times. It seems to me that we ought at least to do half justice to these people who have paid fabulous prices for their lots on the representation that the whole of this fund was to go to the improvement of the municipality, and who were induced not only to purchase, but to put the rest of their little accumulations into the stores and buildings to improve and make the town. We would be doing scant justice if we made good the representations to the extent of dividing the money already received for that purpose. It is no justice to these people who gave their money and paid such high prices to tell them if any more lots are sold 25 per cent will be used for the betterment and improvement of the city.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Who made these representations to which the gentleman alludes?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is getting to be a good deal like the puzzle of "How old is Ann?" Every time a new gentleman comes into the Chamber we have to go all over the story again. I know that the gentleman from Tennessee has been otherwise engaged in important public business. The representations were prepared under the authority of the Reclamation Service, by a field representative in its employ, and at a salary, in the city of Chicago. The expense of printing these circulars was paid by the railroad company, although there is nothing on the document to show that the railroad company was interested in it. The distribution was under the direction of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. GARRETT. I have understood it was made in some such way, but has not the Reclamation Service denied any responsibility for it?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No; they have denied nothing that I have stated. "The Reclamation Service" is a broad statement. If the gentleman means the Director of the service personally, his statement is that he was not aware that all of the statements were put in there, and that probably is true, but that the man was authorized to prepare the literature as an agent of the department no one disputes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota) there were 30 ayes and 47 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 12, page 2, by striking out the word "heretofore" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago there was an amendment adopted to line 12, on page 2. I am under the impression that that entire paragraph ought to be stricken out of the bill. I would ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] to give me his attention. Ought not the last sentence of the first section of the bill, beginning with the word "and," in line 11, on page 2, to be stricken out? It relates only to proceeds heretofore received. Does not the other part of the bill provide that proceeds hereafter received shall go into the reclamation town-site fund?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the previous part of this section provides that.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] has now offered an amendment to strike out "heretofore," in line 12, page 2, and insert "hereafter." That paragraph, as I understand it, only related to funds heretofore received.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is right.

Mr. MANN. And it is not necessary to change it. The whole paragraph ought to go out.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Was there an amendment adopted to line 3, on page 1, of the bill?

Mr. MANN. There was.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will withdraw his amendment and move to strike out that whole sentence.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and offer the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, beginning with line 12 and running to the end of the paragraph, strike out the following:

"And the aforesaid one-half of the net proceeds heretofore received from such sales shall be forthwith transferred from the reclamation fund to the reclamation town-site fund, hereby created."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the committee amendment, in line 3, page 1, was agreed to before the word "heretofore" was stricken out. I ask unanimous consent to change that amendment so as to leave out of it the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the amendment included the word "or."

Mr. MANN. The amendment, as a matter of fact, did not include it. It would not have been in order to include it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that that is the case.

Mr. MANN. The words "or hereafter" were inserted. Has the Clerk got the word "or" in or out?

The CHAIRMAN. The word "or" is out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 7, page 2, by striking out the words "maintenance and operation."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the words "maintenance and operation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, from time to time, expend, or cause to be expended, from said reclamation town-site fund, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of schoolhouses, water, and sewer systems, and other municipal improvements in each of such town sites a sum not greater than one-half the net proceeds theretofore received from such sales of lots therein plus one-half the estimated net proceeds to be thereafter received from such sales. The buildings and works so constructed may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be operated and maintained by him or under his authority, and the expense thereof paid from the reclamation town-site fund, pending the organization of a municipal corporation or corporations qualified to operate and maintain the same, and upon the organization of such municipal corporation or corporations the Secretary of the Interior may transfer to such corporation or corporations the said buildings or works, or both, as the case may be, and the lands or easements necessary to their use, and thereafter said Secretary shall be free of all duty or responsibility with respect thereto: Provided, That whenever the said buildings, works, lands, easements, or any part thereof, shall cease to be used by such corporation or corporations exclusively for the purposes for which they were respectively transferred, the ownership and control thereof shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That in no case shall the operation and maintenance of such buildings and works by or under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior be continued for a longer period than five years after the construction thereof.

The following committee amendments were severally reported by the Clerk and severally agreed to:

Page 2, line 20, insert the word "light" at the beginning of the line, and after the word "other" insert the words "school and."

Page 2, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "plus one-half the estimated net proceeds to be thereafter received from such sales."

Page 3, line 4, strike out the word "corporations" and insert the words "school district."

Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "corporations" and insert the words "school district."

Page 3, in lines 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, strike out "That whenever the said buildings, works, lands, easements, or any part thereof, shall cease to be used by such corporation or corporations exclusively for the purposes for which they were respectively transferred, the ownership and control thereof shall revert to the United States: And provided further."

Page 3, line 20, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "two," and strike out the words "construction thereof" and insert the words "organization of a municipal corporation or school district as aforesaid."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 19, page 2, the words "maintenance and operation." I do that for the purpose of saying that the whole paragraph ought to be stricken out and the whole bill ought to be referred to the committee from whence it came. Section 2 goes on the theory of the granting to a corporation or corporations for school districts, and the whole paragraph relates to maintenance and operation, which has been stricken out in the first section of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not quite correct.

Mr. FERRIS. Almost. I may not be quite correct, but in five or six distinct places the section refers to maintenance and operation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I can at least understand each other. The gentleman proposes to strike out "maintenance and operation" there. I think it ought to go out, but that is the only authority contained in the bill for the construction of plants. Then, if the gentleman will move to strike out all of the section after the word "the," in line 24, it will cover what he has in his mind. It is very easy to cover it.

Mr. FERRIS. The suggestion of the gentleman is, beginning with the word "the," in line 24, to strike out the remaining paragraph, and then in line 19 to strike out the words "maintenance and operation."

Mr. MANN. And in line 22, change one-half to 25 per cent.

Mr. FERRIS. What condition will the paragraph be in then?

Mr. MANN. That will authorize the Secretary to construct these municipal improvements.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not he have that power granted him by the first paragraph?

Mr. MANN. No; the first section provides for reserving the fund, 25 per cent, and covering into the town-site reclamation fund.

Mr. FERRIS. But I call the gentleman's attention to the language in line 6, which reads like this: "To be used in the construction," and so forth.

Mr. MANN. True; but this will authorize him to construct in his discretion these municipal improvements, which I think is necessary to have in the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. GARNER. It is evident from the discussion here that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH], or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] are somewhat in doubt as to what this bill does or what it does not do.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has not been here——

Mr. GARNER. I have been here long enough to find out these gentlemen do not understand each other.

Mr. MANN. I think we understand each other pretty well.

Mr. GARNER. Well, the gentleman from Oklahoma did not seem to understand the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman did entirely.

Mr. GARNER. It occurred to me we had not started very far on this bill so far and it is very nearly 5 o'clock, and if the gentleman had a week until next Wednesday to go over the bill, if we should recommit the bill to the committee and get some intelligent legislation in here, we might be able to get through on next Wednesday.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly the section has to be changed in many respects if not almost entirely stricken out, but I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has digested the thing to the extent that we can by making two or three amendments correct it. I move to amend line 19——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I want to modify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 19, page 2, to strike out the words "maintenance and operation," so it will conform to paragraph 1.

Mr. RAKER. Before passing that, lines 16 to 24 provide for funds heretofore obtained, and we had disposed of that part of the bill. Did the gentleman notice that?

Mr. FERRIS. No; there is no "heretofore."

Mr. RAKER. Theretofore.

Mr. FERRIS. There is no "theretofore" there.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; in line 22.

Mr. FERRIS. I am going to move to strike out that.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Now I move to amend, in line 22, page 2, by striking out the word "one-half" and inserting in lieu thereof "25 per cent of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, strike out the word "one-half" and insert in lieu thereof "25 per cent of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "theretofore," in line 22, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, line 2, strike out the word "theretofore" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thereafter."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the gentleman ought to consider that a moment before offering it to the committee. The words are in there so that the Secretary shall not anticipate funds and expend them before they are in the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. It does relate to the expenditure. He receives 25 per cent of the money before he makes the expenditure.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think if he does not make that change it does not modify——

Mr. MANN. It relates to that time.

Mr. FERRIS. They may be correct about that, and I withdraw the amendment.

Now, I move to strike out, beginning with the word "the," in line 24, page 2, the rest of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, beginning with the word "the," strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has considered that and its effects sufficiently to satisfy himself, if not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that it is not a good thing? If we can get this bill in shape to satisfy the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that will be all there is of it. But the gentleman will notice the section so far as we have gone has provided only for the construction of these municipal improvements. Does not the gentleman think that some provision of what should be done after construction should be in there?

Mr. FERRIS. It is the intention to turn them over to the local community as soon as constructed.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. So far as the maintenance is concerned, I agree with the gentleman. But here it provides that the improvements shall be turned over to the corporation. Now, the gentleman is leaving nothing in the way of provision as to what shall be done with these improvements after they are constructed.

Mr. FERRIS. They become a part of the municipality and become municipal improvements. If the gentleman thinks that an amendment is necessary reciting that the department shall formally turn them over to the municipality, I would not think there would be any objection to that, but certainly after we have amended paragraph 1 as we have amended it we should not go on in section 2 and provide for maintenance.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I quite agree with you. You have already stricken that out.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think that the balance of the paragraph, beginning with the word "the" on line 24 and extending over on to page 3, all relates to maintenance and operation?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Oh, not at all.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was going to suggest, when this amendment was agreed to, that the gentleman should offer as an amendment following the sentence that is left in the bill the following:

And the Secretary of the Interior may transfer to the municipal corporation or school district the said buildings or works, or both, as the case may be, and the lands or easements necessary to their use, and thereafter said Secretary shall be free of all duty or responsibility with respect thereto.

Mr. FERRIS. That accomplishes it, I think.

Mr. MANN. It makes it simpler to strike all out and reinsert that proposition.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman is going to do it, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] moved that the committee rise. That is a privileged motion, and the Chair is not obliged to count.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. It is now 5 o'clock, and the bill has some important features to it that may require consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] withdrew his motion when the Chair proposed to count. The gentleman from Oklahoma now moves that the committee rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FERRIS. A division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 53.

Mr. BOEHNE. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman, on the motion to rise.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FERRIS and Mr. MANN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 62.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 101 Members present, a quorum of the committee. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "therein," in line 23, page 2, the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 23, after the word "therein," insert the following: "And the Secretary of the Interior may transfer to the municipal corporation or school district the said buildings or works, or both, as the case may be, and the lands or easements necessary to their use, and thereafter said Secretary shall be free of all duty or responsibility with respect thereto."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois explain what he means by that transfer. Transfer of what?

Mr. MANN. These improvements that have been made—school buildings and electric-light plant, or whatever it is.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but the title is already in the school district under the original reclamation act.

Mr. MANN. The title of the building is not in the school district.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but if the building is built on land that belongs to the municipality for that purpose, undoubtedly it belongs to the municipality. I am asking for information. Where does the Secretary get the right to transfer? What is he transferring?

Mr. MANN. He transfers the improvements. He obtains control of the improvements, at least, while he is making them, and when he is through he transfers them. He must have the authority of law to do it. This gives him the authority.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the word "transfer," as used in that amendment, mean the same as "turn over"? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Whatever is necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask in good faith, Does it mean the same as "turn over"?

Mr. MANN. I take the language that I offered from the bill itself. I suppose it covers turning over and also, if necessary, the issuance of the patent. I do not know whether that is necessary or not. That is the custom. This is authority that is necessary for the Secretary to have.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the first section refers to town sites and not municipal corporations, and the second section adopted says nothing about corporations, but only about town sites. I did not understand from the gentleman's amendment that he provides for transferring to any other than the municipal corporation.

Mr. MANN. Or school districts.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Or school districts. Now, suppose there is no organization when these works are completed. No transfer can be made.

Mr. MANN. It can not be transferred until there is one, but meanwhile under the bill as amended it does not operate, so there will be one, I apprehend, immediately.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. There may not be.

Mr. MANN. If there is not, nobody is hurt.

Mr. RAKER. I ask to have that amendment reported again, for information.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that if there is anything in virtue of the reclamation act and the town-site law, the title is to be transferred before any municipal work is had upon these places at all. In other words, a piece of land is set apart for school purposes, and before the Secretary does any work that land is transferred to the municipality. Otherwise the Secretary of the Interior is directing a building for a municipality upon the public domain.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not claim that when the town site is laid out there is any municipality? What he intended to say, I take it, was that certain tracts of ground are reserved for municipal purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. MANN. There is no municipality.

Mr. RAKER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. There is no patent issued to them.

Mr. RAKER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The Government goes ahead and constructs a building. Certainly there must be some authority given to the Secretary of the Interior to turn that over to the municipality whenever it is organized.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Illinois had incorporated in his amendment a little more of the language that is already contained in the section, his proposed amendment would have been more clear. He refers to a municipal corporation, but he omits the preceding reference to the corporation which is in lines 3 and 4, on page 3—

The organization of a municipal corporation or school district qualified to operate and maintain the same,

If the gentleman had included those words, his meaning would have been more clear.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that if under the town-site bill the Secretary should set aside a tract of land for school purposes and make a patent for it or issue a deed, which is the same as a patent, or for public parks and other necessary tracts for these various purposes, that being done in advance of the organization of the municipality, you must remember that the Secretary is spending the people's money there upon Government land before the municipality has determined what particular tract they want. It seems to me that this ought to be specified in the first instance before you permit the building to be made by the Secretary or the improvement to be done, not knowing that it will ever go to the municipality.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. There is no embarrassment whatever in that.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman has read the town-site law recently, he recalls that the Secretary now makes reservations for public purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. He would undoubtedly erect these buildings on the reservation so made. If the legislation is passed, the committee having stricken out of the bill the provisions for the transfer, provisions like those contained in the gentleman's amendment are essential.

Mr. RAKER. Why, no; I have read the act, and read it again to-day. The Secretary is directed to reserve these plats of ground for the purpose named, and convey to the proper authorities the necessary title to be held in trust for these town purposes. That is done before any agreement is made whatever.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to transfer covers the whole subject. If there is a legal and equitable title, that goes. If, on the other hand, there is only a building and improvements, that is transferred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more, that we may get this matter straightened out.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this amendment to be added to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. It is added as a proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:
"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not be authorized to construct any such improvement upon any town site until after the municipal corporation is organized thereon."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chair whether or not an amendment to that is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I do not think the Secretary of the Interior ought to be authorized to construct improvements upon these town sites until there is a reasonable number of people in the town, and until they have shown their good faith toward building up the town by organizing a municipal corporation qualified to take charge of the improvement when constructed. I think that unless an amendment of this sort is adopted we may find ourselves in the condition that these improvements will be made in some instances and the town site may prove a failure, and after the work is done the people in the town will not be sufficiently interested to organize a municipal government and take over the property after the Government has constructed it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. They will not have any money to spend on town sites in the way of public improvements unless enough people buy the lots at sufficiently high prices to raise the money. If these people contribute 100 per cent in the purchase of the lots, or if they raise any sort of a sum at all, it seems to me that they show interest enough to have the schoolhouse built at once and the sidewalks constructed, and that is about all you can do at the best. They ought not to have to wait for a year, but should be entitled to have it done at once, "Johnny on the spot"; that is what will make the lots sell for that much more.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important of the many amendments offered in this bill, and I do not think it ought to be voted upon without a quorum of the committee being present, and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that that is dilatory.

Mr. GARNER. Well, we have had several amendments and considerable business transacted since the ascertainment of a quorum.

Mr. MANN. This is not the only bill that can be filibustered on, I will say to the assistant whip.

Mr. GARNER. I am not filibustering. I think it is full time that we took out. I have heard the gentleman from Illinois say that many times at this hour in the day.

Mr. MANN. Not at this time in the session. Last night we ran for more than an hour, until 6 o'clock and after, with no quorum, but we will not do it to-morrow night if the point of order is insisted on now. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. GARNER. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen want to go on with the bill, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of no quorum.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is not in order until the amendment is perfected. The gentleman can have his substitute read for information.

The Clerk read as follows;

Add as a substitute the following:
"And provided further, That the municipality must first have determined that the particular improvement is desired."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

Mr. RAKER. This is a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and the amendment to it by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can offer it after the amendment is perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is not a substitute. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. But there is no amendment pending.

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer this as an amendment to the bill to follow the amendment just adopted offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment just adopted the following:
"And provided further, That the municipality must first have determined the particular improvement desired."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The purpose of the amendment is this: The municipality knows what it desires before the Secretary of the Interior makes these improvements, and the amendment provides that the municipality shall say through its organization what particular thing it most desires to have done. It speaks for those people in that community, representing them. Before the Secretary of the Interior or any other officer goes in there and makes any particular improvement the municipality, by its vote and through its officers, should say which particular improvement shall be made first. I think the amendment should be adopted. It is a matter of economy and of control.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the paragraph the following:
"Provided, That whenever the lands, improvements, or any part thereof cease to be used for the purposes for which they were granted the same shall revert to the United States."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that that the committee has already, in striking out lines 12 to 16, inclusive, on page 3, passed upon that same proposition.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all, Mr. Chairman. The whole paragraph was stricken out, and it has been amended and modified in three or four particulars since then, and this amendment is undoubtedly necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment simply provides that this property shall revert to the United States in case it ceases to be used for the purpose for which it is intended, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this simply provides that in the event any of these improvements constructed by part public money shall cease to be used for the purposes granted they shall revert to the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FERRIS) there were—ayes 42, nays 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That all income received from the operation of any such buildings or works shall be paid into and become a part of the reclamation town-site fund.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, from time to time, transfer from the reclamation town-site fund to the reclamation fund any and all moneys in excess of the amount estimated by him to be necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance under this act of the buildings and works hereby authorized.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:
"SEC. 4. That all sums hereafter received into the reclamation town-site fund from towns having a municipal organization and an organized school district shall at the beginning of the fiscal year following the receipt of such sums be divided, one-fourth to the school district and three-fourths to the municipality, and paid to the proper officers of the said school district and municipality, respectively, to be expended for school and municipal purposes; and sums heretofore received from the sale of town lots and covered into the reclamation town-site fund by the terms of this act and sums hereafter accruing from towns having no municipal or school-district organization and not expended by the Secretary of the Interior as provided by section 2 of this act shall upon the organization of municipalities and school districts be divided in the same proportion and paid to the school districts and municipalities, respectively, to be expended for school and municipal purposes."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman in charge of the bill think in lieu of the language that appears in lines 11 and 12, where it specifically provides that one-fourth shall go to the school district and three-fourths to the municipality, that it would be better to leave a little discretion in the Secretary of the Interior so that he might not have trouble with the handling of the fund? I would say to him in other legislation of a similar character, where it relates to the Indian funds, we have almost uniformly left it to the Secretary, and he in turn has counseled and worked with the local communities, and I think that ought to be.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That is as to the subject of the apportionment of the division?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman, as he appeals to me upon it, that provision giving a definite proportion of this fund for school purposes was not championed by me. I will be entirely satisfied without it, but others have felt an interest in it, and thought a definite proportion of this fund ought to be set aside for school purposes. Personally, I am not contentious about it.

Mr. FERRIS. Suppose this situation should occur. Evidently the gentleman is thinking along the same line I am. Suppose a municipality should, of its own initiative and from its own funds, construct sewers, storm and sanitary, as the case may be, and construct improvements as they might need them from the small funds for school purposes. It is easy to see what would happen. It is easy to see it would be perplexing. I move, Mr. Chairman, in lines 11 and 12, to strike out the words "one-fourth to the school district and three-fourths to the municipality" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and apportioned within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "one-fourth to the school district and three-fourths to the municipality" and insert——

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to make it read "to be apportioned to the school district and to the municipality, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. FERRIS. Well, I have no objection to that. I ask that the amendment be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Strike out the word "divided" and make it read, after the word "divided," "apportioned to the school district and to the municipality, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 11, strike out the words "one-fourth to the school district and three-fourths to the municipality" and insert "and apportioned to the school district and to the municipality, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MANN. Also strike out the word "divided."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I am right about this, but I think some of it ought to go out, and for the purpose of getting it before the House I move to strike out, beginning with the word "and," line 14, all the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Down to and including the word "act," in line 16.

Mr. FERRIS. What effect will that have?

Mr. MANN. It instructs in reference to sums heretofore received.

Mr. FERRIS. I move to strike out, beginning in line 14, with the word "and," all following, down to and including the word "act," in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 14, strike out the following: "And sums heretofore received from town lots and covered into the reclamation town-site fund by the terms of this act."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in order to make the section harmonious, I move to strike out, in lines 20 and 21, the words "divided in the same proportion" and insert "apportioned in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior as hereinbefore provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think a suggestion made to me by the gentleman from Illinois is in the interest of clearness and I will modify my motion by striking out the words "divided in the same proportion," in lines 20 and 21, page 4, and inserting "apportioned in the same manner."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "divided in the same proportion" and insert the words "apportioned in the same manner."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all sums hereafter received into the reclamation town-site fund from towns having a municipal organization and an organized school district shall at the beginning of the fiscal year following the receipt of such sums be divided one-fourth to the school district and three-fourths to the municipality and paid to the proper officers of the said school district and municipality, respectively, to be expended for school and municipal purposes; and sums heretofore received from the sale of town lots and covered into the reclamation town-site fund by the terms of this act and sums hereafter accruing from towns having no municipal or school district organization and not expended by the Secretary of the Interior as provided by section 2 of this act shall upon the organization of municipalities and school districts be divided in the same proportion and paid to the school districts and municipalities, respectively, to be expended for school and municipal purposes.

Mr. MANN. In the new section 4 the committee amendment was amended, but it has not yet been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to reserve from entry such lands within or near such town sites as he may deem necessary for cemetery purposes, and to make appropriate regulations for the supervision and sale of lots in such cemetery at an appraised value, through the Reclamation Service, until such time as a municipal corporation or corporations shall be created capable of operating and maintaining such cemetery, and thereupon a legal title for the lands so reserved and then unsold shall be transferred to the municipal corporation or corporations for cemetery purposes, and the proceeds of the sales of cemetery lots by the municipal corporation or corporations shall be used for cemetery improvements. The proceeds of sales of cemetery lots by the United States shall be paid into and become a part of the reclamation town-site fund, and the cost of the improvement, maintenance, and operation of such cemeteries may be paid from said fund in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That whenever the lands or any part thereof so transferred shall be used for any other than cemetery purposes the ownership and control thereof shall revert to the United States.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 5, line 12, after the word "States," insert the words: "Prior to the transfer to the municipalities, respectively."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will also report the other committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Interior," line 17, page 5, strike out:

"Provided, That whenever the lands or any part thereof so transferred shall be used for any other than cemetery purposes the ownership and control thereof shall revert to the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Why is it necessary to strike out that proviso? That is merely a reversionary clause.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is pretty hard to revert the cemetery to the Government if used for a chapel or school site.

Mr. FERRIS. If it was to be used, the bodies would be removed. But I do not care anything about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the survey, subdivision, and sales of lots in the cemeteries prior to transfer to municipal corporations and the survey, subdivision, and sale of lots in reclamation town sites heretofore and hereafter established under the acts aforesaid shall be conducted by the Secretary of the Interior through the Reclamation Service, and patents for the lots shall be issued in the usual manner through the General Land Office.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 5, line 22, after the word "cemeteries," strike out the words "and town sites" and insert:

"Prior to transfer to municipal corporations and the survey, subdivision, and sale of lots in reclamation town sites."

Mr. FERRIS. This paragraph goes ahead and provides how the town sites shall be sold.

Mr. MANN. This is a cemetery. It refers to cemetery lots, and I hope it will be many years before the gentleman from Oklahoma occupies one.

Mr. FERRIS. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 23669) providing for the disposition of town sites in connection with reclamation projects, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment agreed to on page 1, line 3, wherein "25 per cent" was adopted in lieu of "5 per cent."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Pending that, I move the previous question upon the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FERRIS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 15.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. FERRIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill as reported from the committee contained a provision authorizing 50 per cent of the town-site fund to be used for local improvements. The committee adopted a provision making it 25 per cent. Another amendment was voted down to the effect that it should be 5 per cent. Is there a way to get a vote to determine whether the House elects to have 5 per cent of those funds used or 25 per cent used?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I withdraw my request for a separate vote.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. As the previous question has been ordered, and a separate vote is demanded on each amendment adopted by the committee, when will the vote be taken on each amendment?

The SPEAKER. Next Wednesday morning.

Mr. GARNER. Then I shall ask for a separate vote.

Mr. CANNON. I think we can arrange it all right to-night.

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that we can not pass the bill to-night, because there are a number of us on this side who propose to have a yea-and-nay vote on this bill to its final passage. Now, unless we are going to call a quorum here for the purpose of taking a yea-and-nay vote, it would be perfectly frivolous for us to undertake to pass the bill to-night. But I think this: The previous question has been ordered; we could adjourn now and take up the bill next Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Let us first agree to the amendments and then take it up next Wednesday.

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I understand his anxiety and the anxiety of the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] with reference to this particular bill being gotten out of the way. I speak for myself. I am not in accord with that movement, and there are a number of others over here who are in the same attitude, and I think it is perfectly legitimate to ask, at least for the present, that all the rights of Members with respect to this bill may be preserved from the parliamentary standpoint in order that we may take advantage of it to fight a bill that is to come up later.

Mr. MANN. I do not blame the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Of course, all this colloquy is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I think it will serve a useful purpose to spend all day next Wednesday in voting on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] demands a separate vote on each amendment, and the Clerk will report the first one.

Mr. CANNON. It may be necessary to get a quorum.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks it is necessary to get a quorum, he may make a point of order for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to vote on amendment No. 1, which the Clerk will report. But before that is done, the Chair would like to ask unanimous consent to——

Mr. MANN. Well, I will not give unanimous consent. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to vote on amendment No. 1, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 3, strike out "one-half" and insert the words "25 per cent of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, to make a long story short, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. I thought we would force the gentleman to it.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker would like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to reserve that point of order until the Speaker can submit——

Mr. MANN. I shall demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker, and shall do so as long as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] insists on his point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my point of order for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] reserves for the present his point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MANN. I call for the declaration of the result.

The SPEAKER. The declaration of the result was that the amendment is carried.

Mr. MANN. Then the next amendment will be the thing that is in order to be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that as well as the gentleman from Illinois. The Clerk will report amendment No. 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 3, strike out the words "heretofore or."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fourteen gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is an automatic call of the House. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were 56 ayes and 58 noes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. CANNON. We may as well have the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 96, nays 88, answered "present" 9, not voting 190, as follows:

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GALLINGER). The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
January 22, 1913.

Ordered, That a message be sent to the Senate, notifying that body that an error has been made in the engrossment of the bill H. R. 26874, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved January 9, 1913, as sent from this House to the Senate, which error consists in incorporating in said engrossed bill a section thereof, on page 24, lines 7 to 15, inclusive, as follows:

"The sum of $300,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations in Oklahoma, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood."

Said section having been stricken from the original bill by this House previous to the passage of the bill; and that the Senate be requested to permit the Clerk to correct said error.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The usual procedure in such cases has been the passage of a concurrent resolution instructing the Clerk to make changes of this kind. In view of the fact that this matter comes in an unusual form, the Chair will take the liberty of referring it to the Committee on Indian Affairs for their consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 27941) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

(Saporozska Slcz of St. Volodymyr, Woonsocket, R. I. Incorporated May 3, 1911.)

WOONSOCKET, R. I., January 29, 1913.

To the Senate of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: It has been a painful surprise to us to see the House pass the Burnett bill, providing for a literary test. This test, as is well known, does not aim at selection but merely at the cutting of numbers. It is a move against present immigration which we very earnestly regret. It is a departure from our traditions and the principle that has guided us in the past, through the means of which our country stands preeminent as the land of equal opportunity. It overlooks also the need of the country for a continuous fresh supply of labor. We can only hope now that the Senate will not join the House in its decision, but will come to a better understanding as to the wishes of the majority of the American people and the best interests of the country.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GREENVILLE, ALA.

Mr. CULBERSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 7522) for the erection of a public building at the city of Greenville, Ala., and I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] to it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Texas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out "contract for the erection and completion" and insert the words "acquire by condemnation or otherwise a suitable site and to cause to be erected thereon"; on the same page, line 9, before the word "building," to insert the words "site and"; and, in lines 10, 11, and 12, to strike out the words "which said sum is hereby appropriated for said building out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by condemnation or otherwise a suitable site and to cause to be erected thereon in the city of Greenville, Ala., a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices, the cost of said site and building not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at the city of Greenville, Ala."

FIFTH REGIMENT MARYLAND NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) granting to the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard the use of the corridors of the courthouse of the District of Columbia upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the marshal of the District of Columbia, and I submit a report (No. 1135) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The amendment was, in line 8, after the date "March fourth" to insert "nineteen hundred and thirteen," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the marshal of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard to occupy and use the corridors of the courthouse of the District of Columbia from 6 o'clock in the evening of March 3 to 7 o'clock in the evening of March 4, 1913, upon such terms and conditions as the marshal of the District of Columbia shall impose upon the colonel of the Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF TENTS.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at the meeting of the Imperial Council of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine to be held at Dallas, Tex., in May, 1913, and I submit a report (No. 1136) thereon.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not going to object to its present consideration, but I am going to ask if there is any precedent for such action. I thought we carried the business pretty far when we began to lend tents for veterans' reunions.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to say that there are a number of precedents.

Mr. CULBERSON. There are a number of precedents.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The committee have reported an amendment to the joint resolution providing that in future there shall be no loan of tents except to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association unless in a case of grave emergency.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Leave out the grave emergency business and it is all right, because every emergency will be a grave one when they want to get something out of the Government. I have no objection to loaning tents to veterans of the late war, but I am going to oppose any movement to commit the Government to contributing to every meeting that may be held.

I have not any prejudice against these particular people. The fact of the business is, I am a member of that organization. I am not going to object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but when it comes up for consideration I should like to hear what is to be said in its favor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will first be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of Hella Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Dallas, Tex., having in charge the arrangements for the meeting of the imperial council of said order, to be held in Dallas, Tex., in May, 1913, such tents, with necessary flies, poles, ridges, and pins for each, as may be required at said meeting: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said executive committee of Hella Temple at such time prior to the date of such meeting as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and Mike H. Thomas, chairman of said executive committee: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said Mike H. Thomas a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, the whole transaction to be without expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SANDERS. I merely wish to say for the information of the senior Senator from Arkansas that the emergency clause was put in the joint resolution for the purpose of taking care of people in times of flood along the Mississippi River, in the State of Arkansas and other States.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That bears no analogy to this. This is an appeal to the charitable instincts of Congress. It is an appeal by well-to-do people who want to have a frolic.

I think the business of supplying rations and tents on the Mississippi River has been overworked. It ought to be stopped or it ought to be investigated and its effect limited to actual necessities that could not otherwise be provided against. There is no possible analogy between that case and this one. The business of issuing tents and rations during the prevalence of overflows on the Mississippi River has become an absolute abuse. It ought to be looked into more closely than it is, and wherever it is necessary it ought to be limited to cases of necessity.

It is not a fact that that is a poverty-stricken land. It is an exceedingly prosperous one under normal conditions, and the people are generally able to withstand somewhat the effects of a single overflow, unless it is one of the unprecedented overflows like that which happened during the last season. Even in that case there were demands made here which Senators from that section of the country refused to communicate to Congress.

I have grown somewhat tired of it, and when the subject comes up again for consideration I take it for granted that some of us will have sufficient independence to ask even that that matter be scrutinized with a view of limiting it to actual necessities, and not make it an investment for people who can capitalize an outcry when calamities come upon them. The whole business has been abused. This thing is a farce. There is no reason why every particular organization that wants to have an outing or a display should come to the Congress of the United States and demand that a part of the expense of it should be borne by the public.

If we purchase immunity from similar requests in the future by passing this particular joint resolution, it is a very good investment for us to make, but I would leave out the qualification that it should only be approved in the case of extraordinary necessity. I forget the language indicated by the Senator from Alabama, but there will always be an extraordinary emergency whenever they want to get into the Treasury. Leaving out that qualification—and I ask the Secretary to read the qualification so that I may move to strike it out—so far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for this particular joint resolution, with the understanding that we have done something, at least, to disclose the displeasure of Congress at such utterly foolish expenditures of public moneys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that the proviso is an amendment proposed by the committee; it is not in the original joint resolution.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I want to amend the amendment when we reach that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Military Affairs propose to amend the joint resolution by adding, on page 2, line 9, after the words "United States" and before the period, the following proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter no loan of tents shall be made except to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association or when some grave and serious emergency exists.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words "or when some grave and serious emergency exists."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first inquire if there is objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the amendment reported by the committee. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I want to say a word in reference to this joint resolution. The statement that this will be an expense to the United States is a mistake. The United States are protected by a bond to be approved by the Secretary of War against all damage to the tents which may be loaned. The Government is held harmless against the expenditure of any money at all by this bond.

So far as the precedents are concerned, there are a number of them outside of the Confederate veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic, some of which I will note:

Joint resolution of May 14, 1908, authorizing the loan of tents to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks for their national convention at Dallas, Tex.

Joint resolution of June 25, 1910, authorizing loan of tents to the Elks for their national convention at Detroit, Mich.

Joint resolution of June 25, 1910, authorizing loan of tents to the Appalachian Exposition at Knoxville, Tenn.

Joint resolution of January 27, 1909, authorizing loan of tents to the inaugural committee, Washington, D. C.

Joint resolution of February 17, 1909, authorizing loan of tents to the International American Gymnastic Union, for their celebration at Cincinnati, Ohio.

These precedents show that there have been numberless cases in which the tents of the United States have been loaned to civic associations, such as the Shrine, which is covered by the joint resolution now under consideration. Therefore, I say, in the first place, it is not unprecedented, and, in the next place, it will cost the Government of the United States comparatively nothing, if indeed anything at all. I hope the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was not aware that the abuse had proceeded to the extent that seems to be indicated by the list of instances read by the Senator from Texas. I thought it was merely in its infancy. It seems to be an old offender. That formidable array of instances collected by the Senator from Texas seems to have impressed the committee only in one way, and that was that the business ought to be stopped, and that in order to stop it it is only willing that it might be exercised one more time. I am going to accept the judgment of the committee on that; but I want to eliminate the clause that seems to be a standing invitation to bring subsequent applications within a certain saving clause. I am perfectly willing to permit this joint resolution to go through at this time, but my reason for doing so is not the merit of the application, but because it affords an opportunity to permit Congress to express itself in opposition to the entire business. I think, therefore, that we ought to make an express, unconditional notification to all such organizations that we have done with that business; and we shall do that when we strike out that saving clause and permit the joint resolution to go through as a mere permission to this particular organization. That is my position about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the committee amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to add to the joint resolution the following proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter no loan of tents shall be made except to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association, or when some grave and serious emergency exists.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time, but I intend to vote against it. The proposed amendment, in the form of a proviso, is itself a confession that the joint resolution is absolutely wrong, as I think it is. We are here in a representative capacity; we have a right to be generous with our own property, to give it away if we please, and let other people use it if we please; but we have no business to be generous with the property of the United States. The loaning of these tents for this purpose is bound to be of expense to the Government. The wear and tear upon them nobody can foresee. They are subject to damage by the elements, by becoming wet and dirty; and nobody can tell how much damage, that can not be estimated and can not be recovered under this bond, will be caused to the Government of the United States. I think it has been a thoroughly bad practice in the past, and if we are going to stop it at all we ought to stop it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from the proviso the words "or when some grave and serious emergency exists."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Arkansas, who proposed the amendment to the amendment, why is it necessary to foreclose ourselves against loaning tents if there should really be a grave and serious emergency?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We can not foreclose ourselves from doing anything that a subsequent Congress might see proper to do on this particular question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, then, what is the use of the amendment at all?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As the language now is, it is a standing intimation that if they make their claim loud enough and wide enough it will come within some exception. My purpose is to utilize this occasion as a notification to all similar organizations that we have done with this business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am in sympathy with the Senator in that respect, and I am not sure that I shall vote for the joint resolution anyway; but if we are to loan tents to the two organizations mentioned in the amendment it seems to me that there is no reason for saying we would not, if a grave emergency should arise, loan tents, for instance, to the Red Cross or some institution that was engaged in alleviating distress.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator quite misapprehends my purpose if he thinks I intend to incorporate into the joint resolution affirmative language to the effect that we will not hereafter do this. I want to consider each application on its own merits, without being bound in advance to treat it in any particular way. I think that each application should be considered on its own merits. That certainly ought to apply to a case of emergency and distress. I am not seeking to put into this joint resolution a statement that hereafter we never will do anything of the kind, but I want to exclude from it an intimation that "we will do it if you can make your clamor loud enough."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the debate which has taken place is sufficient notice for the future without the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think it would be better to have it in specific terms.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], I want to invite his attention to the second proviso of the joint resolution:

Provided, further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said Mike H. Thomas a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition.

Showing that the bond covers even the wear and tear of the tents.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I desire to say that the committee adopted the amendment for the purpose of giving notice at this time to all organizations that hereafter the intention of the Senate is not to grant the loan of tents except to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Confederate Veterans' Association, in order to cut off, so far as we can, requests that we may hereafter have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let us have a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. ROOT. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States for the third judicial circuit, and designated a judge of the Commerce Court, of which 4,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 14053.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14053) to increase the pension of surviving soldiers of the Indan wars in certain cases, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. GORE conferees on the part of the Senate.

COOPER RIVER (S. C.) BRIDGE, ETC.

Mr. TILLMAN. A few days ago, at my request, the vote by which the bill (S. 7702) authorizing James Sottile, his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Cooper River, Charleston County, S. C., and also a bridge and approaches thereto across Shem Creek, Charleston County, S. C., was passed was reconsidered, and it is now on the calendar. I wish to have the bill recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 27941. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR ISIDOR RAYNER.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to give notice that on Saturday, February 15, 1913, I will ask that the business of the Senate may be suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to the memory of my late colleague, Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the 15th day of February has been designated for the exercises commemorative of the life and public services of the late Vice President, Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I presume both exercises could be held on that day.

Mr. ROOT. I am afraid they would be inconsistent, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. The resolution has not yet been adopted, but it is in the hands of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then, I will ask that the 22d of February be set apart for the purpose I have indicated, after the usual Washington's Birthday exercises.

Mr. SMOOT. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] has already given notice for memorial exercises on February 22. That date will be perfectly satisfactory, however, because there is only one memorial service set for that day.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then, I will ask that the date fixed in my notice be changed to the 22d.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FORESTRY INSTRUCTION.

The bill (S. 5076) to promote instruction in forestry in States and Territories which contain national forests was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 2, page 2, line 16, after the word "instruction," to strike out "offered to forest rangers" and insert "in forestry offered," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That when any State or Territory which contains national forests shall provide instruction in forestry at the State university or other educational institution maintained by the State or Territory, which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, is adapted to the training of forest rangers employed or to be employed in the protection and administration of the national forests, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the State or Territory for the benefit of such institution, designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, from the moneys made available by this act, to be expended during the fiscal year for which said allotment is made, such sum as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture will adequately assist the State or Territory in the instruction in forestry offered at such institution: Provided, That only one institution may receive benefits under this act in any State or Territory during any one fiscal year, and the amount paid to any State or Territory during any one fiscal year shall not exceed $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2234) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their naional conventions, and to elect their national committeemen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, how is the calendar being called? It is under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under Rule VIII—for the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. So that a motion to take up and consider a bill would be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not be in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then we are not proceeding strictly under Rule VIII?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asked unanimous consent to proceed to the calendar for the consideration of unobjected cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is not strictly under Rule VIII, then?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not strictly.

Mr. CULBERSON. What I wanted to know particularly was whether a motion would be in order to take up and consider a bill on the calendar, notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that it would not be, inasmuch as unanimous consent was given to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases. The Chair was in error in stating that the procedure was strictly under Rule VIII.

PINE RIDGE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 111) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in Washabaugh County, in the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The purchase price of all town lots sold in town sites, as hereinafter provided, shall be paid at such time and in such installments as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. The net proceeds derived from the sale of such lots and lands within the town sites as aforesaid shall be credited to the Indians as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 8, line 9, after the word "Indians," to strike out "shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their education, support, and civilization" and insert "may be expended for their benefit or distributed per capita, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the said reservation, the sums to which the said tribe may be entitled, which shall draw interest at 3 per cent per annum; that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Indians may be expended for their benefit or distributed per capita, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 8, line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and 50 cents," so as to make the section read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 9, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and twenty-five" and insert "seventy-six"; in line 9, after the word "act," to insert "and the amount found to be due said Indians shall be deposited to their credit in the Treasury of the United States and subject to expenditure for their benefit as provided in section 7 hereof"; in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "ten"; and in line 20, after the word "herein," to strike out "or from any money in the Treasury belonging to said Indian tribe," so as to make the section read:

The bill (S. 4584) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

The report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 781, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVAL MILITIA.

Mr. THORNTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 4584:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4584) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following communication:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 19, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to letter of the 17th instant from the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, inclosing a bill (S. 4584) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, and requesting the opinion of the Navy Department thereon for the information of the committee:

The bill (S. 4584) is the same as S. 10379, which was introduced during the third session of the Sixty-first Congress, and favorably reported, but not passed. This bill was agreed upon as mutually satisfactory to the Navy Department and to the Naval Militia.

The strength and efficiency of the Naval Militia organizations will be materially improved by the passage of the Naval Militia bill now before Congress. The Navy Department has carefully considered the question of the organization and training of the Naval Militia, and strongly recommends the passage of this bill.

Faithfully, yours, G. v. L. MEYER.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,

BOTANICAL LABORATORY AT DENVER, COLO.

The bill (S. 93) for the establishment of a botanical laboratory at Denver, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to establish and maintain at or near the city of Denver and State of Colorado an institution for botanical and agricultural research.

SEC. 2. That the purpose of said institution shall be to promote the investigation of the flora of the arid region of the United States lying between the ninety-eighth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich and the crest of the Sierra Nevada and Cascade Mountain Ranges, to provide for the study and investigation of plant diseases in said region, and to investigate and by experimental plant breeding to determine the possibility of acclimatizing valuable agricultural plant species to the aridity of the plains, valleys, and plateaus, and to the low temperature of high mountains in said arid part of the United States. It is expressly directed that in its experimental and other investigations said institution shall represent and be in touch with the entire arid region heretofore designated and described.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to provide suitable buildings in said city of Denver and State of Colorado for the use of said institution, either by purchase of a site and erection of the necessary buildings or by leasing the same, and to equip and furnish said buildings with all the instruments and other apparatus which may be needed in carrying on the work and achieving the purpose of said institution.

SEC. 4. That the said institution for botanical and agricultural research shall be placed in charge of a director, who shall be a botanist of experience and ability, to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. It shall be the duty of said director to outline the investigations to be carried on by said institution in accordance with the provisions of this act and to supervise and direct the work of whatever assistant botanists and employees the Secretary of Agriculture may assign to duty in connection with said institution. It is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to assign to said institution whatever number of assistant botanists may be requisite to give force and effect to the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the directors of all agricultural experiment stations maintained exclusively by the Federal Government within the area or region defined in the first section of this act to report to and cooperate with the director of said institution for botanical and agricultural research in respect of all matters pertaining to or designed to promote the adaptation of valuable agricultural plant species to the arid climate of the region named or to the low temperature of high mountains. For the purpose of determining the possibility of acclimatizing said valuable agricultural plant species to aridity or to low temperature it shall be the duty of the director of said institution for botanical and agricultural research to establish and maintain, in localities where agricultural experiment stations are not otherwise maintained, whatever experiment stations in his judgment may be requisite to an adequate and speedy solution of said problem: Provided, That no such experiment station shall be established except with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 6. That, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, the director of said institution for botanical and agricultural research shall make proper and needful rules and regulations consistent with the purpose and provisions of this act for the government of said institution and for carrying on its work.

SEC. 7. That so far as may be practicable and desirable it shall be the duty of the director of said institution for botanical and agricultural research to establish cooperative and mutually helpful relations between said institution and State or other institutions engaged in botanical or agricultural research within the region designated in the first section of this act: Provided, That whatever action of this kind may be taken shall be consistent with the provisions and purposes of this act and subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 8. That for the purpose of establishing said institution for botanical and agricultural research and to provide for its maintenance during the first fiscal year after the passage of this act the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the report of the committee on the bill may be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to ask the Senator reporting the bill whether this same work is not being done by the Carnegie Institute?

Mr. GRONNA. I am not able to say whether it is being done elsewhere, but it is not being done in that particular locality.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand there is a laboratory at Tucson, Ariz., doing this same work.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope, Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will allow the report to be read. I think it will give him the information he desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read as requested.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GRONNA May 28, 1912, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, having had under consideration Senate bill 93 (and S. 5163 as a substitute for the former) for the establishment and maintenance at or near the city of Denver, Colo., of an institution for botanical and agricultural research, report the same favorably with amendments and as amended recommend that the bill do pass.

In the arid regions within the United States there are, it is estimated, upward of 400,000 square miles, or 250,000,000 acres, of land which at present produce no crops, but which receive enough rainfall to sustain some forms of plant life. From experiments conducted by private individuals there seems reason to believe that with systematic work cereals and other agricultural plants growing in our more humid regions can be acclimatized and that these hitherto unproductive sections of our country can be made to produce agricultural crops. The work contemplated is one which it does not appear that the Agricultural Department is doing at present, and one which will not be done either by private individuals or by agricultural colleges or other institutions of learning. It will not be done by private effort because there will be little, if any, direct pecuniary reward even for successful efforts and because it is a work which must be pursued systematically for a period of years if any results are to be obtained. Institutions of scientific learning would at most experiment with only a very few species, and that more with the idea of discovering the manner in which changes in plant structure and growth may be brought about than with the idea of developing plants which can be cultivated in these dry regions and increase the country's food supply. The proposed institution can also be made a central station, where the work of the other experiment stations in the arid regions can be coordinated and tested, which it appears to the committee would be highly desirable, as this work is obviously impossible in an office located in the city of Washington. The cost will be trifling compared with the value which, it appears to the committee, such a work systematically planned and carried out will have.

The Agricultural Department is at present sending experts to the different countries to discover new plants which may be transplanted to our own country and thus increase our agricultural production, and we believe that the results fully justify our expenditures for this purpose. It appears to the committee that there is even more reason for endeavoring to adapt to the conditions in our arid regions both such agricultural plants as grow in the more humid sections of this country and also such plants as may be brought here from other countries.

In reply to the objection of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, the committee would say that while some parts of the work proposed may perhaps be considered as purely scientific work, such results as may be achieved will be of great importance to agriculture in the arid regions, and it is a work that no other agency than the Government can be expected to undertake and prosecute on an adequate scale. So far as the coordination of this work with the other work of the department is concerned, we believe that the measure in its present form allows the Secretary all latitude necessary to effect such coordination, and that no disorganization need result from the establishment of this institution.

The committee believe that an appropriation of $75,000 will be sufficient for the first year and accordingly recommended that the appropriation carried be reduced to this amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice in the report read that the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture has made certain objections to the bill. The report does not contain the letter of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture or the substance of it. I should like to ask the Senator if he remembers what the substance of the objection was?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, it is true that the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture in his letter to the committee did not favor this particular bill, but I believe that it was more because proper attention had not been given to this great subject than for any other reason. I do not want to state to the Senate that the Secretary of Agriculture favors the bill, but it seems to me the bill itself is of such great merit and of such value, not to any particular locality, but to the country at large, that it should be enacted into law.

Mr. SMOOT. I should exceedingly dislike to object to any legislation that would in any way benefit the arid West, but I will ask the Senator if I can secure a copy of the letter of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture in the committee room?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the letter written to the committee by the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture is filed in the room of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

IMPROVED ORDNANCE PROCESSES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 20193) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay a cash reward for suggestions submitted by civilian employees of the Navy Department for improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "plant," to insert "or ordnance material"; on page 2, line 2, before the word "which," to strike out "Navy Department" and insert "said establishments"; and on line 13, after the word "appropriation," to strike out "'Pay, miscellaneous,'" and insert "'Ordnance and ordnance stores,'" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to offer periodically at such of the establishments of the Ordnance Department as he may select a cash reward for the suggestion, or series of suggestions, for an improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant or ordnance material, submitted within the period by one or more of the civilian employees of the said establishments which shall be deemed the most valuable of those submitted and adopted for use: Provided, That to obtain this reward the winning suggestion must be one that will clearly effect a material economy in production or increase efficiency or enhance the quality of the product in comparison with its cost, and in the opinion of the Secretary shall be so worthy as to entitle the employee making the same to receive the reward: Provided further, That the sums awarded to employees in accordance with this act shall be paid them in addition to their usual compensation and shall be paid out of the appropriation "Ordnance and ordnance stores": Provided further, That the total amount paid under the provisions of this section shall not exceed $1,000 for any one month: And provided further, That no employee shall be paid a reward under this act until he has properly executed an agreement to the effect that the use by the United States of the suggestion, or series of suggestions, made by him shall not form the basis of a further claim of any nature upon the United States by him, his heirs, or assigns.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay a cash reward for suggestions submitted by civilian employees of ordnance establishments under the Navy Department for improvement or economy in manufacturing processes or plant."

HARRY S. WADE.

The bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

The bill (S. 8033) to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River above the village of Windsor Locks, in the State of Connecticut, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, owing to the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who is opposed to this bill, I ask that it may go over.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have the bill read.

Mr. NELSON. I object to that, because it might be called up at a later time and the point made that it had been already read, and that would put us off our guard.

Mr. BURTON. I give notice that on Saturday morning next, after the transaction of the routine morning business, I shall call up this bill and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, under objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the Senator from Alabama, from the committee, is preparing a minority report on the bill. I presume he will have it ready before Saturday.

Mr. BURTON. The minority report has been filed to-day. The Senator from Alabama is, I believe, aware of my intention to seek to call it up on Saturday. The minority report was filed this morning.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS.

The bill (H. R. 16450) to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate or foreign shipments, the unlawful entering of such cars, the stealing of freight and express packages or baggage or articles in process of transportation in interstate shipment, and the felonious asportation of such freight or express packages or baggage or articles therefrom into another district of the United States, and the felonious possession or reception of the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As it is my intention to object to the present consideration of that bill, in this connection I will ask the Senator from Iowa if it would not suit him to have the bill go to the calendar under Rule IX. It is perfectly evident that the bill is not going to pass here until it has been debated, and by putting it on that calendar we might thereby relieve ourselves of the necessity of constantly watching the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would prefer that that should not be done, but I will agree that I will not have it brought forward until I have notified the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I also ask the Senator to agree to a continuing objection until such time as we can take it up by some kind of agreement or consent, or at least that he notify some of us who are known not to be in sympathy with the measure?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will consult members of the Judiciary Committee, and the next time the calendar is called I will either say yes or no to that.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I suggest that the Senator have it set down for some day certain, so that all may take notice. I only want to know when it will be considered. I am quite sure the Senator would not take any advantage of any of us if we are not here.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will see that the bill is not called up for consideration at a time when the Senator from Arkansas is absent.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is more than I was prepared to ask. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, on objection.

RIGHT OF WAY IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 3130) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Conrad-Stanford Co. to use certain lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I should like very much to get the bill up and have it considered on its merits. Of course, I can see that possibly there may be some opposition to it, and I should like, if there be any, to have it thrashed out and have the bill take its chance of passage.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the Senator's attention to a fact he must know, that there are a number of members of the Committee on Public Lands who desire to make a statement upon this particular bill. They are not present in the Chamber at this time, and I know the Senator will not insist upon the consideration of the bill under those circumstances.

Mr. MYERS. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. It was for that reason that I objected to its consideration now.

I wish to say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing, as far as I am personally concerned, to state my objection to the bill in the Senate and place myself on record, and then let the Senate vote upon it; and I believe that is the sentiment of all the Senators on the committee who were opposed to the bill. But I know there are two Senators on the committee, who have expressed themselves as I have now done, who are not in the Chamber, and therefore I do not believe that the Senator will ask for the consideration of the bill to-day.

Mr. MYERS. That is agreeable.

I would ask unanimous consent, then, that the bill be made a special order for next Monday, immediately after the close of the morning business. That would give notice to all interested. Would there be any objection to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I really do not believe unanimous consent ought to be asked in the absence of those Senators. I believe the Senator will make just as much headway by letting the Senators have a chance to make their statement and then vote upon the bill. The Senator knows that there is no disposition on the part of any members of the committee to hold up the bill. Everyone expressed himself in committee to that effect. I do not believe the Senator will have any trouble whatever in getting a vote upon the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I want them all to have an opportunity to be heard upon it. I will not ask unanimous consent, then, as that might not be proper under the circumstances, but I will simply give notice that next Monday, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall call up this bill and ask for its consideration. I do not ask for unanimous consent, but I merely give notice now that I shall at that time call it up and ask to have it considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. LODGE. That concludes the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It concludes the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 24, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 23, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, touch the dominant chords of our hearts with Thy skillful hand that they may respond to the music of Thy love and good will, that we may make for peace and happiness to all with whom we come in contact as we pass along the King's highway, and at its end receive Thine approving smile. And songs of praises we will ever give to Thee in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order against that.

The SPEAKER. The Journal has not been read.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I maintain it is in order before the Journal has been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair maintains that it is not. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the Speaker listen to a rule of the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course he will.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. This is Rule XXVIII:

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call the Chair's attention to the fact that the Journal was just being read. [Cries of "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the first section of Rule I, as follows:

> The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the Members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum cause the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

The Clerk will read the Journal. [Applause.]

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

During the reading,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the Journal in full.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if the gentleman demands it, the Journal will be read in full, and the Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

During the reading,

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

During the reading.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that the Clerk omitted to read that part of the Journal which relates to the introduction of bills and petitions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the first part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk did not read that part of the Journal which relates to the introduction of petitions, and I think not that part which relates to the introduction of bills.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk just reached it.

Mr. MANN. He did not read it.

The SPEAKER. He could not read it all at once. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Clerk proceeded with and completed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

Mr. MANN. I offer a preferential motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment. What was the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the Journal be approved, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. MANN. I make a preferential motion to amend the Journal where it provides for the reference of executive communications.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order that the motion to amend is not in order pending the demand for the previous question on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The question at issue is whether the motion is preferential at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. MANN. That is the question at issue. I find a ruling on that subject, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend a moment, the Chair will state to the House that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes a motion to approve the Journal, and upon that he moves the previous question.

Mr. MANN. The motion I offer I claim to be a preferential one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on his point of order and on the point made by the gentleman from New York that his motion is not now in order.

Mr. MANN. In volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 2760——

Mr. FITZGERALD. What page?

Mr. MANN. Section 2760, page 16, of volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, is this ruling, with the heading of "A motion to amend the Journal takes precedence of a motion to approve it":

On May 30, 1882, Mr. Speaker Keifer held that a motion to amend the Journal took precedence of a motion to approve it.

I think it is perfectly apparent, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if, when the previous question is moved, he still thinks he has the right to make a motion to amend?

Mr. MANN. This is the situation: The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and myself rose both at the same time; both addressed the Speaker at the same time.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York offered a motion, which is in order. I offered a motion, which is preferential.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offered two motions at one time.

Mr. MANN. If my motion be preferential, the motion offered by the gentleman from New York can not cut it out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have an authority for my contention right here. If the gentleman will turn to page 23 of the Manual and Digest, he will find that—

The motion to amend the Journal takes precedence of the motion to approve it (IV, 2760); but the motion to amend may not be admitted after the previous question is demanded on a motion to approve (IV, 2770).

I was recognized by the Chair, and made a motion to approve the Journal and demanded the previous question. Having demanded the previous question the gentleman's motion to amend is not in order unless the previous question be voted down.

In section 2770, volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, is the following:

A motion to amend the Journal may not be admitted after the previous question is demanded on a motion to approve.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not bother the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] for any more light. The contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], for whose parliamentary knowledge the Chair has a great deal of respect, would, if sustained, absolutely nullify the previous question, and the previous question is intended to put an end to things.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to put in the RECORD, so that there will be no misunderstanding, the decision of Mr. Speaker Reed on June 21, 1897, when he overruled a similar point of order and said:

The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to a statement made at the last session in regard to the amendment of the Journal. According to the RECORD, the Chair stated that a motion to approve the Journal takes precedence of a motion to amend it. Of course, that statement was made simply with reference to the case which was in hand, and, to be accurate for general purposes, there ought to be added, "if that motion is first made."

I desire to say, concerning the citation made by the gentleman from Illinois of the decision made by Mr. Speaker Keifer, that this matter does not arise in the same way. So far as I have been able to examine the RECORD hurriedly, it does not show that the motion to approve was made and the previous question demanded upon it. But this decision of Mr Speaker Reed is exactly in point.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desires to be heard further on his point of order, the Chair will hear him, although the Chair has already indicated his opinion about it.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to detain the Chair, but if there are two motions and either one of them is offered, and one is preferential to the other, the preferential motion can not be cut out by a demand for the previous question, if the motion is preferential to the one that is offered.

The SPEAKER. In the ordinary procedure if the order of the three motions had come right the gentleman's point would be well taken. But the order of the procedure did not come so as to fit his case. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and had a perfect right to do it; and the gentleman from New York made two motions before he sat down, one following right after the other, and the last one was to move the previous question on his first motion. The previous question is of the highest order, and the Chair has no doubt in his own mind but that to maintain the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would practically obliterate and annul the force of the motion for the previous question; and the Chair so rules.

Mr. MANN. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from New York, which under the rules is a preferential motion to the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that carries the Journal with it.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I know what it carries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather entertain it than rule that it is dilatory. Those in favor of tabling the motion of the gentleman from New York will answer "aye," those opposed "no."

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 2, nays 257, answered "present" 10, not voting 114, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. DANFORTH.

Mr. BURLESON with Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota.

Mr. COVINGTON with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. CURRY.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. KOPP.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. LAFFERTY.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. TILSON.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. SHARP with Mr. STEENERSON.

Mr. SISSON with Mr. MERRITT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no"; but because of my pair with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, I desire to change my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker, after counting, announced 45 Members voting in favor of ordering the yeas and nays, not a sufficient number.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the other side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the roll call having just disclosed 268 Members present, in order to have the yeas and nays it is necessary to have one-fifth of that number, and the other side can not be counted, because that is only for the purpose of determining the number present, which has just been shown by the roll call.

The SPEAKER. That is the presumption, but the gentleman from Illinois has the right to demand the other side to demonstrate the physical fact.

Mr. MANN. Forty-five is more than one-fifth of a quorum, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The Constitution of the United States provides that the yeas and nays on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal, and the Chair will preserve all the rights of the gentleman. Those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members have risen in opposition to the demand for the yeas and nays and 45 in favor of ordering the yeas and nays. A sufficient number have demanded the yeas and nays, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 84, answered "present" 10, not voting 149, as follows:

Mr. SHERLEY with Mr. KNOWLAND.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. PICKETT.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.

Mr. POST with Mr. LAFEAN.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. I voted "no," and I desire to withdraw that vote and be recorded as "present."

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. SCULLY, voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. BROWNING. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, am I not entitled to 20 minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to 20 minutes, and entitled to open and close if he chooses.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to have the gentleman from New York open the debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the Chair to say that the gentleman from New York had the right to open.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was announcing the right of anybody to 40 minutes' debate, and the gentleman from New York took his seat and signified that he did not want to open the debate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House adopted an order offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] for the purpose of correcting a mistake made by one of the enrolling clerks, or somebody at the desk, asking the Senate to permit the Clerk of the House to correct an error in the Indian appropriation bill. When the order was presented this colloquy took place:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman that where the word "section" occurs in the order just read it should read "paragraph."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think that is correct.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

Now, ordinarily one would suppose that with that colloquy and order taking place that where the word "section" appeared erroneously, as it did in the order presented, that that was stricken out and the word "paragraph" inserted, and yet the Journal which the gentleman from New York proposes to approve, without an opportunity to amend, does not make that correction in the order. I do not wonder that when the House can not rely upon the clerks at the desk to properly perform the duties devolving upon them, either through error, which I do not criticize them for especially, the gentleman desires to approve the Journal without an opportunity to amend it. I had proposed this morning to have the Journal corrected in accordance with the facts. The facts were that the House agreed to this order with the word "paragraph" in it in two places instead of the word "section."

But the Journal shows, as it stands, that that change was not made. What reliance have we in the House upon agreements and amendments that are agreed to in the House when they are not made? And now gentlemen propose to approve the Journal without a chance to amend it to conform to the facts in the case. I am surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] or any other gentleman in the House should desire to approve the Journal without a chance to amend it, when the Journal is not correct and does not state what took place in the House. The House adopted one order under the Speaker's ruling and the Journal shows a different order, and yet the minority are refused an opportunity to correct it because the House has ordered the previous question, and no amendments can be offered to the Journal.

Mr. Speaker, in the Fifty-eighth Congress the House passed a provision in one of the appropriation bills which was offered by the then Democratic leader, Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee. It reads like this:

Provided further, That hereafter no part of the appropriations made for printing and binding shall be used for any illustration, engraving, or photograph in any document or report ordered printed by Congress unless the order to print expressly authorizes the same.

Under the rules of the House in the Sixty-first Congress, as had been the rule for a number of years, there was a rule providing that all documents referred to committees, or otherwise disposed of, shall be printed unless otherwise specially ordered. That was a rule adopted following the passage of the public printing act of 1895, providing that the executive and public documents presented to the House should be printed. Then came along the Richardson amendment providing that no illustration shall be printed unless expressly ordered. Yet in the Journal of to-day there appears this statement:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio (H. Doc. No. 1295); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

Clause 2 of Rule XXIV simply provides for the reference of this document. It does not authorize the Speaker or anyone else to order it printed; much less does it authorize the Speaker to order it printed with illustrations. I am not criticizing the Speaker in this connection, I wish the House to understand. When the Richardson amendment was first adopted, there was a quandary presented to the House as to how it would get around it. At the time the Richardson amendment was presented, forbidding the printing of illustrations, I called the attention of the House to the fact that it was either so much waste paper or else it would delay the House on many occasions, because the House could not determine by order offered in the House in regard to the printing of illustrations in all of the executive documents which were presented to the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that it would be very much to the edification of the American people if the proceedings of the House of this day should be published with illustrations?

Mr. MANN. I hope they will be [applause on the Republican side], because up to this time this side of the House has been conducting a filibuster in order to teach a lesson to the other side of the House and to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] on the other side of the House, who gave notice that he and others upon that side proposed to filibuster to prevent the Lincoln Memorial bill coming before the House; and I firmly believe that the country will sustain us in what we are doing. And if it be necessary, as I hope it will not be, to continue the filibuster in order to have the Lincoln Memorial bill presented to the House in regular order, then we will filibuster until the cows come home. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Florida may not have been a participant in that filibuster. I do not know, but I take it that he voted yesterday to adjourn, and I do not criticize him for that.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Sixty-first Congress and the other preceding Congresses having in the rules a provision for the printing of executive documents without providing for illustrations, this Congress, when it revised the rules, left out the order of printing, and this statement is made in the Manual:

The old rule on the subject of printing was abolished by the Sixty-second Congress, as the printing statute covered the subject.

The fact is that the printing statute does not cover the subject, and there is not a line in the public printing statute which authorizes the printing of these executive documents which are presented to the House, except certain annual reports and certain other documents which are specified and which are not included in the ones to which I have called attention. The fact is that the old rule providing for the printing was adopted in 1895 for the express purpose of meeting the public printing act of 1895, to which reference is here made.

Now, it may be desirable by the approval of the Journal for the House now to declare that the illegal practice heretofore adopted shall be made legal in the practice of the House and adopt the Journal containing this provision. I think if I had been the Speaker or parliamentary clerk I should have done just what the present Speaker or the parliamentary clerk have done—ordered this document printed with illustrations; but the mistake was when they adopted the rule they did not provide for it. Now we will be asked by a vote on the approval of the Journal to condone the practice, and, so far as the practice of the House is concerned, to validate what has been done and what will be done in the future.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to approve the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 81, answered "present" 9, not voting 144, as follows:

Mr. BROWN with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. FRANCIS with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GREGG of Texas with Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. GUDGER with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. GREENE of Vermont.

Mr. LEWIS with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. KORBLY with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. MILLER.

Mr. SMITH of New York with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STANLEY with Mr. NYE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama with Mr. PLUMLEY.

Mr. THAYER with Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. WHITE with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.

Mr. STACK with Mr. VARE.

Mr. LINDSAY with Mr. WOOD of New Jersey.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I find I have a general pair with Mr. RICHARDSON, of Alabama. If he was present he would undoubtedly vote "aye." I voted "no," and I desire to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. THISTLEWOOD was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as "present."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MANN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Journal was approved.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Journal was approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Journal was approved.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard on that. Rule XVIII provides:

> When a motion has been made and carried or lost it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report or a motion to adjourn, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House—

And so forth. It is a right under the rule that can not be held to be dilatory.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been held time and again by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] himself that a motion to reconsider may be dilatory. Whenever it is apparent that the purpose of any motion or any action is to unnecessarily retard business or to prevent the House from transacting business, the Speaker has uniformly held that the action is dilatory. The decision that the rule applies to the motion to reconsider is to be found in section 5735, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents, a ruling made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. To present a motion of higher privilege than a motion to reconsider, under the rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that pending this point of order the gentleman can not do so.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I was on my feet trying to get recognition when the gentleman was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The power of recognition is lodged in the Chair. All of these rules have to be taken together and considered together, and the intention of all of them is to expedite business instead of retarding it. [Applause.]

So the Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to argue this for a reasonable length of time.

Mr. MANN. Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. It is perfectly patent, I think, if the Speaker should now hold my motion to reconsider out of order, the Speaker could not hold it out of order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Could not hold what out of order to-morrow?

Mr. MANN. A motion to reconsider out of order to-morrow. The rule is that any member of the majority on the same or succeeding day may move for the reconsideration of the vote. Now, when they say that a motion to reconsider is dilatory, I would state that a motion to reconsider is made on almost every proposition. It is one of the rights to enter the motion immediately or enter it next day under this rule. I do not see how the Speaker can hold that such motion is dilatory when it is in order at any time to-day or at any time to-morrow. Others matters could take precedence of it after it is made, unquestionably, under the rules, but the right to enter a motion to reconsider always has been held a privilege in which the Members had a right to be protected. Take a bill that passes the House, will the Speaker hold that if a motion is made to reconsider that that motion is dilatory? Any Member of the House may make a motion next day, and the delay of a motion may hold up the sending of the bill to the other body.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is not only possible, but it has been done. Mr. Watson, Speaker pro tempore in 1898, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was a Member of the House, declined to entertain a motion of Mr. Bailey to reconsider a vote on the ground that the gentleman was making it as a dilatory motion

It is patent to everyone in the House that since 12 o'clock noon to-day a filibuster has been going on. Whenever that becomes apparent, a motion, even though it might serve some useful purpose——

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. HELM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HELM. Has it not been over five minutes since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in response to a question by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], said that he was conducting a filibuster and intended to conduct it until the cows came home?

Mr. MANN. No; I did not so declare.

The SPEAKER. There is no use to argue it. The motion is dilatory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be settled by the House. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the motion to appeal is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. It has taken three hours of the House in which to approve the Journal.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I invite the attention of the Speaker to the rule of this House that a conference report can be presented at any time a Member thinks fit.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not in order now.

The SPEAKER. That is not the purpose for which the Chair recognized the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman, under the rules of this House, presents a conference report on the part of the managers of the House on the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and I give notice in behalf of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who is indisposed to-day, that he will call it up to-morrow morning on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope that will be earlier than to-day. [Laughter.]

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I rise to a question of personal privilege. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Questions of personal privilege are very serious questions.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I send to the Clerk's desk, Mr. Speaker, a copy of the Washington Herald of date January 10, 1913, and desire to have the Clerk read the article indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPRESENTATIVE CLARK NOW A MEMBER OF THE ANANIAS CLUB—HIS STATEMENTS MADE ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE REFUTED BY THE ASSOCIATION UNDER WHOSE AUSPICES HE SPOKE AND SOME OF HIS HEARERS—HERALD'S REPORT OF SPEECH CORRECT.

Representative FRANK CLARK'S futile attempt on the floor of the House to avoid responsibility for statements he made at a mass meeting of the East Washington Democratic Association Monday night, as reported by the Washington Herald, was thwarted last night through a resolution adopted by the East Washington Democratic Association, which practically places Representative CLARK in the Ananias Club.

The East Washington Democratic Association itself adopted a resolution at its meeting last night placing itself on record as declaring the Washington Herald's report to be correct. Additionally, four citizens who heard the speech also declared the Washington Herald's report to be correct.

The following excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the proceedings of the House for January 8 will show the action of Representative CLARK:

"QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

"Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege and ask that the Clerk will read the article in the Washington Herald of yesterday around which the blue pencil has been marked.

"The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"'There are Senators and Representatives occupying seats in Congress to-day who have allied themselves with real estate sharks in this city to fleece the Government of hundreds of thousands of dollars by seeking to sell to it large areas of land in out-of-the-way places for public park purposes, some of which are in ravines so deep that the Capitol could be set in them and you could not see the Indian which surmounts its dome.'

"This was the statement made last night by Representative FRANK CLARK of Florida in a speech at the mass meeting of the East Washington Democratic Association in Donohue's Hall, 314 Pennsylvania Avenue SE.

CHARGE AGAINST HERALD.

"Mr. CLARK of Florida: Mr. Speaker, if this publication referred only to me and reflected only upon me, I think I would not ask the time of the House to mention it. But it puts me in the attitude as a Member of this House of arraigning not only Members of this body but also Members of another branch of the legislative department of this Government and of charging them with the gravest of crimes.

"I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that not one word of truth is contained in that statement. I desire to say that not a single Washington newspaper was represented at that meeting, save the Washington Star, and the reporter of that paper gave about as accurate an account of the meeting as is usually given by reporters of newspapers. * * *

"What I did say, Mr. Speaker, was this, and I say it now, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD supports every word of it: I did say that the District of Columbia has practically no government; that it has three commissioners, appointed by the President, not responsible in any sense to the people of the District. And I say that the real estate sharks, according to my observation, after eight years of service in this city, were controlling the destinies of this city. I did say that frequently in bills there comes before this House propositions to buy waste places in out-of-the-way locations for park purposes, and I instanced one case wherein I said there was a proposition by a real estate concern to unload upon the Government for a fabulous price a large tract of land having gullies in it so deep that I believe the Capitol could be planted in the bottom of the gulf and that the head of the Indian that surmounts the dome of this Capitol could not be seen above it."

The Washington Herald, not having the privilege of the floor of the House to reply to Mr. CLARK, requested some of the gentlemen present at the Monday night meeting to state their opinion as to the bulk of the charges made by the gentleman from Florida. The following speaks for itself.

William McMahon, of 620 C Street NE., made the following statement yesterday:

"I was present at the mass meeting held by the East Washington Democratic Association in Donohoe's Hall, 314 Pennsylvania Avenue SE., Monday night, January 6, 1913, heard the speech delivered by Representative FRANK CLARK of Florida, and state that the report of his speech as printed in the Washington Herald on the following morning was correct."

F. H. Arendes, of 610 G Street SE., made the same statement.

A. Weaver, of 1412 Eleventh Street NW., made the same statement.

William S. Riley, of 209 Second Street SE., made the same statement.

In addition to this, the following resolution was adopted by the East Washington Democratic Association at its meeting last night:

"Be it resolved, That the East Washington Democratic Association hereby place itself upon record as declaring that the report of speech delivered by Representative FRANK CLARK of Florida at a mass meeting of the East Washington Democratic Association, in Donohoe's Hall, Monday night, January 6, 1913, as printed in the Washington Herald January 7, 1913, was correct.

"WILLIAM S. RILEY, President.
"PATRICK KENNEDY, Secretary.

"JANUARY 9, 1913."

HERALD WAS REPRESENTED.

Similarly erroneous was Representative CLARK'S statement that the Washington Herald was not represented at the meeting. A reporter for the Washington Herald attended the meeting, as citizens there will testify.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this does not involve a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to the gentleman's getting time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order, because it does involve my character.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Twenty minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will not take five minutes. If I can not get more than that, I do not want it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Florida be given five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I do not want five minutes, and I want the Speaker to say whether or not this article involves my character as a Representative in this body.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is a controversy between the gentleman and a local newspaper as to what he said at some place. We must get the legislative bill into conference. The river and harbor bill is under consideration, and there are a number of appropriation bills that must be disposed of and which must be given some opportunity to be considered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order that the question is not privileged?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it does not affect the gentleman's character.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed 20 minutes in which to address this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to 20 minutes. Ten minutes may be sufficient. Will not the gentleman take 10 minutes?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would prefer, first, that the Speaker rule on the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. This Speaker has been very liberal about letting in questions of privilege where a Member of the House claims that he has been lied about. The Chair does not think, upon a consultation of the decisions about it, that the truth or untruth of these newspaper charges constitutes a question of personal privilege if they are not made about the gentleman from Florida in his representative capacity; and that is the rule—that the charge must be made against him in his representative capacity.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the Speaker will permit me just a moment, that article refers to statements made by me on this floor in my representative capacity.

The SPEAKER. If so, it does affect the gentleman's character in his representative capacity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, misrepresentations of a gentleman's speech on the floor do not raise questions of personal privilege. That has repeatedly been held.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will point out the particular passages where he claims his privilege has been invaded.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. This article, Mr. Speaker, undertakes to report what I said upon the floor of this House on the 8th day of January last as a Member of this House, and, commenting upon the statements which I made in my place as a Member, they use this language:

The Washington Herald, not having the privilege of the floor of the House to reply to Mr. CLARK, requested some of the gentlemen present at the Monday night meeting to state their opinion as to the bulk of the charges made by the gentleman from Florida.

And then they quote a number of people, controverting what I said upon this floor.

The SPEAKER. But that is all outside the House. In order to make a thing a question of privilege it must be about the Member in his representative capacity.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, does it not affect a Member in his representative capacity to charge that he is a fit member of the Ananias Club—that he is a liar?

The SPEAKER. Not if the whole transaction is outside of the House, or if it is simply a criticism on a speech delivered in the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Growing out of what the Member has said here?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will you allow me one word?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. There might be some question about whether this was an item of news, but the first line of this paper says:

Representative CLARK now a member of the Ananias Club.

The SPEAKER. That all took place outside of the House.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It says:

Representative CLARK now a member of the Ananias Club.

That may not be news to the majority of this House, but at the same time it is published as news to the public. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Of course, it is exceedingly unpleasant for any man to be slandered or lied about or misrepresented; but the rule is that the criticism, slander, or whatever it is alleged to be, must be about the Member in his representative capacity.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of this House that it give me 15 minutes to reply to this statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks 15 minutes to reply to this statement. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will object unless the gentleman limits it to 10 minutes. We have already wasted 5 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. You have wasted it. I have not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall object to 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman want to request 10 minutes?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; but if some other gentleman requests that I be given 10 minutes I will use the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 10 minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] have 10 minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an affidavit made by Capt. W. M. Potter, a captain in the Union Army, who was present at that meeting and heard that speech. He gives the lie to every statement in that article.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to print this document as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The affidavit referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 10, 1913.

The following statement is made under oath relative to the controversy between the Washington Herald and the Hon. FRANK CLARK, Representative from the second district of Florida.

At a meeting of the East Washington Democratic Club, held at the East Washington Hall, No. 314 Pennsylvania Avenue SE., Monday evening, January 6, 1913, which meeting was addressed by Mr. CLARK of Florida, after the meeting had adjourned, a young man representing himself as a reporter for the Herald asked me for a statement as to what had transpired at the meeting, telling me that he was engaged at the Capitol and that he could not be present at the club at an earlier hour.

I presented the reporter with some resolutions that were unanimously adopted relative to the police force and the street lights in east Washington, and told him that if the Herald could not publish the resolutions in full not to publish them at all. This reporter asked me who the speakers were who spoke at the meeting. I told him Mr. Price, of Alabama, Mr. CLARK, of Florida, and myself. He wanted to know what Mr. CLARK said, and I gave him a correct account of what Mr. CLARK had said; and I did not tell him that Mr. CLARK said in his speech, "There are Senators and Representatives occupying seats in Congress to-day who have allied themselves with real estate sharks in this city to fleece the Government of hundreds of thousands of dollars by seeking to sell to it large areas of land in out-of-the-way places for public-park purposes. * * *" I quoted Mr. CLARK to the reporter as having spoken of land deals in the past and not as to any such transaction now pending in Congress.

There was not, to my knowledge, any reporter present at the meeting except Mr. Brooke, of the Star, and the Herald reporter was not present during the meeting and received his matter for publication from me after the meeting had adjourned.

I make this statement without any solicitation upon the part of Mr. CLARK or any other person, but for the purpose of having justice done to all parties. Two Herald reporters called to see me; and I told them to correct their statement of January 7, 1913, to conform with the facts.

Respectfully, W. M. POTTER.

Sworn to before me this January 10, 1913.

[SEAL.] CHARLES M. EMMONS,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Mr. Kyle B. Price, who was present and heard every word of that speech and who gives the lie to every statement in the Washington Herald.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have this document printed in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
January 20, 1913.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLARK: I desire to make a statement relative to the articles published in the Washington Herald of January 7 and 10 containing alleged quotations of remarks made by you at the mass meeting on January 6 at 314 Pennsylvania Avenue SE.

As you know, I was present and addressed the meeting. I sat within 3 feet of you through your address. You did not make the statement published under quotations in the Herald of January 7. I called your attention to the article before the statements were made by you on the floor of the House. The Herald reporter approached me on the 8th and I told him that you did not make the statement, and as he was not present when any of the addresses were delivered he should not have published a hearsay statement of so much importance.

The reporter did not attend the meeting, but came in after it was over.

KYLE B. PRICE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a statement signed by Dr. Charles M. Emmons, who presided at the meeting at which I spoke, and by Mr. W. E. Ryan, Mr. Martin J. Madden, Mr. Joseph Reardon, Mr. Thomas Hanlon, and Mr. Robert F. Bradbury, who give the lie to every statement contained in the Washington Herald.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have that document printed in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1913.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Noticing that the Washington Herald of January 7, 1913, purporting to give an account of a mass meeting held at Donohoe's Hall, 314 Pennsylvania Avenue SE., on the night of the 6th of January, 1913, at which meeting you delivered an address, and that the Herald in quoting, or attempting to quote, your remarks on that occasion used this language: "There are Senators and Representatives occupying seats in Congress to-day who have allied themselves with real-estate sharks in this city to fleece the Government of hundreds of thousands of dollars by seeking to sell to it large areas of land in out-of-the-way places for public park purposes, some of which are in ravines so deep that the Capitol could be set in them and you could not see the Indian which surmounts its dome"; also being aware of the fact that on the 8th day of January, 1913, on the floor of the House of Representatives, you denied making any such statement as is attributed to you by the Herald, we take this method of saying that each and every one of us whose name is signed to this communication was present at the meeting of January 6, 1913, and heard every word uttered by you on that occasion. We do not hesitate to say that there is not one word of truth contained in the report so printed in the Washington Herald of January 7, 1913, and that nothing you said on that occasion could be distorted into any such statement as that with which you are charged.

We desire to say further that the Washington Herald did not have at that meeting any reporter or other representative at the reporters' table or at any part of the hall to our knowledge; in fact, it was publicly stated by more than one speaker on that occasion that not a single newspaper of the city of Washington was represented at the meeting save the Washington Star, which was represented by Mr. Brooks.

We desire to say further that we were amazed to see published in the Washington Herald of January 10, 1913, a resolution alleged to have been passed by the East Washington Democratic Association, wherein it is alleged that the report of your speech as published in the Herald of January 7, 1913, was correct. We are informed that only 10 or 11 persons were present at that meeting.

Regardless of how many persons were present at said meeting, and regardless of what influences were brought to bear to impel them to act, the fact remains that the publication of the report of your speech in the Washington Herald of January 7, 1913, was absolutely and unqualifiedly untrue.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I desire also to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Dr. Charles M. Emmons, the presiding officer of that meeting, who gives the lie to every statement contained in the Washington Herald.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the document referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1913.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I desire to say that I was surprised to see you reported so incorrectly in the Washington Herald of January 7, 1913. I presided at the meeting as chairman of the evening and sat within 3 feet of you when you made your speech, and you did not make any statement that reflected in any way upon any Member of the present Congress.

I invited any reporters present to take seats at the table provided, and Mr. Brooks, of the Star, was the only newspaper reporter to respond. I know of my own knowledge that no representative of the Herald was present at our meeting during the time the speeches were made.

Respectfully, CHAS. M. EMMONS, M. D.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to say now, Mr. Speaker, that it is extremely unpleasant to me to again refer to this controversy; that this man Kennedy, who signs that resolution as secretary, was not present at the meeting at which I spoke. He is not secretary of the association, and knew absolutely nothing of what occurred.

I desire to say further that this man Riley, who has signed as president of the association, was present; that three or four nights ago, in company with three other gentlemen, I visited Riley, and Riley admitted to me that the statements of that resolution were absolutely and unqualifiedly lies; and that he begged those present not to pass the resolution; that they stated that the reason for it was that this reporter of the Washington Herald, whose name I do not know, whom I never saw, and do not know anything about, came to them and begged them to have a meeting, because he said that the owners or managers of the Washington Herald had said to him that his position was dependent on his establishing something to sustain the report which he had made of that meeting. And in order to save his job they passed this resolution; that there were about 10 men present.

Riley agreed to furnish me a written statement, that I could file with the other statements; he is an undertaker on Second Street SE.; I have visited his place and talked with him personally and over the telephone. Finally over the telephone Riley said in substance, "I am a citizen of Washington, and I can not afford to enter into any controversy with a newspaper in this city, because I have got to make my living here," and therefore he could not tell the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the proprietors or managers of the Washington Herald who forced this young man or old man, whatever he may be, to resort to this method to procure an indorsement of a lie are just as much liars as the reporter who wrote the article, and he is the most infamous liar that I have ever come in contact with.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am taking no advantage of my privilege here. I said in my first speech, and I say it now, that I am responsible everywhere, at any time, and on all occasions for denouncing this man and these people as a lot of consummate liars, and I would be delighted if they would send any of their cowardly and lying gang to see me. That is all I care to say, sir. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment?

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON SCHOOL HYGIENE (S. DOC. NO. 1023).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 19th of August last Congress passed the following resolution:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby requested to direct the Secretary of State to issue invitations to foreign Governments to participate in the Fourth International Congress on School Hygiene, to be held in Buffalo, N. Y., August 25 to 30, 1913: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted at any time hereafter in connection with said congress.

At the time the resolution was passed there were three gentlemen in Buffalo whose means and whose interest in the congress were such that the people of Buffalo had every reason to believe that the expense of the congress would be contributed by these, their citizens. Since that time the three citizens have died, and there is no written obligation on the part of their estates to meet the necessary expenses.

I recommend the appropriation of $30,000 (to which the citizens of Buffalo will have to add a substantial sum) as a contribution of the Government to the fund necessary to make the reception of the congress accord with what we regard as American hospitality.

Personally I am very much opposed to any invitation of this sort at the instance of the Government in which the Government does not assume all the expenses of entertainment. Other countries much less able than the United States never extend an invitation of this sort without having proper preparation for the reception of the guests of the nation.

In the peculiar circumstances of the present resolution I urgently recommend the appropriation of the sum mentioned to enable the obligation of the invitation to be properly met. The proviso in the resolution was an unfortunate one, in my judgment, but, whether it was so or not, under the circumstances it offers no reason for Congress not to take the proper course.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1913.

PANAMA RAILROAD (S. DOC. NO. 1022).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of Congress, the Sixty-third annual report of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 22, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. That requires unanimous consent, I believe. I have no objection to it, but I want an understanding about it.

The SPEAKER. How does it require unanimous consent?

Mr. CANNON. Because there is nothing I know of that will dispose of it except a motion, in the absence of unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has been the universal practice for the Speaker to refer it.

Mr. CANNON. My understanding is that it has been the practice of the Speaker to refer it; but when you get the general annual message it goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by the action of the House. My understanding is that a single objection would bring it to the House to dispose of.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that the message of the President shall be referred to the proper committee without debate. That comes as near being automatic as you can have it.

Mr. CANNON. To what committee?

The SPEAKER. To the appropriate committee. The Chair passes on that in the first instance.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the Chair will examine that question before he makes a ruling as a precedent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the invariable practice has been for the Speaker to refer the message, and if any gentleman believes the Speaker erroneously refers it it is held to be a privileged motion.

Mr. CANNON. That applies to bills only.

Mr. MANN. A privileged motion at the time.

Mr. CANNON. At the time; that is right. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to interpose an objection.

The SPEAKER. It has been the universal practice for the Speaker to refer the message, and the gentleman himself must have so decided it a hundred times.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the demand for the regular order should be made—and this is a request for information in the best of faith—and a conference report or some highly privileged matter did not intervene, would the business coming before the House be the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, the bill H. R. 23669, on which the previous question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. This particular question has never been passed upon. The truth is that the matter of Calendar Wednesday has never been construed except under the administration of my immediate predecessor, Mr. CANNON, and by the present occupant of the chair. Both the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], when Speaker of the House, and the present occupant of the chair held that when business was unfinished on Calendar Wednesday it went over until the next Calendar Wednesday as unfinished business, and the present occupant of the chair has held, and the ruling has been universally acquiesced in, that on account of the peculiar phraseology of the rule establishing Calendar Wednesday business that was not finished on Tuesday went over until Thursday. But no case like this has heretofore arisen. This is a case where the previous question has been ordered on the bill under consideration on Wednesday. There is no precedent on this particular rule, but there are precedents, and plenty of them, where the same case has arisen with respect to pension matters on Fridays and with reference to matters coming up on Mondays. The rulings seem to have made a differentiation between a bill that was not finished where the previous question was not ordered and a bill that had not been finished but where the previous question had been ordered, and as to unfinished business on Fridays and Mondays where the previous question had been ordered on a bill the ruling has been that it came up as unfinished business on the following legislative day. The Chair is unable to differentiate in his own mind between what ought to happen with respect to the Friday business and what ought to happen about the Calendar Wednesday business where exactly the same circumstances prevail.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair does not desire to rule, I wish to prefer a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair may as well rule now and be through with it. The Chair holds that where the previous question has been ordered on a bill under consideration on Calendar Wednesday which is unfinished it is the unfinished business on Thursday. As this is the first ruling ever made upon this question, if any gentleman desires to test it, he has the right of appeal.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ARTS AND LETTERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 21, 1913.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bills (S. 4355) incorporating the National Institute of Arts and Letters and (S. 4356) incorporating the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6497. An act to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 14053) to increase the pensions of surviving soldiers of Indian wars in certain cases, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. GORE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6497. An act to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture.

LOAN COMPANIES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8768) known generally as the District of Columbia loan-shark bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1290).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8768) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the title of the bill.

BEN JOHNSON,
J. A. M. ADAIR,
L. C. DYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHARLES CURTIS,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
T. H. PAYNTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8768) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind, by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended as to each of the said amendments in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: Strikes out the modification, proposed by the Senate, so as to permit individuals to loan their own money at a rate of interest not to exceed 10 per cent per annum, and without being required to obtain a license for engaging in such business.

On amendment No. 2: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, with reference to requiring bonds to be renewed and refiled annually in October of each year.

On amendment No. 3: Strikes out the modification, proposed by the Senate, for the publication of the annual report in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the District of Columbia.

On amendment No. 4: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, as follows:

No such loan greater than $200 shall be made to any one person: Provided, That any person contracting, directly or indirectly, for or receiving a greater rate of interest than that fixed in this act, shall forfeit all interest so contracted for or received; and in addition thereto shall forfeit to the borrower a sum of money, to be deducted from the amount due for principal, equal to one-fourth of the principal sum: And provided further, That any person in the employ of the Government who shall loan money in violation of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office or position, and be removed from the same.

On amendment No. 5: Agrees to the provision, proposed by the Senate, striking out section 7 of the House bill and inserting in lieu thereof a new section to be known as section 7. The only effect of this is to provide for a minimum as well as a maximum punishment for violation of the act and does not provide any greater punishment for the second or subsequent violation of the act.

On amendment No. 6: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, excepting from the act section 6, which section provides that no attorneys' or agents' fees shall be charged or collected in foreclosure of any loan exceeding 10 per cent of the amount found due in such foreclosure proceedings.

On amendment No. 7: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, that pawnbrokers shall not be included within the provisions of this act.

On amendment No. 8: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, that section 9 of said bill be stricken out, said section providing that it shall be unlawful to incorporate any provision for liquidated or other damages as a penalty for any default or forfeiture thereunder.

On amendment No. 9: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, that section 10 be stricken out, said section providing that nothing contained in this act shall be held to apply to the legitimate business of national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, or real estate brokers, as defined in the act of Congress of July 1, 1902.

On amendments Nos. 10, 11, and 12: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, for the renumbering of sections 11, 12, and 13.

BEN JOHNSON,
J. A. M. ADAIR,
L. C. DYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, the conference report upon this bill, H. R. 8768, leaves it in substantially the same form in which it passed the House. The only changes that are included in this conference report are substantially as follows: First, that the bond given by these companies shall be refiled annually in October of each year; second, that no greater sum than $200 shall be loaned to any one person, and providing further that any person in the employ of the Government who shall loan money in violation of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office or position; and, third, it changes the punishment provided by the House by simply making a provision for minimum punishment as well as the maximum, and leaves the punishment about as it was. The report of the conferees, with the above unimportant exceptions, therefore leaves the bill practically as it passed this House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me one minute?

Mr. DYER. I yield the gentleman from Illinois one minute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not especially desire to oppose the conference report, though I am absolutely satisfied that no one can afford to loan small amounts of money at a rate of 1 per cent a month and pay the expense of preparing and filing the papers. It will be only a short time before Congress is asked to make further legislation in order to permit some poor man to borrow five or ten dollars when he has to have it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL OF PARIS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, and move the adoption of the report. It is printed in the RECORD of January 21, and I would like to have the statement read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to have the statement read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1351).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

HENRY D. CLAYTON,
JOHN W. DAVIS,
JOHN A. STERLING,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
CHARLES CURTIS,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

1. It was agreed that the Senate recede from its opposition to the House amendment in the following words:

Provided, That the total value of the property owned at any one time by the said corporation shall not exceed $2,000,000.

And that the Senate agree to this amendment. (Page 2, line 7.)

2. It was agreed that the Senate recede from its opposition to the House amendment in the following words:

SEC. 9. That this charter shall continue for the term of 50 years: Provided, That at no time shall said corporation hold real estate except for the necessary use of officers and hospital purposes of said hospital.

And that the Senate agree to the same.

Page 5, strike out lines 3 and 4 and insert the above.

HENRY D. CLAYTON,
JOHN W. DAVIS,
JOHN A. STERLING,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report back the bill H. R. 26080, with Senate amendments, and I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. (H. Rept. 1379.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26080) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the Senate amendments in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the gentleman asked unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. I shall ask for a separate vote at the proper time on two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of these amendments in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on amendments numbered 31 and 68.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments except Nos. 31 and 68.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments except Nos. 31 and 68. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a separate vote on amendments numbered 31 and 68, and the Clerk will report amendment numbered 31.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 31: Page 15 of the bill, line 4, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to Senate amendment numbered 31.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman want any time?

Mr. MANN. I think there ought to be some little discussion of this. I only want a moment or so as far as I am concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he take some time from the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. It may be I would not want any time if other gentlemen are going to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. Each gentleman who desires to speak is entitled to five minutes, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose other gentlemen will discuss the amendment. This amendment is one of three Senate amendments increasing the compensation of the clerk, the assistant clerk, and the janitor of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. This particular amendment is the one which relates to the Clerk.

The clerk now receives $2,500 per annum, and that was the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House. The Senate by amendment has increased or proposes to increase the amount to $3,000. As it seems to me whatever is done with these employees of the Judiciary Committee is likely to be done sooner or later with the employees of the other large committees of the House, it seems to me desirable to have a vote in the House on this subject and not leave it either to the Senate to determine what should be the compensation of House employees or to leave it to go into a final conference report, or even to leave it so that the conferees on the part of the House might be subject to the natural pressure of friends of the clerk who desire the salary increased. If it shall become the intention of the House to increase the salaries of all of these clerks of major committees, I have no complaint to make about it. I am not sure but this salary ought to be increased, but I am quite sure that the Members of the House ought to determine the matter in the House by a vote here.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to disagree to Senate amendment 31.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 133, noes none.

So the motion to disagree was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 68.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 68: On and after October 1, 1913, the whole number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and the whole number of collectors of internal revenue shall not exceed 67.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, last year, I think it was, the House in passing one of the appropriation bills cut down the number of internal-revenue collection districts by three. Is not that correct?

Mr. KAHN. Four.

Mr. MANN. Well, whatever the number is; we have often heard in the House how impossible it was to reduce a salary or dispense with a job. I do not know just how it happened that without a terrible contest it has been possible for Congress to agree on the reduction of the number of collection districts from 67 to 63. I think it might be well that they be reduced 50 per cent more. But, however, it was last year. As soon as the reduction is again in force, up comes again the same old war cry against dispensing with a job. The Senate has now proposed an amendment in this bill to restore the number of these collection districts to what it was before the spasm of economy struck Congress. I expect to have, at least, a standing vote on this subject in order to ascertain whether we have the same feeling after election as to reducing economy as we had before.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The members of the committee representing the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives in the last session of Congress endeavored to reduce the number of collection districts. We have not changed our position. The bill went to another legislative body, and there the number was increased. I know of no reason why we should not stand by what we did at the last session of Congress.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. In the recommendation of the committee or action of the committee was there any special place named or picked out where these districts should be abandoned or consolidated?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; because the internal-revenue districts are arranged by the executive department of the Government. We simply provided the whole number of districts should not exceed 63. The President, in the exercise of his discretion, discontinued certain internal-revenue districts.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman have the information as to the four that have been discontinued?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One was discontinued in Texas, one in Pennsylvania, one in South Carolina, and one, I think, in California. [Laughter.] But the one in South Carolina did not affect me.

Mr. RAKER. Personally, of course, it does not affect me, but it affects the State of California, and that is sufficient to make me interested in this matter; but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact—and the House, I think, will consider it—that there was a provision in the bill reducing the number from 67 to 63 last year, but somebody, somewhere, or somehow, went into the most populous and most necessary district in the State of California, the one containing the capital of that State, where it is absolutely necessary there should be a revenue office and a collector, and the office was abandoned and consolidated and sent 100 miles from Sacramento, taking it right out of that great Sacramento and San Joaquin Valley, where they need it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They did not expect California to get much sympathy from this administration, did they?

Mr. RAKER. It is a question of business and not a question of politics with me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the gentleman's misfortune. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, in regard to this matter it seems to me that it is an unwise provision to reduce these collectors, leaving it absolutely undetermined where the cut shall be applied, and to go into a populous district where much work is being done, as in the district of Sacramento in the State of California, a district which is populous and growing all the time, and where a large internal-revenue business is transacted, and remove the office. This order came as a thunderclap from a clear sky, to the effect that on a certain day the revenue office at Sacramento should be abolished and all the business and books would be transferred to San Francisco, when, as a matter of fact, the Chamber of Commerce at Sacramento, and those interested at Redding, and those at Red Bluff, and at Vina, one of the largest territories in the West, being an internal-revenue district, knew there was too much work for the collector and his assistants in San Francisco at the time of the abandonment of the office at Sacramento and its transfer to San Francisco.

When the Government intends to provide the necessary equipment, including men to do the business, the necessary office force ought to go into the place that needs the work and needs the men, to the end that those who are paying the revenue to the Government, those from whom the Government is receiving revenue and with whom it is doing business should be accommodated, and that particular collection district ought not to be abandoned; one that is doing a good business and is much needed should not be abolished.

Now some of the Members of the House might think this is in my district. It is not. That does not make any difference. The State of California and the people of that district are entitled to consideration. On a question of economy, I stand for economy as well as any man on earth, but when you talk about depriving the citizens of a community of the necessary means by which they do their business, it is not economy. Efficiency is economy; if it costs to have efficiency, expenditure is not wasteful when needed if it give efficiency and service to the public. If you spend a thousand dollars and get back a thousand dollars' worth, that is economy, if it is needed. If you appropriate $100,000 and get only $50 worth back in service, that is waste or graft, if you please, and not economy. While I am a Member on this side of the aisle I shall contend that the necessary money should be supplied wherever that money is needed to advance the conditions of this country, and improve it as it ought to be improved, and keep it virile as this Nation ought to be kept, and that wherever there are places where the citizens of this country require offices and officers necessary for them to do their business, we ought to provide them with those necessary assistants and not cut them out of that consideration that they ought to have.

While I do not know anything about the other three, I can say to this House from personal examination and from discussing it with numbers of men, not only those living in town, but also those out in the country, who have the material put in bond and who deal with this particular revenue office, that they say it will practically, in some instances, injure their business and drive it away from their localities. The testimony in the hearing before the Committee on Appropriations shows that these officers should be restored. The following is what occurred in the hearing:

REDUCTION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE DISTRICTS.

[See also p. 62.]

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Cabell, the last legislative bill reduced the number of internal-revenue districts to 63. Have you been embarrassed by that reduction?

Mr. CABELL. Very greatly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was hoping we could effect a still further reduction.

Mr. CABELL. Practically no saving has resulted from it, and a great inconvenience to the taxpayer has resulted, and also the requirement of a strong-arm policy on the part of the Government. If the Government were willing to stand the criticism and cause the taxpayer as much more inconvenience in cost as the money they collect, they could collect everything from Washington. You could just say: "You must come here. We do not care for your inconvenience or the cost to you." The collector's offices are established primarily for the convenience of the taxpayer and secondarily for closer supervision of the work. Now, there is no question but that the abolition of those offices has cost the taxpayers many times what is the normal saving to the Government. It requires the taxpayers to take long trips to see about their plans for distilleries and breweries and the settlement of technical questions, where they have to personally confer with the collector, and incidentally we lose closer supervision of the service, and there is no question in my mind that the Government has lost by it and that the taxpayers have also greatly lost by it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Cabell, on page 112 is a table that is furnished under the requirements of the law by a statistician in your bureau, or in whatever bureau of the Treasury Department has to furnish it, which neglects to give us the totals.

Mr. CABELL. The totals of the appropriations or the totals of expenditures?

Mr. JOHNSON. It gives the salaries and then the total salaries of the collectors and the total traveling expenses, but does not show what the balances are.

Mr. CABELL. For 1912 the total appropriation was $2,150,000. The total expenditures were $2,105,472.27. There was a balance of $44,527.73. The reason for that balance is that you have such criminal penalties for running over your allowance in even any one month that nobody is going to take any chances on that. For this year you gave us $2,100,000. We must leave a certain amount of that unallotted to put a buffer between the expenditures and going to jail, and you have got to leave about $50,000 for that. You see we have 63 districts and some 2,000 men paid from this appropriation, and we can not possibly estimate in advance what their traveling expenses, etc., are going to be. We can not possibly estimate in advance how many breweries are going to put in pipe lines, where the law requires us to assign an officer, and for the first time in the history of the Internal Revenue Bureau we have appropriated down below the $10,000 reserve, and both our chief of the Accounts Division and the deputy commissioner in charge of this work have made me give an assurance that I will go to jail and not them. It is probably presumptuous in me, but I take the liberty of repeating what I have said before: You can not draw the line on appropriations for collecting money like you can on appropriations for spending money. In appropriations for spending money every dollar not appropriated is a dollar saved, but when you are collecting money the failure to spend a dollar may lose you $500.

Mr. GILLETT. What do you mean by that?

Mr. CABELL. Suppose you do not send a deputy to canvass a certain territory. Suppose you do not send a man to put a distillery under surveillance, where one can steal $500 a day, and suppose, in order to cut expenses, the collector directs a deputy, in making his monthly trip, that he need not canvass one county because it costs him $15 for livery, and suppose you lose $2,000 from that county in that period. I do not think any person could be familiar with the facts and not know that we lose at least 1 to 2 per cent of the tax a year, one-half of which is collectible if we had the men to go after it. One per cent of the internal-revenue tax is three million two hundred and twenty some thousand dollars.

Mr. GILLETT. You think you do now lose that much? How do you calculate that you lose 2 per cent?

Mr. CABELL. Just on the general principle of how close we canvass, and just figuring on where we put additional men into the field the returns that come from it. So that if you put more men in the field on the same ratio you would get more revenue.

Mr. GILLETT. They evade a certain amount of the tax.

Mr. CABELL. They evade and overlook it. Some of them unconsciously make returns that are in their own favor. Of course, we are a little suspicious of all returns of that kind. In the corporation-tax work alone, for instance, as a result of 15 of our agents examining less than one-third of the country, they have actually turned into the Treasury in two years a million and a half dollars. Now, two-thirds of the country is not touched and three years is the extreme limit in which you can correct any of those returns. I am satisfied there is a million and a half or two million dollars of corporation tax that has not been collected and never will be collected unless the force of agents on this work is increased.

Mr. GILLETT. But if you had had sufficient force you could have collected it?

Mr. CABELL. If we had 20 men more we could have turned in over a million dollars additional.

Mr. GILLETT. So our failure to appropriate enough has cost probably——

Mr. CABELL (interposing). The failure to spend $100,000 has undoubtedly cost from a million and a half to two million dollars in cash. There is no question about that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Cabell, I would like to ask you one other question about the reduction in the districts. They were reduced from 67 to 63. You think we can not reduce any more. What process was adopted in the reduction of the four?

Mr. CABELL. That was done by the President at the White House, and I could not tell you.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was done by Executive order?

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the bill which was passed last year reducing the number of revenue-collection districts by four was put into operation, and I assume that the Executive in determining which districts should be abolished chose those where the least inconvenience would result to the public and the least detriment to the public service.

Two of the districts consolidated were in the State of Pennsylvania. I can only say that if in the other consolidations there resulted the same inconvenience to the public and the same detriment to the public service the four districts ought to be restored. In abolishing the four districts Republican officeholders went out of office. It is equally true, as we all know, that if these districts are restored Democratic officers will be appointed. But notwithstanding that fact, judging from the experience of the Pennsylvania district that was abolished, I am heartily in favor of restoring the four revenue-collection districts.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, one of the districts affected by the reduction a year ago in the number of internal-revenue districts is that which I have the honor to represent. The headquarters were in Scranton. In Lackawanna and Luzerne Counties alone there are more than 600,000 people. The revenues of that district, the twelfth district of Pennsylvania, which was merged into the ninth district very unexpectedly, and to the great disappointment and chagrin of the people, increased $818,000 in the five years from June, 1906, to June, 1911. The revenues will continue to increase at a rapid rate in the future.

There were 30 districts or more in the United States with smaller revenues than my district, the twelfth district of Pennsylvania. I want to say to this House that it was against the interest of the public service to abolish any one of these districts, and that originally the thought was not to disturb one of these 4 districts. The President issued an order abolishing 4 other districts. That order was rescinded within a few hours, and 4 other districts than those intended to be abolished were stricken out, one of which was the twelfth Pennsylvania. Now I want to repeat what the gentleman from Pennsylvania my colleague [Mr. OLMSTED] said. We realize as Republican that we are going to lose the patronage of that office, but nevertheless we want that office restored. The question of patronage is immaterial, but it is material for northeastern Pennsylvania, with our great interests, to have this district reestablished.

In this connection let me quote from the statement of Mr. Royal E. Cabell, Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, to the subcommittee in charge of the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill:

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Cabell, the last legislative bill reduced the number of internal-revenue districts to 63. Have you been embarrassed by that reduction?

Mr. CABELL. Very greatly. Practically no saving has resulted from it, and a great inconvenience to the taxpayers has resulted, and also the requirement of a strong-arm policy on the part of the Government. * * * The collectors' offices are established primarily for the convenience of the taxpayer and secondarily for closer supervision of the work. Now, there is no question but that the abolition of those offices has cost the taxpayers many times what is the normal saving to the Government. It requires the taxpayers to take long trips to see about their plans for distilleries and breweries, and the settlement of technical questions where they have to personally confer with the collector, and incidentally we lose closer supervision of the service, and there is no question in my mind that the Government has lost by it and that the taxpayers have also greatly lost by it.

These statements of Commissioner Cabell apply with particular force to the former twelfth Pennsylvania district, a great and rapidly growing district, comprising the great anthracite producing counties of Lackawanna, Luzerne, and 18 other counties, with a total population, according to the last census, of 1,381,897 persons. The nominal saving of not more than $7,000 a year, caused by the merging of that district in the ninth Pennsylvania, will be small compared with the additional cost to the taxpayers by inconvenience and the actual loss to the Government through lack of the close supervision so essential to best results. Considerable of this nominal saving will be used with additional expense necessary to assemble from the greater distances the field forces, as is customary several times a year, for suggestions and discussion in the interest of the service. I repeat without hesitancy that the abolishment of the twelfth Pennsylvania district has resulted in a detriment to the service, a loss to the Government in revenues, and a great and costly inconvenience to the taxpayers.

The following statement of the twelfth revenue district of Pennsylvania, as per report for fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, will indicate the importance of this district.

Scranton, where the headquarters for the twelfth district was located, is the immediate center of one of the most densely populated areas on the continent, with the exception of the suburbs of a very few of the greatest cities.

According to a Census Office bulletin issued March 7, 1912, its "metropolitan" population (i. e., within 10 miles) was 314,538. This exceeds the similar populations of such cities as Louisville, Fall River, Lowell, Rochester, Seattle, Indianapolis, New Haven, Worcester, Columbus, Denver, Portland (Oreg.), Birmingham, Atlanta, Omaha, Syracuse, Toledo, Memphis, Richmond, Bridgeport, Dayton, Nashville, Grand Rapids, or Spokane.

These figures (314,538) do not include the important city of Wilkes-Barre, 18 miles south of Scranton, or its enormous suburban population, which would be affected almost equally with Scranton by the removal of the internal-revenue office from this city.

More than 700,000 people reside within 25 miles of Scranton, and a radius of 40 miles would embrace a population probably in excess of 1,000,000.

Scranton and the Lackawanna Valley is one of the richest regions on the globe in the per capita value of its output, and this territory of marvelous growth in population and wealth is justly entitled to all of the conveniences and benefits which the Government can provide.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that it was an injustice to this great and growing territory to deprive it of the convenience of this revenue district and that it should be restored at the earliest opportunity for the good of the service and the accommodation of taxpayers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In view of what the gentleman has said, perhaps it will be interesting to have some facts about this situation. Those in charge of this service gave information to Congress that four districts could be abolished. Congress provided that the number of internal-revenue districts should be reduced by four. When it became necessary to reduce the number, four districts were abolished, none of them being of those mentioned as unnecessary when the matter was presented to Congress. It may or may not be somewhat significant that the districts abolished were in California, Texas, South Carolina, and Pennsylvania. Gentlemen who will study the election returns may find the reason for the abolishment of these districts, especially when they read the hearings before the committee with reference to the districts that were then believed by those in charge of the service to be unnecessary.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Now, having found that out, and having the opportunity to correct it, and knowing the necessity for it, ought we not, for the efficiency of proper governmental service, to restore a place like that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that were a fact, I would say yes, and I hope that when the 4th of March comes the gentleman will be able to show those in charge of the administration what the facts are, and that he will be able to have the reasons control the establishment or discontinuance of these districts that Congress expected would control when it enacted the legislation.

Mr. RAKER. There is over half a million dollars of business done there. Does not that make it plain that it is necessary for the proper conduct of the public service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it be necessary for the conduct of the public service, and the executive department between this time and the next session of Congress will not readjust matters there as they should be for the proper transaction of the public business, I do not believe Congress will have any justification to refuse to create or provide an additional district to take care of that situation, even though some others may exist that are not necessary.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Considering the amount of agitation and discussion which has been had with reference to this subject of the abolishing of four internal-revnue districts, I should like to ask the gentleman whether he expects any better results will be attained in the abolishment of a large number of customhouses in accordance with the proposition which he skillfully put through last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the same policy be followed and the same reasons be adopted for abolishing customs districts as it is apparent were followed and adopted in abolishing the internal-revenue districts, I shall not hesitate to ask the Congress to repeal the law authorizing the reorganization of the customs service. Congress expects an administration to carry out laws in the interest of the public service and not in the interest of partisan politics. [Applause.] If that is to control, I do not think there will be any doubt about what will happen.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should like to ask the chairman of this committee if his attention has been called any further to the question of the piecework that is provided for in this bill? The question was raised by my colleague [Mr. MANN] during the consideration of this bill as to piecework in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department. I wish to say to the chairman—who, I believe, was fair about all of these things—that since the time I made the inquiry I have received information which satisfies me that there is a condition there under that piecework system which he himself would not permit to exist if he understood it. The employees there, instead of being satisfied, and their wages being increased, as reported by the head of the department, are being worked long hours for a small wage and under a condition that is impairing their health. If it is not too late, it seems to me this matter ought to be corrected. I ask the gentleman, if it is possible to take this matter up yet, that he give this question a little attention before the conference committee on this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I have here the official report—the latest I could get—which is for the fiscal year 1911, expiring on the 30th of June, 1912. There seems to be three California districts, one of which has been consolidated out. The San Francisco district collected almost $7,000,000 in round numbers. Just a little way from San Francisco—I was going to say a stone's throw, but it is farther than that—is Sacramento. There was collected in that district $713,171.09. Down in Los Angeles, the other district, the collections amounted to $948,810.24. I have not had time to examine as to Texas or as to the districts that were consolidated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman read the figures in the two Iowa districts? They are right there in the report, and have not been consolidated.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it may be that further consolidations are needed.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. There is no doubt whatever but that the two revenue districts in Iowa ought to be consolidated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what Congress had in mind, but they have not been consolidated.

Mr. CANNON. The statement of the gentleman from Iowa is honest. There is the district of Peoria, Ill., where they collect forty or fifty million dollars. The Chicago district is a very large one. Now, I just give the facts. How far is it from San Francisco to Sacramento?

Mr. KAHN. Ninety-one miles.

Mr. CANNON. It may be that that district ought to have been consolidated. I have thought for many years that perhaps other districts ought to be consolidated, and while I am talking about it, the law went into effect giving the President power to consolidate customs districts. He has full power. I believe there has not as yet been a report. Rather than to restore these districts, in my judgment, it seems to me that legislation might be in order to force other consolidations. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to take a vote, but in view of the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] I feel like I ought to make a statement. When this bill was under consideration in the House I was asked if there had been any complaint about piecework. I stated that no complaint had been made to the committee. After the bill passed the House and went to the Senate I saw something in one of the Washington papers to the effect that some people in the Auditor's office for the Post Office Department were dissatisfied.

On the following Sunday after that statement was made I spent several hours in the Auditor's office for the Post Office Department. I examined the pay roll of those who were engaged in piecework. I found that out of 183 people who were employed on piecework, 17 of them are making less money than they made before. All the others are making more, some as high as 95 per cent more than they made when they were on a salary. I asked if it was true that these people were working long hours and under unfavorable conditions. I was assured that no persons doing piecework were allowed to go on before 9 o'clock in the morning or to continue after half past 4 in the afternoon. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been unable to learn from a hurried inspection of the report whether it carries the provision with reference to soldiers who are required to make efficiency ratings in establishments other than executive departments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is such an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill carries that amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The bill carries that amendment, and it has been disagreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from Gen. John C. Black on that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print the letter he refers to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring further to your letter of December 21, 1912, stating that you have been requested by one of your constituents to inquire as to the interpretation of that portion of the recent amendment of the legislative act pertaining to Civil War veterans, especially as to the departments to which it applies, I have the honor to invite your attention to page 1618 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 16, 1913, the amendment offered by Senator SUTHERLAND to the legislative bill to add to the certainty and clearness of the law. He said that he had added, after the word "department," the words "or independent establishments," because there are some establishments that are not under the executive departments. He said also that the original law did not include the word "hereafter"; and he had also added, after the word "rank," the word "class," and after the word "salary" the words "or compensation," so as to embrace the whole subject matter. With these changes he had put in the limitation that it should apply only to soldiers, sailors, and marines who had seen active service in the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, or the Philippine insurrection.

I quote from a recent letter written by me, as follows:

"Section 4 of the legislative act approved August 23, 1912, is as follows:

"'The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency rating for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; it shall also provide a rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; it shall further provide for a rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary.'

"Manifestly it was the intention of Congress that efficiency ratings should be based upon the records of the individual employees, kept in each executive department and each independent establishment, and that the employees should have the right to have their efficiency ratings established on such records so kept and not upon others or by combining any others.

"It is manifest that the Congress intended to extend the benefits of its laws to each and every one of the properly enrolled employees of the Government, and all of this in regard to the promotion, demotion, or dismissal contemplated by the statute.

"After all this was done, some wise and kind man, having reference to the weakening hold on the public of the veteran soldiers, had added, and the committee reported, that in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped or reduced in rank or salary. I wish he had included 'independent establishments.'

"Inasmuch as this statute established an exception to the general rule, and under our system of interpretations such exceptions are construed strictissimi, it does not appear to me that the soldiers in the independent offices are included within the precise exception named in the statute. If the Congress intended otherwise and inadvertently omitted that statement, remedial legislation is easy; but the fashion of amending statutes by the will or notion of any administrative officer or his conception of what is good is so far-reaching and dangerous that it never ought to be indulged in. I am of opinion that the helping words of the statute do not refer to the honorably discharged soldiers in the Government Printing Office."

Very truly, yours, JOHN C. BLACK.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn, and the question is on disagreeing to Senate amendment 68.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 124 ayes and 11 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a conference and appoint conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BURLESON, and Mr. GILLETT.

THE LATE SENATOR HEYBURN.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, the 23d day of February, 1913, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WELDON BRINTON HEYBURN, late a Senator from the State of Idaho.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DOREMUS, for 10 days, on account of important business.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the motion of the gentleman from Florida should prevail and the House should resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, would that interfere with the House bill that is now the unfinished business being the unfinished business to-morrow morning? I refer to the reclamation town-site bill, which, with the previous question operating, would naturally come before the House as the unfinished business to-day. If the House should adopt this motion and no point of order be made or no call for the regular order demanded and go on with the consideration of the river and harbor bill this afternoon, would that displace the other bill as the unfinished business whenever that order is reached?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair so holds, I shall not call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Florida that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill, with Mr. MOON of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, just before the committee rose on Tuesday an order was made passing over temporarily certain items at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], with the understanding that we would return to them when the House next resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill. Those items appear on page 14 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee will return to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, why not go back to the beginning? We started to pass these items on page 10 of the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. There was a special order that the items in which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] was interested should come up first, as a matter of personal accommodation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the question is pending on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to strike out the paragraph on page 14, from lines 9 to 20, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.; Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $800,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the canal and appurtenant property belonging to the Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal Co. shall have been acquired by the United States by purchase in accordance with the agreement entered into between the Secretary of War and said company under date of February 17, 1912.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word with reference to this paragraph, beginning on line 9, page 14. On Tuesday I moved that this paragraph be stricken out of the bill. If it is necessary, I will renew that motion at this time. This provides for $800,000 for the improvement of this inland waterway which the Government has authorized to be purchased for the amount of $500,000. In the river and harbor act of 1910 there was an authorization for surveying and estimating with reference to this canal. As the Members here no doubt know, there were two canals, and it was proposed to buy whichever one, in the judgment of the engineers, was the cheapest and best to purchase. After some deliberation it was decided to buy what is known as the Chesapeake and Albemarle Canal. Such an amendment was put on the bill in the Senate. In the river and harbor act of 1912 the appropriation for the purchase of this canal was made and the authorization for its purchase was contained in that bill.

Since that time I understand the Government has been endeavoring to secure a title to this property, but some difficulties have arisen with reference to the title, and that these people up to the present time have been unable to give the Government or to insure to the Government a proper title to this property. For instance, one difficulty was they claimed that a lot of land that was owned along the route of this canal should not be deeded to the Government, and other matters came up so that it has been delayed until to-day the Government does not have title to this property. Now, in the appropriation bill of 1912 there was an appropriation for the improvement of this property to the extent of $100,000. And to-day we are asked to appropriate in this bill $800,000 for improving, and each time in the bill providing that it shall not be paid until, of course, the title to the property is secured. This bill carries something like $40,000,000. I do not know whether the sundry civil bill will carry anything for maintenance of rivers and harbors or not, but I judge it would be in the neighborhood of what it was in the last bill—about $12,000,000—so that the total amount for the new project and maintenance of river and harbor work amounts to more than $50,000,000. I do not object to proper appropriations for rivers and harbors of the country. I believe that it is proper and right that the Government should take whatever care is necessary and appropriate whatever money is necessary for the improvement of rivers and harbors and for the maintenance of the work that has already been completed and to go ahead with the construction that is necessary, but I do believe that here is an item of $800,000 that should be taken out of this bill and the river and harbor work of the country would not be hindered in the least, and all I ask in striking out this paragraph is that we might save $800,000 which is unnecessary to appropriate at this time and wait until a future time if it does become necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one question if he will yield.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman make the same argument with reference to other projects in this bill he makes against this one particular project along the Atlantic seaboard?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will say to the gentleman this, that I am not making promises of what I propose to do until I see what may be done in this.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman object to a provision of this kind in projects of national importance in other sections of the country?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if there is a meritorious project anywhere I am not objecting to it, and I am not taking it because it is sectional. I would be unfit to represent my constituency in this House should I stand upon this floor and advocate a thing on account of it being sectional.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I give the gentleman full credit for that, and I am sure the country does; but if the gentleman knew there was in the country an increase in population and the necessity for a project of this kind would he stand and knock it out of this bill while he permitted other paragraphs to go in not equally meritorious?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care to answer that question at this time, because I think it is irrelevant to this proposition. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I believe every proposition should stand by itself. The great difficulty with projects of this kind and all others that are contained in bills of a similar nature is that I tickle you and you tickle me. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be the best policy if we are to deal fairly with all sections according to commercial necessity. I can point the gentleman to a great many paragraphs in this bill to which he might object.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman with that patriotism that I believe he possesses, when he finds items in this bill that in his judgment are not meritorious and are as unnecessary as this one is, I believe, this year, ought to move to strike them out of the bill, and not because any other section of the country may come here and——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the gentleman listen to some argument with regard to statistics and the commercial necessity with regard to life and property involved in this very item?

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania that we have not yet a title to this property—that the Government has no title. I do not know but it may be contended that we are soon to have title, and it may be possible we will get the title. I do not know, nor does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know, that we will have a title to this property in the next 12 months.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Surely that being left to the engineers ought to satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the use of this bill carrying large appropriations that are unnecessary and can not be used?

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. The Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal Co. now owns the part which it is wished to improve by this appropriation? Is it operated commercially by this company?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it is. The Government does not have any interest in it at all. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN], the chairman of the committee, day before yesterday, I think, said that the engineers had entered into contracts for the improvement of this canal before we owned one penny of interest in it.

Mr. KOPP. But at the present time it is being operated by this toll company?

Mr. FOSTER. Controlled by the company.

Mr. KOPP. How much tonnage, if the gentleman is advised, went through this canal last year?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is claimed that something like 600,000 or 700,000 tons. I think the income from tolls amounted to possibly $31,000, or something like that. Possibly it was a little more.

Mr. KOPP. That is about as much as three or four trains would haul, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER. About the same.

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HELM. Is this a new proposition or the continuation of an old proposition?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a new proposition.

Mr. HELM. Is there any emergency for it?

Mr. FOSTER. None at all.

Mr. SMALL. I beg pardon——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has again expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I hope that the extension of the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will not prevent others discussing this item. I should not want the chairman of the committee and those interested to suggest at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that a good deal of time had been consumed, and hear an insistence on their part that they should close debate.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me state, Mr. Chairman, that I do not desire to occupy any time unnecessarily.

Mr. MONDELL. I am anxious that the gentleman should have additional time, but I should like to have a little time on the subject in connection with the discussion a little later.

Mr. SMALL. I ask that the gentleman yield to me in order that I may correct an erroneous statement. This was in the river and harbor act of 1912, and it is a continuation of the project.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] asked if this was a work in progress. I answered it was not a work in progress, and that there has been no work done on this canal whatever. My statement in that connection was, and I think that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] will bear me out as being correct, that that committee, as stated by me, authorized $500,000 according to the appropriation act of 1912, but from that time to this we have been unable to get a title to this property, so that no work could be done on this project.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALL] a question? He says this is a continuing project. How much money has already been spent up to date on this project?

Mr. SMALL. Up to this time there has not been anything spent. A little later I will address the committee a moment and can satisfy the gentleman, I think.

Mr. KOPP. It is true that there has not been a cent spent?

Mr. SMALL. I think that is true.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this item can well afford to go out of the bill at this time. It is true that there are large appropriations pressing on Congress during this session, and I am willing the River and Harbor Committee should be given latitude in what is necessary to keep up this great work; but I do believe, when an item of this kind is placed in a bill, that it is proper and right that it should be stricken out and that we should at least save this $800,000 until a future time when it is necessary to make it and when we can make this appropriation. I do not believe it is the proper time now to go ahead and appropriate an extra $800,000 and tie it up for this project, when we will then have $1,400,000 tied up in it, and not a dollar can be spent until the title of this property is made satisfactory to the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How much is the entire project to cost?

Mr. FOSTER. Something over $4,000,000. I do not remember the exact amount, but it is something between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on the conference report on the legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the attention of the committee for a short time with reference to the motion that has been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to strike out this paragraph. This paragraph contains an appropriation of $800,000 additional toward the further improvement and construction of an inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C. I do not understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] attempts to controvert the importance of this project, but for fear some gentlemen may be misled I would like to make a brief statement.

There is no more important project than this in the entire river and harbor bill, and I would be willing, if time were given me, to stand before an impartial tribunal anywhere and satisfy them upon that point. However, let me make just a few brief statements as to its importance. There have been three surveys upon this waterway—one authorized in 1902; another one in 1905, I believe; and another one in 1909. Every one of these reports by the engineers, by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, known as the "board of review," and by the Chief of Engineers has been entirely and unreservedly favorable to this project. In the report of the engineers in 1904, which is contained in House Document No. 563, at the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, they make this statement in regard to the importance of the waterway: They say that the total commerce to be affected by the construction of this waterway will be about 1,100,000 tons annually, valued at $55,000,000. That is on page 33 of the report. They state also that the annual saving in through freight on this commerce will be not less than $600,000, and that the annual saving on local traffic originating in North Carolina will be not less than $200,000.

To-day there are two private canals leading southwardly from Norfolk to Albemarle Sound. The engineer's reports show that there was carried through these two private canals last year, inadequate as they were, a commerce of 700,000 tons, all of which paid tolls amounting to $103,000—an unjust tribute upon the traffic which originates in that section.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KOPP. I would like to ask the gentleman how deep are these canals?

Mr. SMALL. They are nominally about 9 feet deep, but actually they are not quite that. They are about 8½ feet deep.

Mr. KOPP. How deep is it proposed that they be made under Government ownership?

Mr. SMALL. They are to be improved to a depth of 12 feet.

Mr. KOPP. What is to become of the other canal that the Government is not purchasing?

Mr. SMALL. I will state to the gentleman that that has been an embarrassing subject before the committee and those who in the interest of the public desire a free waterway. The other canal will have no legal redress. It will depend upon the generosity of Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. KOPP. Just one moment. Then in reality it is contemplated, is it not, by those in charge of this project, to ask Congress in all fairness to make a donation to this other company after the first project goes through?

Mr. SMALL. I will say that I have no such purpose, and I do not believe such a purpose exists on the part of any single member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman does not think it will be fair to take one single line and give another line no compensation?

Mr. SMALL. Well, if the gentleman assumes the championship of the other canal, he is at liberty to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Now I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has any information in its possession as to when it is probable that the Government of the United States will get the title to the canal?

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will come to that in just a few minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is in this last report—the report of the survey that was authorized in 1909—a most illuminating statement as to the commercial importance of this waterway. I will not take the time to read it. It is in House Document 391, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and I call particular attention to page 131.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SMALL. I will yield to the gentleman, but I will ask him to be brief.

Mr. HELM. A moment ago the gentleman spoke of the estimated tonnage that will pass through this canal and the value thereof that now moves through a private canal, as I understand. What proportion of the tonnage moving through this private canal now in existence is to be diverted into the channel to be created under this appropriation?

Mr. SMALL. Of course it will all seek the free waterway, and there will be still more.

Mr. HELM. So that your estimates, both as to tonnage and the value and importance of this commerce, is based upon that portion of it that now goes through this private canal.

Mr. SMALL. As a basis simply.

Mr. HELM. That is a portion of it.

Mr. SMALL. That is a portion of it. It will be very greatly increased.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up any longer time as to the commercial importance of this, but I wish to say something about the physical characteristics of this waterway. It is 200 miles long, from Norfolk to Beaufort. The engineers divide it into three sections, the first section from Norfolk to Albemarle Sound, a distance of 68 miles. Between Norfolk and Albemarle Sound are these two private canals, one of which, the Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal, has been recommended by the engineers as a part of the route, and which they estimate to be worth $500,000 to the United States. That is only a portion of the waterway.

The second division is from Albemarle Sound to Rose Bay, on Pamlico Sound, a distance of 80 miles, and the third division, from Rose Bay to Beaufort Inlet, is a distance of 51 miles.

So gentlemen of the committee will see that when we are discussing the purchase of this Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal we are discussing a small portion of the total length of this waterway. It simply happens that that is a part of one division. So that this $800,000 may be expended wisely and properly upon other divisions of the waterway even if there should be any delay in the purchase of this private canal. The total cost of the waterway in divisions is estimated as follows:

The first division, from Norfolk to Albemarle Sound, $2,733,300, in which is included the cost of this Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal at $500,000.

Albemarle Sound to Pamlico Sound, a distance of 80.5 miles, $2,216,780.

Brant Shoal cut, a short cut across Pamlico Sound, $54,000.

Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Inlet, via Adams Creek Canal, a distance of 51.6 miles, estimated cost $397,500.

The Adams Creek Canal at the southern end has already been constructed by previous appropriations of Congress at a projected depth of 10 feet, so that it is now only necessary to deepen that to 12 feet in order to correspond with the remainder of the waterway.

The total cost is $5,401,580, as estimated by the engineers.

In the last river and harbor act, approved July 25 last, there was an appropriation of $500,000 for the purchase of this Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal in accordance with a contract which had theretofore been entered into between the Secretary of War and the owners of that canal for its purchase, which contract set forth the width of the right of way and the other particulars necessary in order to make it a satisfactory contract.

It is a fact that the purchase of that canal has not yet been consummated, much to my disappointment and very greatly to the disappointment of the commercial interests that desire this to be made a free waterway in order to relieve them from the burden and the tribute which is laid upon their traffic.

The facts are that when this matter was taken up by the War Department they placed the purchase primarily in the hands of Col. E. E. Winslow, the district engineer at Norfolk, Va. He first required the canal company to make a survey of the right of way and then to place concrete monuments along the right of way indicating the boundaries. This Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal is in two cuts—one known as the Virginia cut, in the State of Virginia, the other known as the North Carolina cut, in the State of North Carolina, the two having an aggregate land cut of 14.1 miles. After the canal company made the survey and placed the concrete monuments, which, as you can imagine, required some time, the engineer sent out field parties to resurvey and check up the other survey and to prepare proper descriptions.

Only within the past few weeks has the engineer office resurveyed it, checked up and adjusted some apparent discrepancies. I have letters here from Col. Winslow, one dated January 15, saying that the discrepancies in the description of the North Carolina cut have been adjusted and that he and the canal company have agreed upon a description, and one dated January 20, stating that the same result has been reached as to the Virginia cut.

The matter of investigating the title was undertaken by the Department of Justice, that for the North Carolina cut was placed in the hands of the United States district attorney for the eastern district of North Carolina, and the Virginia cut in the hands of the United States attorney for the eastern district of Virginia. As to the North Carolina cut the district attorney has reported favorably on the title, and the only thing remaining to do is to carry out some instructions and obtain affidavits which the Department of Justice requires as to long-continued adverse possession by the canal company. The district attorney for Virginia, Mr. D. Lawrence Groner, in a letter dated Norfolk, January 3, says:

> In reply to your recent letter in regard to the present status of the examination of the title to the property of the Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal, which it is proposed to convey to the Government, I beg to advise you that while I have not yet completed the examination and will not be able to do so until the present survey which is now in process is completed and a complete description of the property to be surveyed is given me, I have gone far enough to satisfy myself that there will be no legal obstacles to the conveyance of the property to the Government.

He says later on that he expects to make a final report before the expiration of January.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I called at the Department of Justice and asked them if they would not furnish a statement as to the present status of the investigation of the title and as to when it would be completed. I will not take the time to read the entire letter of more than two pages, as it is simply a recital of the things that have been done, but the last paragraph states:

> In view of the matters and things hereinbefore referred to, if the report of the investigation which the United States attorney for the eastern district of Virginia has been directed to make shall be received before the expiration of January and the same shall disclose no legal obstacles to the conveyance of the company's property to the Government, the department sees no reason why the transfer may not be consummated by February 15 next.

Now, I have just read a letter from the district attorney, Mr. Groner, for the eastern district of Virginia, saying that he would have the report in by the expiration of January, and that there would be no obstacle.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I have only a few moments.

Mr. FOSTER. According to that letter, does the gentleman think that it means that they are going to get a title very soon? He seems to make lots of reservations.

Mr. SMALL. I know that the gentleman will accept what I say in good faith.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. I have kept close observation of the preliminary steps preparatory to securing this title. I have not the slightest doubt, in view of the present status, that by the 15th of February the deed will be executed. I state that in the utmost good faith.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the gentleman's opinion; he could not gather it from that letter.

Mr. SMALL. I gather it from the letter and the information that is in my possession.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not take the letter to mean that.

Mr. SMALL. I know the gentleman has confidence in my good faith.

Mr. FOSTER. I certainly have.

Mr. SMALL. May I present another view showing the necessity for this appropriation in this bill? The appropriations contained in this bill are intended to suffice until the 30th of June, 1914. If this appropriation is not made, and the title is acquired by February 15 or by April 1, the engineers will be able to do nothing toward the further construction of this waterway until after the next river and harbor act shall be passed in the summer of 1914.

Now, just one statement further. This waterway, gentlemen of the committee, is the only outlet for water-borne interstate trade for eastern North Carolina. We have 1,600 miles of navigable rivers there, and we have 2,500 square miles of sound. We are pent up. Give us a free outlet; we are deserving of it. I ask the committee to decline the motion and refuse to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will not occupy but a minute. I want to reply to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP]. He asked the gentleman from Illinois what the commerce borne by this canal would be and he was told about 600,000 tons. He remarked that that meant two or three train loads. I suggest that the gentleman has gotten his figures wrong. To haul 600,000 tons annually would require two trains a day through every day in the year, each train consisting of 30 cars and each car carrying 30 tons, a commerce which I submit is not inconsiderable in amount.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be the size of the trains in Mississippi, but I do not think it is the size of trains in Illinois or Wisconsin.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; 30 freight cars of 60,000 pounds each—a pretty good average train.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; we pull 50 and 60 cars in Illinois.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Very well; say 60 cars, and, with all due respect to the gentleman from Illinois, I do not believe that freight trains in Illinois or anywhere else average 60 loaded box cars of 60,000 pounds to the car. However, 60 cars to the train would be one train a day throughout the year.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is undoubtedly familiar with this. I want to ask what were the articles of commerce that made the building of these two canals profitable at the time they were constructed? For what purpose were these canals constructed?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. These canals were constructed to bear a commerce which is very general, all sorts of merchandise. I think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] could give the gentleman the details of that.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal was begun in 1856 and completed a few years later. It has been in continuous operation since that time. At the time the canal was constructed the larger amount of traffic through it was lumber and naval stores and agricultural products northward and merchandise southward. Naval stores are not now produced in eastern North Carolina. Much lumber is still manufactured in North Carolina, and with the improvements, so that the canal will accommodate a different type of steamers, large quantities of merchandise from the North will be carried. Coal has always been carried through it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Were they not originally constructed for the purpose of handling the timber in those sections?

Mr. SMALL. Very largely.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has the timber been cut off since these canals were constructed?

Mr. SMALL. Of course very much timber has been removed, but there are still large quantities of standing timber in eastern North Carolina, and it is a large industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to ask one or two more questions of the gentleman from North Carolina. I desire to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Are there any coal fields adjacent to these canals?

Mr. SMALL. No; there is no coal in eastern North Carolina, but at Norfolk there are two large coal terminals. The terminals I particularly refer to are those of the Norfolk & Western Railway and of the Virginian Railway, and also of the Chesapeake & Ohio at Newport News. Coal is sent by water southward from Norfolk through those canals to a certain extent now, and with the improvement it is anticipated there will be a very large amount of coal sent to southern ports south of the southern terminus of this waterway at Beaufort Inlet. I will say that this waterway avoids the two most dangerous points on the Atlantic coast—Cape Hatteras and Cape Lookout.

Mr. McKENZIE. Are not those points—Norfolk and Beaufort Inlet—deep-water harbors?

Mr. SMALL. Norfolk is a deep-water harbor. Beaufort Inlet is not so deep, but still it has about 20 feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to read one brief paragraph that answers the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will have to get the consent of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. As soon as I ask one other question. Could not the commerce from Norfolk and the other terminus of this proposed canal be carried now on the deep water of the Atlantic Ocean?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I can answer it briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, answering the question of the gentleman, on the North Carolina coast is Cape Hatteras, with Diamond Shoals, jutting out into the ocean 20 miles, the most dangerous point in the world. South of that is Cape Lookout. The reports of the engineers show in detail the number of lives lost and the millions of dollars sacrificed by wrecks at these points. The cheapest form of movement by water is by barge. Coastwise navigation by barges around Cape Hatteras is prohibited. The casualties are too numerous, and maximum insurance rates are prohibitory.

The only form of coastwise navigation between southern and northern ports is in very large and expensive steamers, and it so happens there is a community of interest or ownership, so that practically all the steamships between north Atlantic and south Atlantic ports are controlled by the railroads and do not offer real competitive rates.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair recognized me awhile ago, and I sat down in order to allow the gentleman from Illinois to submit a question to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming yielded to two other gentlemen since then.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman requested unanimous consent to ask some questions, and I did not desire to object to them. Of course, if I lose my right to speak by reason of not objecting to unanimous consent, I am content.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming next.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, answering the question put by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], I wish to read one of many letters that were sent to the United States engineers while this project was under discussion. Mr. J. B. Blades, president of the J. B. Blades Lumber Co., of Newbern, N. C., which is an inland port at the lower end of the projected canal, among other things, says:

> We are shipping from the various mills here that we are interested in from fifteen to twenty million feet of lumber per year. Nine-tenths of this goes through the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal. The rate on this lumber to Philadelphia from our mills is $2.75 per thousand, and by rail it is about $5.25, so you see that with the present water facilities the saving to us is very great. Now, if the waterways were made sea-level canals, free of tolls—

That is what we ask in this instance—

> we would not only save the amount of the toll, which is about $45,000, but we would be able to ship in larger barges, and by this means save at least 50 cents per thousand, or $75,000. This does not take into account the mills that we are interested in at Elizabeth City, with an output of about 12,000,000 feet of lumber per year, which is all shipped almost wholly by rail, but with the improved and free waterways would move largely by water, and the amount of business done by us is only a small part of the whole amount.

Here is what I want the committee to hear:

> We can not afford to use the part of the canal that is now completed to Beaufort, because this puts us in the ocean south of Cape Hatteras, a very dangerous coast.

And you gentlemen from the West and South do not seem to understand the perils of Cape Hatteras.

Mr. MADDEN. Who states that, you or the man who is writing the letter?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do. The writer goes on:

Besides our lumber carriers are made for inland waters and would not stand the waves of the ocean. This makes a wonderful saving in transportation, because the barges being built for barge traffic—

Do you understand we are building barges constantly for these inside waterways and what they are worth to shippers and the shipping interests of the community?—

do not need to be built too expensively to stand the work, and it is safe to use them almost twice as long as if they were trading in the ocean.

Now, the storms along the Atlantic coast during the last three months have been such as to attract the attention of the country. There has been wreckage all along the coast and loss of life. Do you gentlemen understand what that means to the shippers of the East? Do you understand that it is your property that is also involved; that the cargoes that come in along this eastern coast are intended for the West, the South, and the Northwest? Do you know we have built up a great barge industry along the east coast, and that with the standardization of these waterways the East can meet the problems of transportation as you are trying to do it in the Middle West?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] spoke before I did, because he has so illuminated the question. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] for having called up this important matter. I can not share the optimism that he seems to feel that he will in any way, no matter how eloquent he may be or what array of facts he may garner, modify this bill. This bill is undoubtedly built to stand. It has a foundation sufficiently and widely planted in congressional districts that nothing so entirely unimportant as facts will in any way affect the character of the bill when it shall finally be passed upon by the House.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] has a monument in this item—a monument to his energy and his influence with the committee. Here is a canal owned by private parties doing business at a low rate of toll. It is proposed to buy it. We have appropriated half a million for that purpose. In addition to that we have appropriated $100,000 to use for the building of a dredge for the purpose of dredging out the canal after we shall have acquired it. We have neither acquired the canal nor built the dredge. And from all that we have been told and from what we have learned to-day there is no probability of our immediately acquiring the title to the canal, and we have heard nothing of any prospective early construction of the dredge.

Mr. SMALL. Is the gentleman aware that the engineers, in their report of investigation, state that the rates of toll are very high on this canal—abnormally high—and that in its present condition it is unfitted to meet the demands of commerce upon it?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, there are railways in the country in which I live upon which it is said that the rates are rather high. There are some of them that do not have roadbeds up to highest standard, and we should be very much pleased out there if the Congress would be so kind and considerate and generous as to purchase those lines of railway, reconstruct them, double-track them, and put upon them the latest equipment, and carry our freight over them entirely without charge. That is the illuminating argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] on the subject now before us. People are cutting timber down there in great quantities. They are transporting it through these canals in competition with others and selling their timber, and no doubt making considerable profit. But if we shall buy this canal, enlarge it at an expenditure of several million dollars of the people's money, and open it to the use of these patriotic citizens free of all charge, one firm will make $75,000 per annum. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has lived down on the Delaware so long that he actually considers that an absolutely convincing argument. If by the spending of Government money you can save money to an individual or make his business more profitable, forsooth, that settles it. The argument is ended, and the appropriation must be made.

Now, let us assume as a matter of argument that it may be wise and proper to take the money of all the people for the purpose of purchasing a privately owned canal along the Atlantic coast and enlarging it with taxes raised in Ohio, Wyoming, Illinois, California, and elsewhere, and arranging it entirely satisfactory to the people who use it, not for the commerce of the people of the United States, but wholly and entirely for local trade——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I just want to ask the gentleman if he holds to that doctrine in regard to the waterway projects throughout the country?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says we are spending the public money for the purpose of improving one waterway along the east coast. Will he hold to that same doctrine with regard to the 25,000 miles of waterways that are being improved now at Federal expense? Will he hold it in regard to reclamation projects, irrigation projects, and the land project that we passed through the House yesterday? Will he hold generally to that doctrine—that there is a disposition of the public money for some one's benefit?

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad the gentleman suggested something we did yesterday. Here is a proposition to take eight-tenths of a million of dollars of the people's money, raised by taxation, and to spend it for improving something we do not own, which improvement, if it were made, would be for the benefit of the local community, and the gentleman is surprised and astounded beyond measure. Yesterday we had before the House a proposition not to take any public money, a proposition that did not have anything to do with a penny of money that belonged to the people of the United States, but proposed simply as to whether we should take some funds which people pay for raw lots out in a wind-blown town on the Plains, and allow the use of a part of the high price for these lots, having no value in themselves, to be used for the improvement of the town.

The House agonized all day long, all day long, and you would have imagined that there was danger of our tearing the foundations from under this Capitol, tipping over the Washington Monument, and undermining the Constitution, because, forsooth, it was suggested that the people might have their own money, contributed by themselves, for which they receive no value, in the hands of the Government, and the only value of which consisted in the value which they themselves made; because it was suggested that they might have a part of that for making the community fit to live in; and we spent the entire day, and we have a prospect of spending another day, in discussing that highly important question.

Yet we have here eight-tenths of a million dollars of the people's money proposed to be expended for the purpose—putting it in its best light—of providing purely local transportation where there is already local transportation, and I presume at a reasonably fair rate for water-borne commerce. The rate by this canal, as the letter read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] said, is half the railway rate; and whenever they cut the railway rate in two they are making, I presume, a fairly reasonable rate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When will we get that rate?

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield, Mr. Chairman. I am sorry I can not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would remove all charges; he would give these people absolutely free waterways for their local commerce, and that is only a part of it. It is proposed to appropriate $800,000 for doing that in advance of the possibility of its undertaking, because we do not own the canal and we do not know that we ever shall own the canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will not prevail. In my judgment, the reasons given for striking out the paragraph are not sound. It has been shown here that, so far as can be ascertained now, and I may say so far as it could be ascertained by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors when this bill was being prepared, the title to this canal will be acquired within a very few weeks. In fact, the testimony before our committee was to the effect that it would not be later, at the furthest, than some time in April. That was the maximum limit fixed by the same department officials who were also of the opinion that it would be a much shorter period of time. Now comes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and reads from letters received from the Department of Justice—the department having in charge that particular work—stating that it will have the title ready in the next two or three weeks, or by the 15th of next month.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman does not mean to say that the department in this letter says it is going to have that title in 15 days?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, no. The statement contained in that letter was that the title would, in the opinion of the writer, be settled in the department by the middle of next month, which is a little more, of course, than 15 days.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman remember hearing that passage read where they talk about a contingency, if certain things are all right, and say in that contingency they will have it? They do not say they are going to have it.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois pardon me and let me state what the fact is?

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the gentleman to read the letter.

Mr. SMALL. Unfortunately the reporter has it. He borrowed the letter from me a few moments ago.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is unnecessary, for, aside from what the Department of Justice says in regard to the date, the engineers did say when they were before us, and the Department of Justice corroborated the statement, that it would not take longer than a date early in April to acquire this title. Then the engineers told us that, that being true, they will not only need the $600,000 that we appropriated in the last bill, but they will also need the $800,000 which this bill undertakes to provide.

Now, I want to say that our committee is controlled, and must be controlled very largely, by the opinion of the engineers on many subjects, and that is one of the subjects upon which we follow somewhat closely their advice. I do not say we follow them blindly in anything; but inasmuch as we must take the opinion of somebody in the matter of the amount of money needed within a given time for a piece of work, we usually take that of the engineers, who not only have knowledge on the subject but have the spending of the money. When we began the preparation of this bill we found several just such items as that, some on the Atlantic, some on the Gulf, some on the Pacific coast, projects adopted upon certain conditions, which conditions had not been complied with; and the committee at once said: "We can not appropriate unless those requirements have been met or will be within a reasonable time."

We had the engineers before us, who told us: "In this particular case we will have the conditions complied with in a certain length of time; in this other case they will be complied with within a certain other length of time," and so on. In all those cases where they said they would have the conditions complied with within a reasonable time we allowed the appropriation, just as we propose to do in this case.

And in no case was an appropriation made where it appeared that the conditions attached would not be complied with in time to make such appropriation available so that the same might be expended by the 30th of June, 1914.

I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out all of the paragraph on page 14, beginning with line 9 and ending with line 20.

The question being taken, the motion to strike out was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Beaufort, N. C.; For maintenance, $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this paragraph, and I want simply to say that this bill is probably watertight and that nothing in it can be touched—that every item in it is holy. It is a bill of $40,000,000, and we are expected to vote upon every item in it and give our approval to it. Yet those items are so sacred that we must not question any of them. In view of that fact, I do not desire to take up the time of the committee at this time, and, as far as I am concerned, I desire to withdraw my amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In my desire to be informed with regard to this legislation, as I endeavor to be informed with regard to all legislation that comes before the House, I sought the hearings as a source of information, but I sought, alas, in vain. I assumed that there were hearings. I assumed that some things were said and some arguments made in defense of the items of this bill. I assume there are some things that might be said in defense of some of the items. However that may be, the fact is that no line and no word of what occurred has been allowed to reach the printed page, and he who desires information with regard to this measure must go burrowing about and making inquiries in regard to it from the members of the committee; and the members of the committee all being honorable gentlemen, bound by that freemasonry which doth so bind gentlemen who report bills like this, it has been very difficult for me to secure any information whatever in regard to the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a short statement in connection with what he is saying?

Mr. MONDELL. I prefer to conclude my remarks.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am sure the gentleman will pardon me when I say that the reports of the engineers are full and complete upon every item in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I am aware of that, and I shall call attention to some of them later.

Mr. Chairman, not being able to find any record of the hearings, I turned to the voluminous report of the committee, full as it is of illuminating information, all contained on two printed pages. Appropriations amounting to $40,000,000 are fully explained in less than 4,000 words.

A MEMBER. Five hundred words.

Mr. MONDELL. Rather more than 500 words, but no part of the report having relation to any particular item in the bill. Yet without any information, without any source of information, except as we go to the reports of the engineers, we are asked to pass this bill. In going to the reports of the engineers it is difficult to find particular items, and it is especially embarrassing when that interesting documents reports against an item in the bill.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. Has the gentleman estimated the number of words in the report of the engineers and how long it would take the average Member of Congress to read it through if he undertook to?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not; but I am aware of the fact that some of the words in the report of the engineers would be very weighty with the ordinary Member. They do not seem to have had any influence whatever on the members of the committee, for while the report of the engineers may be decidedly adverse to the project and set forth many reasons why it should not be undertaken, the committee proceeds to appropriate just the same.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is not a single project in this bill, nor has there been a single project in any river and harbor bill for many years, that has not had the approval of the Chief Engineer of the Army and the board of review.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to present a case on a page or two to the contrary.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. The gentleman may find something that was put on in the Senate, but he can not find anything that was reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the House.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman point out any paragraph in the bill that has not the approval of the Board of Engineers.

Mr. MONDELL. I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming says that we have had no hearings and that there is not anything on which to base our bill, nothing from which Members of the House can get information. The gentleman will surely find more than 5,000 words in the book that I hold in my hand, volume 1 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers, and there are three volumes of this report. These reports describe in detail every matter that was acted upon by us. I hold in my hand the report upon one of the items in this bill, the Tennessee River. I ask the gentleman from Wyoming to look at this report of 192 pages on the Tennessee River. I ask him to look at the reports on every project on which we acted, and if he will examine them as we have examined them he will have to work pretty hard for several months. [Applause.]

There are thousands of pages of these reports, which the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee have been forced to wade through before taking action on this bill, and in every one of the items we have had the assistance of the Engineer Corps. Why, there is no species of legislation more carefully guarded than this. What is the process? Let me state it very briefly. No project can be taken up until first a survey has been ordered by act of Congress. The survey is then made by a local United States engineer officer—generally a captain or an officer of higher rank—who reports it to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. This board examines the report with great care, and in many instances makes an independent examination of its own in addition to the local examination and report. It sometimes sends a special board of three or four engineers to the locality to look over and report upon the project. Then it gives hearings to all citizens who are interested. Having examined the question in the closest way, the board makes a report upon it, which goes to the Chief of Engineers of the Army. He examines the whole matter again, and if not satisfied with it he does as he did within the past six months in a Louisiana project, sends it back in order that he may get additional information, which it took the local engineer six months to secure and bring before the chief, who then sends his report to Congress. All these reports on each project—that of the local engineer, the Board of Engineers, and the chief—are then published as a public document, which frequently contains several hundred pages, with elaborate maps and the most detailed information on every point. And yet the gentleman from Wyoming would have the House believe that this committee has brought in a $40,000,000 bill without knowing what it is doing. Mr. Chairman, I think I have shown that he did not know what he was talking about when he made that statement. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no money better spent than that spent for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country. [Applause.] The purpose of the expenditure is to facilitate the movement of the produce of the country so as to give the people the best possible prices. There is no committee of the House more painstaking in its work than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This committee is untiring in its efforts to produce the best possible results. They have the cooperation of the Engineer Corps and all of the technical information that can be furnished by those men trained for the work. I happen to know that no project is taken on by this committee except such projects as receive the approval of the Board of Engineers. The greatest care is taken to ascertain the value of the commerce on every project proposed to be entered upon. Whether freight is carried on the waterway or not, the fact remains that the mere development of the waterway insures a lower freight rate. These men serving on this great committee work night and day. They are doing a patriotic work. There is absolutely no logrolling in this committee, and no man on the committee has influence to get that which he ought not to have in the bill. I am surprised that the gentleman from the mountain regions of Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] should undertake to criticize the work of this great committee, and to say that they act without information or judgment in what they report to this House. This bill does contain recommendations for the appropriation of $40,000,000, and it could well contain recommendations for the appropriation of double that amount without overstepping the lines of propriety. They have been conservative in their recommendations, and perhaps because of their conservatism they have rejected projects which in a large measure would be justified. But that they have recommended any project without merit I do not believe, and for one Member of this House I am willing to follow the judgment of the men who have served and are serving on this great Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in some respects I agree with the two gentlemen who have just spoken, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. But I think the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is extremely reprehensible in some of his references. [Laughter.] I have been looking through the reports of the engineers and I have found abundant testimony of the activities of this committee. I make no reflection on any member of this committee. They have all been active in the interest of their constituencies. Most of them deserve medals at the hands of their constituents. I will not say that one of these rivers to which I refer is not very far distant from the territory of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], but, without mentioning any names, I commend to his consideration one river 500 miles long, for which, since 1874, we have been endeavoring to get a depth of 4 feet—and this to some extent represents the very great urgency of this $40,000,000 bill, which does not take into consideration commerce along certain sections of the country where business is teeming and waiting an opportunity for development. Now, this particular project under which work has continued from 1874 contemplated "the removal of snags, and logs, and wrecks, and leaning timber obstructing navigation"—all to obtain a depth of 4 feet, on which $614,000 was spent in one of the initial stages. As we follow the report a little bit we find, in view of the fact that certain locks and dams were authorized, apparently for the purpose of creating water in the river, there has been expended altogether on this stream to date $2,040,000. Following up the inquiry and the reading of these reports, which is intensely interesting, the gentleman will find that the commerce upon this river and its tributaries—a river 500 miles long in which we are endeavoring for the benefit of commerce and navigation to get a mean low depth of 4 feet——

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state what river that is?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not mention it, because there are several of the same kind and I do not want to reflect upon the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman tell me from what page of the report he is reading?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will if the gentleman insists upon it. But let me finish this interesting tale of the manner in which we develop some rivers and do not develop others. The commerce on this stream and all its tributaries consists principally of the shipment of cotton, cotton seed, lumber, staves, saw logs, and miscellaneous articles, and during the last 22 years—more than two decades—the entire business has amounted to 57,000 tons. Why, Mr. Chairman, little Raccoon Creek, about which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] inquired day before yesterday, does more business in one year than this 500-mile 4-foot stream does in 22 years. Yet the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has the effrontery to come into this House and say we are asking too much when we seek an appropriation of $800,000 for a canal and waterway adjacent to territory which contributes 50,000,000 tons of commerce annually to the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment, without objection, will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: For maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes that the gentlemen in charge of the bill, some of them, would answer some of the arguments I made. On the contrary, they set up a straw man and then they proceeded to belabor it. I did not say, I never have said, that the committee did not have data which they considered a sufficient basis for their appropriations, and yet the gentlemen one after another have risen here and assailed me because they said I said something I did not say. What I did say was they did not even give a gaping and expectant world, much less the Congress, any information whatever as to the arguments made by or before them on which arguments they based the items in the bill. They may have had any amount of information; they have given absolutely none; and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] proposes to put me entirely out of business by suggesting because unwise appropriations have been made on the upper Missouri River, never at my request——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did not mention the upper Missouri.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That therefore equally unwise appropriations ought to be made on Raccoon Creek. If gentlemen would like to know, I never have believed, and I do not believe now, that the money of the people ought to be spent on the upper Missouri River. I think it is a clear waste of public funds. It does not have the poor, miserable excuse that the improvement of some of the way-back creeks have, that if you improve them the farmers in the localities may be able to transport their potatoes a little more cheaply to some region, or along the line of the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that some rich lumber company may be able to have their profits increased at the expense of the Government. I did not have the time to mention, in referring to the purchase of this canal, that if the timber which was along the line of the canal when it was built, and the transportation of which, or the expected transportation of which, led to the building of the canal, was still there the Government would not be asked to buy it, and probably could not purchase it, but these people having spent a large amount of money for the building of the canal and transporting the lumber and having cleared the country of the lumber, and there being no longer any considerable amount of tonnage, now seek to unload upon the unsuspecting Congress and the river and harbor bill this, to them, comparatively worthless property. It is a very beautiful scheme, and it is defended vehemently by the gentleman from Pennsylvania by the suggestion that we may reduce the rates of transportation by so doing, and he expects that that will also be final and convincing——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL EXERCISES OF MR. WEDEMEYER, OF MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the names of the committee to attend the funeral exercises on Mr. WEDEMEYER, of Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOREMUS, Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, Mr. SWEET, Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, Mr. MCMORRAN, Mr. FORDNEY, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, Mr. LOUD, Mr. DODDS, Mr. KENDALL, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. HAMMOND, and Mr. SHARP.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in relation to the consolidation of the Sacramento revenue district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

GRANT OF CERTAIN PERMITS, MARCH 4, 1913.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 380.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to consider the resolution named. Of course everybody understands the rule is against it, but it is a matter of public business, and the Chair is disposed to recognize him, unless somebody objects to unanimous consent. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 380) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect on March 4, 1913, etc.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of the Pension Building in the city of Washington, except such rooms therein as are used and occupied for the payment of pensions, on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect on the 4th day of March, 1913, subject to such restrictions and regulations and limitations as to space as the said Secretary may prescribe in respect of the period and manner of such use, including all necessary safeguards against fire and for the extinguishing of fire.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits, under such restrictions as he may deem necessary, to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of any reservations or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President elect on the 4th day of March, 1913, which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces or statuary thereon; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands or platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said inaugural committee and in accordance with the plans and designs to be approved by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds: And provided further, That the reservations or public spaces occupied by the stands or other structures shall be restored to their original condition before such occupation, and that the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any damage to structures of any kind whatsoever upon such reservations or spaces.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the inaugural committee for the inaugural ceremonies, March, 1913, to stretch suitable overhead conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary, and in the nearest practicable connection with the present supply of light, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination: Provided, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illuminating purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia, the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the official in charge of said park or reservation: Provided further, That the said conductors shall not be used for the conveying of electrical currents after March 8, 1913, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said city of Washington on or before March 15, 1913: And provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced; that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public; and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: And provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to the stretching, operation, or removing of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That $23,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from the 28th of February to the 10th of March, 1913, both inclusive. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property and fixing fares by public conveyance, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period. Such regulations shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days. And the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby likewise appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the construction, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comfort stations and information booths during the period aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the committee on inaugural ceremonies such ensigns, flags, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States (except battle flags) that are not now in use and may be suitable and proper for decoration and may, in their judgment, be spared without detriment to the public service, such flags to be used in connection with said ceremonies by said committee under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by the said Secretaries, or either of them, in decorating the fronts of public buildings and other places on the line of march between the Capitol and the Executive Mansion and the interior of the reception hall: Provided, That the loan of the said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., to said chairman shall not take place prior to the 24th day of February, and they shall be returned to him by the 10th day of March, 1913: Provided further, That the said committee shall indemnify the said departments, or either of them, for any loss or damage to such flags not necessarily incident to such use. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the inaugural committee, for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of the inauguration of the President of the United States, March 4, 1913, such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture, and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the inauguration: And provided further, That the inaugural committee shall indemnify the War Department for any loss or damage to such hospital tents and appliances as aforesaid not necessarily incident to such use: And provided further, That the said inaugural committee shall give bond, with security satisfactory to the Secretary of War, to do the same.

SEC. 6. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Postal Telegraph Co. to extend overhead wires into the Pension Building, and to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural purposes, the said wires to be taken down within 10 days after the conclusion of the ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1913.

Also the following committee amendments were reported:

Page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, and all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CANNON. What is it that is stricken out?

Mr. MANN. The section providing for the use of the Pension Building. The amendments which have been read are not all of the amendments. They might as well all be acted on at once, probably.

The SPEAKER. We have not received unanimous consent for consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. It might be easier to get the consent after all the amendments are read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the balance of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 12 page 2, after the word "Washington," insert the words "under their control."

In the same section, page 2, line 14, strike out the words "which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries," and insert: "Provided, That in his opinion no serious or permanent injury shall be thereby inflicted."

Page 2, line 21, after the word "Washington," insert "under their control."

Page 3, line 6, after the word "be," insert the word "promptly."

Page 3, line 9, strike out the words "to structures."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make some inquiry in regard to this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] reserves the right to object.

Mr. MURRAY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] if there is any urgency for the present consideration of this matter?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make this statement. This is a resolution reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which committee I am not a member. Upon yesterday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the chairman of that committee, after making some inquiries with regard to unanimous consent, went to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], chairman of the Committee on Rules, and suggested to him that perhaps a special rule ought to be had for the consideration of this measure. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] was compelled to leave the city, and for some reason the resolution was referred to me, being a member of the Committee on Rules. I might say that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who outranks me on that committee, was also absent, as well as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. Another reason the resolution was presented to me was the further one that it seems I was appointed a member of this Joint Inaugural Committee. I suggested to the gentleman that it seemed to be a matter concerning which there ought to be unanimous consent, and that there ought to be an endeavor to obtain that consent before appealing to the Committee on Rules for a special rule for its consideration. And so in that way the matter was left in my hands.

I do not know about the details of the resolution, I will say. This morning I called on the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and he informed me it was impossible for him to be here. I then called on the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who is next in rank as a member of the committee, and he is ill and unable to be here, and in just the last few moments I reached the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], who is here and is able to explain the details of the resolution. Now, as far as the emergencies detailed in the bill are concerned, I understand it is desired to commence the erection of these stands provided for and the arrangements for the lighting. The bill carries no appropriation.

I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the chairman of the inaugural committee represented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that there was urgent necessity for the passage of this resolution, in order that they might arrange their plans in accordance with the will of Congress. We have cut out of the resolution the use of the Pension Building, and we have cut out of it the appropriation of some $23,000, as that belonged to the Appropriations Committee, and have made some minor changes in order to make it conform to the general plan of this ceremony. I can not see, Mr. Speaker, that there should be any earthly objection to the immediate consideration and passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentlemen in charge of this resolution why it is that it has been brought in at this late hour, when there are practically no Members of the House here, when they had all day to bring this in, at a time when we had a large attendance here?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman has been here, and he certainly knows that we have not had time or opportunity heretofore.

Mr. NORRIS. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he himself spent more time on what he tried to make us believe was a question of special privilege than would have been needed for the consideration of this resolution at a time when there was an immense crowd here. We also had a large crowd here when the river and harbor bill was under consideration.

Now, I would like to say that I have no disposition to interfere with or obstruct any legitimate arrangement that may be made for the inaugural ceremony, but it does not seem right to me that the gentlemen having this in charge should wait until half-past 6 o'clock, after we have been in Committee of the Whole on this appropriation bill, when it was generally understood that an adjournment was going to take place immediately afterwards, and to bring this resolution in now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. This resolution was reported in on the 21st, two days ago. I got the resolution when it was reported in, and the suggestion was made that it might be called up yesterday or the day before, maybe yesterday, when it was proposed to ask unanimous consent. I thought it ought to go over further than that time.

Now, as to the resolution, my understanding is that there is no controversy over agreeing to the committee amendments. One of them strikes out the use of the Pension Building, and another one strikes out an appropriation that does not apply to this resolution.

The resolution gives certain authorizations that are necessary. For instance, it authorizes the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds to permit the use of public spaces by the inaugural committee. Though it is not expressly stated, that means permission will be given for the use of the public spaces for the erection of platforms and things of that sort. Then the resolution gives the District Commissioners the same authority to permit the use of public spaces under their control for the erection of platforms and for the connection of electrical conductors to make the illumination. It also permits the use of flags which are not in use in the hands of the Army and Navy by the inaugural committee, and permits the telegraph companies to extend their wires where they may be needed along the line of the inaugural march.

All of these changes are to be made without expense to the Government, and some of the persons or authorities who are to do these things are under bonds, and all of the spaces are to be restored without any damage or injury, they taking the responsibility. It is the usual resolution that has been passed in Congress for a great many years, and I did not myself suppose there could be any objection to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to anything that the gentleman has enumerated. I would not object even to appropriating money to pay some of these expenses. That is not the point. It is the method of adopting it that I object to. We have not done it in this way before. Even if we have done the same thing, there has been no snap judgment taken before.

Mr. MANN. It has been done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. We then had to consider the question as to whether the Pension Building should be used.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no request for that here.

Mr. NORRIS. The resolution has not been printed and has not been reported.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it has.

Mr. NORRIS. What committee reported it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate passed another resolution which carries an appropriation and gives the District Commissioners authority to make certain regulations. The appropriation is to enable them to obtain additional police protection. Those provisions were embodied in this resolution, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have stricken them out. A resolution separate from this has been pending in the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee has been in conference with the District Commissioners and expects to-morrow to report it, because information has been brought to the committee that it is necessary to have prompt action taken on the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that prompt action is necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I wanted to say was this: These resolutions were scrutinized not only by one committee, that on Public Buildings and Grounds, but also by the Committee on Appropriations and by members of the District Committee, who are all more or less interested in the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt of that. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] recognize that by just such means as this—getting something through against which there might be no possible objection—a precedent will be set which will be used to get through other things that are objectionable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know about that. This House is pretty critical.

Mr. MANN. There are three resolutions, if the gentleman will pardon me, that will probably have to be passed; one a general resolution in relation to the electoral count in the House, and one in reference to the subject matter of this resolution, and one in reference to making a slight appropriation and authorizing the District Commissioners to make certain regulations which will not probably involve any particular controversy.

I am frank to say to the gentleman, as I said to the other gentleman, that I should not object to the present consideration of any of these resolutions.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not, either, at any reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. I think no one has any objection to any of them, and I think they do not involve any controversy. Of course, if they did, that would be another matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that if no one else objects I will not enter any objection to this, but I wanted to call attention to the fact that it did not seem to me it was the right way to do it.

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that I am in sympathy with his idea that matters of legislation ought not to come up under unanimous consent as a general proposition, except under a rule which has been fixed for it; but I think the gentleman from Nebraska realizes that this is a peculiar and unusual situation.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman has withdrawn his objection, and we are all hungry. Why not pass the joint resolution?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will put all these committee amendments at once.

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is an error in the print on page 6, line 10. The word "chairman" should be "committee." It is evidently an error in the print.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. MANN. I hope that will not be considered a dilatory motion.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FRIDAY, January 24, 1913.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, Thou art our exceeding great reward. Thou knowest the way we take and art acquainted with all our ways. Without Thee we could not live; without Thee we dare not die. There is none on earth that we desire beside Thee, and whom have we in heaven but Thee? Thou art able to deliver us from every fear and to present us before the throne of Thy presence without fault and in exceeding joy. Look with tenderness, we pray Thee, upon the Member of this Senate whose heart has been saddened by death. Uphold him by Thy spirit and comfort him with Thy presence. In the name of Him who abolished death and brought life and immortality to light hear our prayer. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CULLOM and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. WORKS. I have here some short editorials bearing upon the question of one term for the President of the United States. They have been furnished me by the Business League of America, an organization that is made up largely of business men throughout the country. I ask that the editorials may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS, 1904.

[From the Tradesman, Chattanooga, Tenn.]

The executive committee of the National Business League, whose general offices are in Chicago, has taken the initiative in a movement to lengthen the presidential term from four years to six years, making the Chief Executive ineligible for reelection, the principal reasons for the proposed amendment to the Constitution being stated as follows:

1. Presidential campaigns are too frequent, are enormously expensive to business interests, and keep the country in a state of turmoil and uncertainty most of the time, to the great disadvantage of both labor and capital.

2. Presidential years show increase of business failures, decrease of exports, bank clearings, stock sales, and commercial transactions generally.

3. Presidential campaigns indefinitely prevent the beginning and check the growth of industrial enterprises.

4. The President during his first term, naturally being anxious to succeed himself, is kept busy considering the demands of politicians and planning for a second term; meanwhile important legislation for the general good waits.

With reference to this movement we have no hesitancy in expressing the opinion that the frequent presidential elections are great factors in disarranging the business of the country, and any reasonable extension of the term of office for which the President shall serve would naturally tend to curtail the nuisance complained of. It occurs to us that just now is an opportune time to foist this movement, from the fact that a change in the length of term would not work injury to the incumbent and could not be made effective, probably, before the beginning of the term four years from this time. We can not see any possible danger in making the term six years, for in this country it is well-nigh impossible for an unworthy man to successfully aspire to the presidency, and should a corrupt aspirant by any means find his way to the high seat the laws of the land are adequate for the protection of the people from any acts that would be infamous. Under the present method of electing every four years the business of the country is nervous and unsettled for almost one-quarter of the time, and it would be to the interest of the country to effect a reformation.

[From the Tribune, Galveston, Tex.]

At different times during the past 20 years there have been put forth efforts more or less earnest looking toward an amendment to our National Constitution making the presidential term of office six or seven years and prohibiting a second term. Of late the subject has been revived, fathered by the National Business League, of Chicago, and indorsed by leading business men of that city, as well as by commercial concerns and influential firms in diversified lines of trade in many States north, east, west, and south. The grounds upon which the change is sought are purely commercial, beginning and ending with the known fact that for a season before and after national elections trade is more or less disturbed and necessarily the entire country feels the depressing effects of such disturbance, and the oftener the elections the more frequent the periods of hesitating capital and unemployed labor. Reference is made to the years 1872, 1884, 1896, and 1900, when a larger number of business houses were forced to the wall than during the years preceding or following, with no other reason for the increase in failures than the fact that the presidential election caused commercial disturbances. Here in the South, where business is probably conducted along more conservative lines, the full stress of this periodical disturbance is not so forcibly experienced as in the northern business centers, but it is felt and we are not slow to recognize that whatever affects the stability of commerce is a menace to the social life, the home circle, and when that is threatened the foundation of our national prosperity is attacked. Whether a lengthening of the presidential term of office and the elimination of a possible renomination will remove these disturbing elements, it were not well to be hasty in asserting, but that they appear to have a potency in this connection should be sufficient to warrant a study of the matter in all its ramifications, and then, should judgment dictate a course of remedy, it should be sought with a boldness that, while it respects the customs and traditions of our forefathers, is too patriotic to cling to a youthful garb outgrown by the man. That there is promise in the proposed change, that it contains a cure for evils political as well as commercial, is easy to discern, and the correction of error is part of the duty of every American citizen.

[From the Index-Appeal, Petersburg, Va.]

Judge Parker's declared purpose not to be a candidate for reelection to the Presidency at the expiration of his term, in the event he should be elected next November, has stimulated interest in the subject of a constitutional amendment extending the presidential term and making the incumbent ineligible to reelection, or, at least, to succeed himself. If Judge Parker's declaration did not inspire, we have not a doubt that it hastened the action of the National Business League in the movement which it has initiated to amend the Constitution of the United States by making the presidential term six years instead of four and the Chief Executive ineligible to reelection. To test the pulse of public opinion on this subject, the league sent out a circular letter to a great number of distinguished men and organizations in various parts of the country, and of the hundreds of replies not more than 1 per cent are unfavorable or indifferent to the movement. The principal reasons given in the letter for the proposed change are:

1. Presidential campaigns are too frequent, are enormously expensive to business interests, and keep the country in a state of turmoil and uncertainty most of the time, to the great disadvantage of both labor and capital.

2. Presidential years show increase of business failures, decrease of exports, bank clearings, stock sales, and commercial transactions generally.

3. Presidential campaigns indefinitely prevent the beginning and check the growth of industrial enterprises.

4. The President during his first term, naturally being anxious to succeed himself, is kept busy considering the demands of politicians and planning for a second term; meanwhile important legislation for the general good waits.

If there ever was any good reason for a four-year presidential term, the country has long since outgrown it. The necessity for a change, such as the National Business League advocates and Judge Parker favors, was felt and acknowledged more than 50 years ago, but the stirring events then pending and soon precipitated in the Civil War diverted public attention from it and so delayed action in the matter. This change was one of the few made by the Confederate States in the adaptation of the Federal constitution to the Confederate States government, and the change is one which, we are fully persuaded, would meet with practically the unanimous approval of the people. The four reasons given by the National Business League are cogent and unanswerable. The fact that the first term of an incumbent of the presidential office is largely taken up with intrigues for the renomination of the President by his party is a national scandal, which tends to bring the theory of republican government into ridicule and contempt when contrasted with its practice.

[From the Herald, Manitowoc, Wis.]

The movement to amend Article II of the United States Constitution so as to lengthen the presidential term to six years and to make the Chief Executive ineligible for reelection is very generally favored by business men and commercial organizations throughout the country. This is evident from the character of the responses received by the National Business League, which recently sent out inquiries touching this matter.

The coming of a presidential campaign is generally attended by considerable business disturbances and is invariably viewed with no little apprehension by the commercial interests of the country. This was strikingly evident during each of the last two national campaigns, when there was a prospect of sweeping changes in those policies that are of vital concern to the commercial and financial interests of the country. But even when, as now, there is little prospect of a sudden change in the policies affecting the business world, the coming of a presidential campaign is viewed with apprehension by commercial organizations, because of the many serious losses incident to the disturbance occasioned by a political struggle.

While true patriotism, good citizenship, and pure government are infinitely more important than business considerations, the arguments advanced by the business world in favor of lengthening the interim between presidential campaigns are worthy of the hearty support of every citizen in the country; and it seems that the proposed change is finding increasing favor with the people in every State of the Union. But as the change contemplates the ineligibility of the President for reelection it would seem to be better to make the presidential term eight years instead of six years. This would make the presidential term as long as that now permitted by the unwritten law of the country.

The three years' effort of the present Chief Executive in shaping public policies so as to bring about his renomination and reelection and Judge Parker's declaration of his purpose never to be a candidate again in case of his election have served to emphasize the importance of the amendment to the Federal Constitution advocated by the National Business League.

A six-year or an eight-year presidential term would mean a great saving to the country and promote stability of our governmental policies, which is one of the things desired by business men and commercial organizations. Of course, as stated above, an eight-year term would be much preferable to a six-year one.

The arguments in support of the desired amendment pertain directly to the question of good government and only incidentally to the business advantages that would result from such a change. If the one-term principle were made a part of the supreme law of the land, the powerful temptation to use Federal patronage as an instrument for selfish purposes would at least be removed. This would enable the President "to discharge his duty with an eye single to his country's good" as he might understand that good. It would make him independent of party bosses and self-seeking wire pullers. It would make him independent of Wall Street and its plutocratic ramifications.

[From the News, Macon, Ga.]

The proposal of the National Business League to extend the President's term to six years has created much discussion lately. The opinions of the majority seem to favor the extension with the proviso of "no second term." The National League, in connection with the recommendation that the amendment to the Constitution providing for this extension be adopted, advances some sound reasons why it would be profitable and practical which, according to the Chicago Evening Post, are these: The presidential campaigns now are too frequent, enormously expensive to business interests, and sure creators of turmoil and uncertainty "to the great disadvantage of capital and labor." They "indefinitely prevent the beginning and check the growth of industrial enterprises," and presidential years show a decidedly bad effect on commercial transactions generally.

Such arguments as the foregoing must appeal with peculiar force to the business interests everywhere, but the fourth reason given by the league should have the thoughtful consideration of every citizen: "The President during his first term, naturally being anxious to succeed himself, is kept busy considering the demands of politicians and planning for a second term; meanwhile important legislation for the general good waits."

Commenting on this, Judge Tuley says that such a constitutional amendment "will mean the overthrow of the 'boss' and 'machine' government of the people now existing." Deprived of patronage, the "boss" and the "machine" must cease to exist. Then, in the words of Judge Tuley, "the people will again govern themselves."

Of the hundreds of replies received by the league not more than 1 per cent are unfavorable or indifferent to the movement. It is a plan certain to be indorsed by every business interest in the country. Add to this the desirableness of a return to genuine self-government through freeing the President from the dictation of the political "boss" and the political "machine," and we easily may foresee hearty popular commendation of the initiative taken by the National Business League.

The practical politician may oppose the movement, because he is the only one to be hurt by its success. But let it once be clearly understood, says the Post, that the people and the business interests desire the amendment, that the welfare of the Nation demands it, there will be few States in the Union that will hesitate to give Congress the necessary authority to act finally once the question is submitted to them.

[From the Bulletin, Auburn, N. Y.]

The question of changing the tenure of office of the President of the United States—one that has been as thoroughly discussed without result as any that has come before the people in decades—bids fair now to be effectively settled through the effort principally of the National Business League, of Chicago, backed by the Chicago Evening Post. The Post prints several pages of replies from merchants, bankers, manufacturers, commercial bodies, boards of trade, etc., in answer to a proposal made by the National League regarding a six-year, single-tenure term for the President. These letters show that the efforts of the league are systematic and well organized; but they show with equal force that the business interests of the country are taking up the matter with an earnestness that promises ultimate success.

Prominent among the New York State business men who heartily indorse the proposal of the league is George H. Nye, president of the Nye & Wait Carpet Co. and also of the Cayuga County National Bank, of this city. Mr. Nye says: "The movement inaugurated by the league toward lengthening the presidential term to a period of six years has my hearty approval. I am also in favor of making the Chief Executive ineligible to succeed himself without an interregnum, or, in other words, to prohibit two consecutive terms. It might be wise in case of a second term under such a law to have an age limit, and to provide for the possibility of the Vice President being elevated to the office through the death of the President."

The Post points out that there are many strong arguments in favor of the proposition and very few against it. Here and there a politician objects to lengthening the presidential term, and especially to making an incumbent of the high office ineligible for reelection, but the reasons given are to the Post among the most convincing arguments offered in support of the change—they show so plainly the manifest evils of the present system.

The National Business League is not unmindful of the difficulties that lie in the way of securing any amendment to the National Constitution, but it realizes the vast power and influence that must be wielded by the united business interests of this preeminently commercial Nation. It does not follow, the league holds, that because the only amendments made to the Constitution since its adoption were a result of war that nothing but war can secure an amendment. Great changes have taken place in this country and in the world since the latest additions were made to the fundamental law of the United States, not the least of which is the growing general recognition that the advances due to peaceful agitation are more likely to be safe and permanent than those forced by the sword.

What the business interests of the United States demand they sooner or later succeed in getting. The National Business League is securing the cordial cooperation of other business organizations and of influential men throughout the country. It has announced its determination not to relax its efforts until a satisfactory conclusion is reached. In this fact rests the greatest promise of success. The presidential election seriously disturbs business; the eligibility of the President to reelection is believed by many, the league included, to have a baneful effect upon our political life.

Grover Cleveland, notwithstanding he was thrice a candidate and twice elected, in his letter of 1884, accepting the presidential nomination, said: "When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptation to retain public office once again, and, more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent whom a horde of officeholders with a zeal born of benefits received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stands ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for reelection a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate, and intelligent action which must characterize government for the people."

In the next paragraph of his letter Mr. Cleveland favors an amendment to the Constitution, limiting the President to a single term of service.

Judge Parker has already promised that, if elected, he will serve but one term. It was the "Old Roman" Thurman who said: "You will never have any genuine reform in the civil service until you adopt the one-term principle in reference to the Presidency."

Business wishes to have these periods of disturbances further apart; the increasing number of independent citizens desire a genuine civil-service reform, cleaner politics, fewer opportunities for corruption in tional amendment advocated by the National Business League, and, once united, the object of their concerted effort seems certain of attainment.

It is a very difficult, but not an impossible thing, to amend the Constitution of the United States, and in this age of unparalleled commercial and industrial activity we can fancy no more likely amendment than one intended primarily to protect and conserve our business interests.

[From the Citizen, Columbus, Ohio.]

Excuse this long editorial. It is about a very important matter, but if you do not want to read it, why, very well. It is about the movement to extend the term of the President of the United States to six years and to give him but a single term. It is one of the live questions of the day.

The idea of a single term for the President is as old as the Government. Many of the framers of the Constitution, as you may learn by reading their debates, were in favor of it. But the idea was beaten down and the four-year term was agreed upon as a compromise. But that did not settle the question. For a hundred and fifteen years there has been more or less agitation about it. There must be merit in the single-term proposition. If it were a fallacy it would have died long ago. It takes a mighty big issue to live a hundred and fifteen years.

Some of the greatest and best men of the Government have favored the single term for the presidential office. Among those who might be mentioned are Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Clay, Tilden, Thurman, Cleveland, and others. Henry Clay said: "Much observation and deliberate reflection have satisfied me that too much of the time, the thought, the exertion of the incumbent are occupied during the first term in securing his reelection. The public business consequently suffers."

Lately the National Business League, with headquarters at Chicago, has been making a campaign among the business organizations and the influential men of the country to secure an amendment to the Constitution making the presidential office a six-year single tenure. The response from business sources has been vigorous and the movement is growing. It is difficult to amend the Constitution. But the business interests of the country are powerful and usually get what they go after. About the only opposition to the proposal by the league comes from the politicians. But the politicians bow to public opinion quite willingly.

Business men urge, first of all, that political campaigns come too often, that they upset business, that they keep the country in a turmoil, that the uncertainty and excitement hinders the prosperity of both capital and labor. National campaigns decrease the volume of business and increase the number of failures. The tendency in the States is toward fewer elections. A large majority of the States have adopted biennial elections and are pleased with the results. Say the business men: Why disturb business every four years? Why frighten capital by threatened changes of finance or of tariff every four years? Why jeopardize commercial interests so frequently? Why produce a partial paralysis of business activities by taking one year out of every four?

But there are other reasons and better ones why the President's term should be extended to six years and he be made ineligible for a second term. There are higher interests than business interests.

The change would work a reform in our political methods. Free the President of the ambition for a second term and you make him a better President for the whole country. He would put patriotism above party. In those great crises that will come to our Presidents more and more—crises that demand calm judgment, clear conscience, and high patriotism—he will be unhampered by party expediency. As it is now, it takes about two years for a President to get the run of his duties and the other two years are spent more or less in pulling the wires for a reelection.

The late Allen G. Thurman understood this. He said: "My friends, you will never have any genuine reform in the civil service until you adopt the one-term principle in reference to the Presidency. So long as the incumbent can hope for a second term he will use his immense patronage of the Government to procure his renomination and secure his reelection." The single tenure is in the interests of genuine civil-service reform, whiter politics, fewer chances for graft and corruption. When the second term begins to buzz in the Executive bonnet the hungry politicians whet their appetites for political pie.

There are other reasons. A six-year term would serve to dignify the Presidency. At the end of six years the Executive should be satisfied to retire to private life, free from political strife, having attained the highest pinnacle of human ambition. The savings from his salary would prevent the necessity of his entering into business. He could give the country the benefit of his experience and wise advice, thus solving the question, "What shall we do with our ex-Presidents?"

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

Mr. CULLOM. I introduce a joint resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) approving the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln memorial, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln memorial, determined upon and recommended to Congress December 4, 1912, by the commission created by the act entitled "An act to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln," approved February 9, 1911, be, and the same are hereby, approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know positively whether it would come within morning business, but I asked the other day for a reconsideration of the vote upon House bill 18787, by which the eight-hour law was applied to dredging operations. I should like to bring up that matter at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unquestionably the Senator has a right to make the motion now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I then move to reconsider the vote by which House bill 18787 was passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill he has indicated was passed. It will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18787) relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon a public work of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and of all persons employed in constructing, maintaining, or improving a river or harbor of the United States and of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not wish to take any time for its consideration more than is absolutely necessary, and as I have before me some prepared objections to the bill, I should like to have them read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"EIGHT HOURS FOR DREDGE WORKERS.

"Memorandum on H. R. 18787, now on the calendar of the Senate.

"There are several methods of dredging:

"a. The bucket or clam-shell method, by which the material is dug from the bottom of the channel and dumped into a barge alongside, to be subsequently dumped elsewhere.

"b. The suction method, where the dredge sucks up and discharges the excavated material through a pipe line, oftentimes several miles in length.

"c. The method where the dredged material is sucked up and pumped into bins in the hull of the dredge or into barges alongside and taken to sea and dumped.

"d. The endless-chain and bucket dredge, which is a series of buckets on an endless chain which also dumps the material either into the hull of the dredge or into a barge alongside, which subsequently dumps it elsewhere.

"In all of these cases the work of the dredge workers is necessarily intermittent, they having little or nothing to do except to change the position of the barges or the dredge as the various compartments of the same are filled or the work requires a shifting in the position of the dredge or the floating pipe line, etc.

"The loss of time due to the necessity of these changes is a very considerable matter, and it frequently occurs that the tugboat used in taking away the filled barges and replacing empties is delayed and the dredge has to suspend operations until such time as the tugboat can make the transfer. During such periods dredge workers have nothing to do and can sit around and smoke their pipes in comfort until it becomes necessary for them to handle the lines to make the barges fast in position alongside the dredge or to effect a change in the position of the dredge or the floating pipe line.

"It also frequently occurs that by reason of stress of weather dredging operations have to be suspended, but inasmuch as all dredge workers are paid by the month and are provided with quarters and with subsistence on board, this stress of weather is a direct loss to the dredge owner, as under such conditions no work can be done. The dredge worker therefore renders no service, but at the same time suffers no reduction in pay or loss of quarters or subsistence, and under existing conditions the average day's work, month in and month out, will show that the dredge worker is actually engaged in labor but a comparatively few hours out of the 24; that is to say, his average daily labor every 30 days is less than eight hours per day.

"While it is true that the bill H. R. 18787, as amended by the Senate committee, restricts to eight hours work per day those who are engaged on the dredges in the capacity of engineers, enginemen, laborers, and others who are directly connected with the handling of the machinery and tools of the dredge, yet it remains a fact that these dredge workers, by reason of the fact that they are paid by the month and provided with quarters and subsistence and live on board the dredges, which are anchored offshore and engaged in work in a channel of a river or harbor, that this character of work is substantially the same as that rendered by persons in the field engaged in agriculture, who likewise are paid by the month and provided with quarters and subsistence and who are required to labor and do labor from sunrise to sunset. Yet these favored few dredge workers are by this special act to have what virtually amounts to an increase in pay of 33⅓ per cent, which increase must be paid for out of the pockets of the people, because of the fact that it will result in large increased cost in dredging, which additional cost is therefore a burden upon the very agricultural classes who are required to work from 12 to 16 hours per day.

"There is no doubt but that the reduction of the hours from 12 to 8 will increase the cost of river and harbor improvements; it was so admitted by Gen. Bixby, the Chief of Engineers, at the hearing before the Senate committee in charge of this bill.

"Now, assuming for the sake of argument that the last river and harbor act, which became a law at this session, appropriated $40,000,000, and that subsequent acts which, it is understood, are to be passed annually for river and harbor improvements, carry a like amount, it means that something over $10,000,000 annually will be required to do the same amount of work, or about one-third of the work will have to remain unprovided for in order to keep the bill within the same limit of expenditure—all this to benefit the few at the expense of the many.

"Furthermore, this Congress has already enacted an eight-hour law, which was approved June 19, 1912, and which, like this bill, contains a provision that it shall not apply to contracts that may be entered into under existing appropriations, thus clearly showing that existing appropriations are not sufficient to enable the Government to do the work contemplated by such appropriation act if such work is to be performed under the eight-hour law thus enacted.

"It is safe to say that the law, like that which it is now aimed to enact for the benefit of the dredge workers, will also be an additional charge upon the Government of at least $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 per year, all of which is made necessary because of the unreasonable demands of organized labor, and that this $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 is to be borne largely by the agricultural population, which is to be taxed out of their earnings gleaned from the sweat of their brow in the field from sunrise to sunset, their day's work being almost double that demanded and insisted upon by these dredge workers as a full day's work; thus this special class which, as organized, is holding up the Government at the expense of other labor which is engaged in cultivating products of the soil and which constitutes a large portion of the Nation's wealth."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know how this bill got to the committee that reported it. It seems to me that the proper reference would naturally have been to the Committee on Commerce, where one would look for bills of this kind to go; but I do not know that that makes any particular difference.

I have had this little statement read. I do not know how many Senators were paying attention to it, but I think those, if there were any, who paid attention to its reading, can easily see that we are carrying this matter of fixing hours of labor to extremes. I think we will all agree that if a laborer performs eight full hours of good, honest service a day it is perhaps better for him and better for the country at large that his labor should not extend beyond that many hours; but the conditions are such in many vocations that the work must necessarily be intermittent. In this particular case, Mr. President, as shown by the statement just read, which I think is undenied, there is not an average of eight hours a day labor performed by any man in any of the service contemplated. Those men are hired by the month and not by the day. They must necessarily rest at intermittent times and probably sit and smoke; they are imprisoned upon a ship or barge, living there and boarding there. I do not think that any benefit is to be obtained for the laborers themselves by providing that they must sit around the remainder of the few hours in which they might put in a full day's work. By a "full day's work" I mean eight full hours' work a day.

Mr. President, this is not alone an injustice, it seems to me, to all the people of the country, though it must affect very materially the cost of all Government work in the improvement of our rivers and harbors. Practically 90 per cent, at least, of all the dredging would apply to river and harbor work; and I think it is shown quite conclusively here that the cost would be from a quarter to a third more on account of the enactment of this bill, and that where heretofore we have appropriated $40,000,000 for rivers and harbors we should now have to appropriate $50,000,000 to accomplish the same result.

I speak of it also, however, as an injustice to other labor. To show to what extent such legislation is influencing labor in the agricultural districts, I want to say that we in our State were unable this fall to procure labor at $4 a day, and even $5 per day was offered upon farms. In some sections of our State the crops were ruined; the winter came on and the shocks were covered with snow. Immense losses were sustained by the farmers of my State because they could not get labor. Why? Because in all other lines of industry we have enacted laws that prohibit labor for any greater length of time than eight hours in each working day. The farm day is about 16 hours in each day—all the way from 12 to 16 hours—so that kind of labor will be very much cheaper per day and the laborer will therefore remain in the city rather than go to the farm.

I speak of this simply as an injustice to the farm labor of the country. If we are going to have an eight-hour-a-day system, it ought to apply everywhere; but, Mr. President, you can see how impossible it is to apply a system of that kind in our rural districts, and how those rural districts must necessarily suffer, because the effect of such a law is to drive all labor away from the farm.

But more particularly I object to this proposed legislation, Mr. President, because it would be an injustice to the country, for it really enforces less than eight hours per day labor, and would in effect compel eight-hour pay for five and six hours of actual labor performed.

It seems to me that this matter ought to have a reconsideration and be again at least voted upon after a proper time for a hearing. It was taken up the other day, as I understand, when very few Senators were in the Chamber. It had been objected to by one of the Senators because it was understood that the Senator from Minnesota had some amendments to offer. I made no objection that day, but the next day, while I was absent, the bill was suddenly called up and passed. I make no criticism of the method that was adopted, but merely explain what might be considered lack of diligence on my own part.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, this is a House bill. On reaching this Chamber it was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. It relates to the application of the eight-hour-day principle in a certain department of Federal employment. The subject matter of the bill naturally and logically falls within the jurisdiction of that committee, and its reference by the Chair to that committee was manifestly proper. So far from being an improper reference, the bill, without clear impropriety, could not have been referred to any other committee.

On the contention of the senior Senator from North Dakota that the bill has not had adequate consideration, I must appeal from the Senator to the facts disclosed by the record. The bill went to the committee months ago. Hearings were had before the committee. The fullest opportunity was accorded to all interests concerned to be heard on its provisions. The bill was finally reported to the Senate, and for months has been on the Senate calendar. Last week I called it up and secured unanimous consent for its present consideration. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was then in the Senate and in process of consideration. I had assured the Senator in charge of that bill that I would not insist on consideration at that time should it become apparent that the measure would lead to extended debate. That was the situation when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] stated that he wished time to examine the bill further and to prepare an amendment that he had in mind to offer to it, and appealed to me to let the bill go over for that day. On that appeal, and because of the assurance to the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill, I felt constrained to consent to allow the bill to go over until a later day.

On last Monday I again called up the bill, and received the unanimous consent of the Senate for its consideration. There was a series of amendments reported by the committee. Each of these was considered and acted on in its order. Besides the committee amendments the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] offered his amendment and stated its purpose; the amendment was adopted and finally the bill was passed. There was a fair attendance in the Senate; the attendance was not as thin as the words of the Senator from North Dakota might impress us that it was. The bill had received careful consideration in the committee. It received more than the average consideration in the Senate. Nothing unusual or surreptitious occurred in handling the measure, and certainly no advantage was taken of any Senator.

Much of what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] says in regard to this bill would apply equally well as a general objection to the principle of any eight-hour law on Federal work. This bill contemplates no organic change of policy on the part of the Federal Government on the subject of the length of the work day. That policy was projected over 40 years ago. All question on the subject was supposed to be finally foreclosed by the act of 1892, which, after the enacting clause, commences with these words:

SECTION 1. That the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now or may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor upon any of the public works of the United States or of the said District of Columbia, is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day.

The act is in three sections, but the lines I have quoted contain the words to which I direct the attention of the Senate. When that act became law no one dreamed that the words "laborers and mechanics" did not comprehend the dredge workers on Government work. There is certainly no language in the statute expressly excepting dredge workers from the operation of the act and none which would even remotely suggest any purpose to make them the subject of an exception. But when the case of Ellis et al. v. United States came on for decision by the United States Supreme Court in 1907, the court held that these dredge workers fall within the category of seamen and are subject to maritime jurisdiction, and do not fall within the description of "laborers and mechanics" under the act of 1892. This was done by regarding the work of the dredgeman in moving the dredge or scow rather than his work of excavation as the paramount function of his employment, thus giving him the character of sailor and excluding him from the benefits of the act. In a minority opinion, three of the justices sharply dissented from the view of the majority on this point and insisted that whatever the dredgeman did in the nature of seaman's work was a mere incident to his employment in the work of excavation. From 1892 to 1907 it was believed by the Federal authorities that dredge workers were covered by the language of the act. It was on this theory that the prosecutions were started which resulted in the decision of the court in 1907. The bill passed by the Senate, and on which reconsideration is now moved, supplies a manifestly unintentional omission in the act of 1892.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. For information, may I ask the Senator right here if there is not a change proposed in the bill, and that is that the eight hours must be computed in continuous hours, and therefore if only six hours of work were performed—or five hours or four hours or three hours—it must be counted eight hours if it is done, say, between 2 o'clock and 4 o'clock, or between any other hours?

Mr. SHIVELY. The bill prescribes precisely the same conditions for dredge workers as to length of workday as are prescribed by the general eight-hour law for workers on other public works of the United States.

Mr. MCCUMBER. What I want to get at, if the Senator will pardon me, is whether or not dredge workers will actually work eight full hours in any one day if they are covered by this bill?

Mr. SHIVELY. This is simply a bill to extend to dredge workers the same law that now applies to other workers on Government work, and this whatever may be the incidents of that employment. If in the very nature of the employment there are, on occasions, spaces of time when they are not engaged in active physical exertion, that is one of the incidents of the occupation. For this no exception is made, and if the condition is inseparably incident to the employment no exception is practicable.

What the Senator says as to the length of hours of labor in certain other occupations is true. What he says of long hours of labor on the farm is true. I have experience in that respect. As a farm lad in certain seasons of the year I worked on the eight-hour rule—eight hours before noon and eight hours after noon. The exigencies of season and weather are peculiar to farm life. But the consideration which the Senator raises on this point again goes to the whole question of the policy of the Federal Government as to hours of employment on public work and certainly is not special to this bill. It is too late to insist with justice that dredge workers should be exceptions to that policy.

The Senator says that these dredge workers are imprisoned on the dredges, that they virtually live on the dredges, labor under peculiar conditions, and that their case should be considered with reference to these conditions. That conditions on the dredges, scows, and tugs are in certain respects quite different from conditions off of them is true. But the fact that it is a condition of this employment that the men are deprived of the associations, the comforts, the cheer, and consolations of home life hardly furnishes a good reason why they should be deprived of the security and benefits of the act of 1892.

Now, Mr. President, if it is proposed to reverse the policy entered on by the Federal Government over 40 years ago, and imitated by a large number of the States, there is room for an issue. If the wisdom of the policy is conceded, then there is no room for an issue on this bill. Every objection and consideration raised in the communication read from the Clerk's desk was thoroughly thrashed out before the committee. After patient attention to the subject, the bill was reported by the committee and passed by the Senate. While I do not seek to foreclose any Senator who desires to submit further observations to-day on this matter against an opportunity to do so, it must be understood that I shall move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will withhold that motion until I can make a few remarks on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withhold the motion?

Mr. SHIVELY. I withhold it; but I serve notice of my intention to make the motion.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think this bill should have further and more careful consideration in the Senate. I do not say that I intend to vote against it, nor do I agree with some of the statements made in the paper read at the desk. That statement fails to recognize the legislation recently adopted by Congress, making eight hours a day's work. We have passed some very advanced legislation in this regard. I do not agree with the estimate of the greatly increased cost of river and harbor work. While I am not sure that I heard it exactly, the statement seemed to imply that the cost of river and harbor work would be increased one-fourth or one-third by the passage of this bill, though, no doubt, it would cause a substantial increase.

I do not think any such serious result would follow. A very large share of river and harbor work is in other lines than in dredging, such as in the building of breakwaters and masonry work. But I do think this matter should be considered more fully, because of the intermittent quality of the work of these dredgers. They are oftentimes occupied only for an hour at a time, then there may be an interval of three or four hours, then another hour. So the question arises whether the eight-hour rule should be enforced as suggested in this statute. As it came from the House, it provided:

> Service and employment * * * is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day, which eight hours shall terminate within nine hours from beginning of workday.

From the beginning of his work to the termination of nine hours, the dredger might not have three or even two or one hour's work to do. It is changed in the Senate—though the change is not very substantial—to read as follows:

> Which eight hours shall be continuous except for customary intervals for meals or rest.

Which would probably be the interpretation of the statute if it were passed in the form in which it came from the House.

As I understand, also, this bill applies to other employees, such as waiters and others on board the boats, whose work necessarily must be at certain hours of the day.

I think this bill should be considered also in connection with the measure now before the Committee on Commerce known as the seamen's bill. That bill, which passed the House of Representatives and which is advocated by the Seamen's Union, does not provide for less than 12 hours' work for an ordinary seaman. The work of the seaman is quite as severe and even more difficult than that of the ordinary employee on one of these dredges. Yet we are asked to pass a law which does not assume to limit the work of the sailor to less than 12 hours, notwithstanding he may be employed in the storm and rain and for much of the time under a constant strain.

There is another provision that was added by amendment here to the effect that this law shall not apply to work upon levees or revetments. What justice is there in making that exception? If you can require a man to work on a levee or on a revetment for 10 or 12 hours and exempt him from the operation of this measure, why should the law be enforced in these other employments?

Mr. President, I think this bill should be reconsidered, though the Senate has already enacted into law the general principle embodied in it.

Mr. SHIVELY. The question is still on the motion to reconsider. I do not propose to enter on a further general discussion of the bill. Not a single new question has been raised. Every phase of the subject presented by Senators was thrashed out before the committee. Some of the considerations raised are provided for by amendments now in the bill. Others will be found on reflection to be more fanciful than real, except as they apply against any legislation whatever on the subject of the Government workday. Enough has been said to suggest doubt of the fate of this legislation at this session should the motion to reconsider carry. I trust, when made, the motion to table will prevail.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask a question of the Senator. Is this not a House bill?

Mr. SHIVELY. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I do not see how it is going to be jeopardized by a reconsideration.

Mr. SHIVELY. There has been a series of amendments to the bill adopted by the Senate. These render it necessary for the bill to go back to the House. To throw the measure back into the Senate will unquestionably hazard final action on it.

Mr. SMOOT. It has not gone to conference yet, has it?

Mr. SHIVELY. It has not. On the day following its passage by the Senate the motion was entered to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. I understand that that motion is keeping it here.

Mr. SMOOT. My point was that it did not go to the House; it was recalled before the conferees met on the bill, was it not?

Mr. SHIVELY. The effect of the motion to reconsider was to keep the bill in the custody of the Senate until the motion to reconsider is disposed of. At all events, that has been the effect of the motion in this case. It is not the case of a bill recalled from the House. The bill not having gone back to the House, of course, the House has had no occasion to appoint conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a matter of great importance. I believe in the principle involved, and perhaps would vote for the bill just as it is; but I believe it ought to be discussed, as stated by the other Senators. I do not believe the Senator ought to object to a reconsideration of it. We can reconsider it within a very few days. I do not believe there will be any objection within that time.

Mr. SHIVELY. I want to observe every obligation of courtesy, but this can not require me to consent to throw this bill back into the Senate and take the chance of its death, not from any lack of merit but from lack of time. Mr. President, I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. I merely desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly. I do not want to prevent the Senator making any statement he may desire to make. I withhold the motion for that purpose.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this bill relates particularly to the matter of the operation of Government dredges in connection with our river and harbor improvement work. When the bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, it escaped my attention. It ought to have gone to the Committee on Commerce. That committee has the consideration of all river and harbor improvements. In that connection, that committee has the consideration of everything pertaining to shipping and navigation. The committee is now engaged in considering two very important bills relating to our merchant marine service and the shipping in connection with it.

Within the next week we will consider the river and harbor bill. As this bill goes to the merits of that question, I think it ought to be reconsidered and referred to the Committee on Commerce for consideration, where a measure of this kind can be considered more carefully than anywhere else in its connection with our river and harbor improvements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion made by the Senator from Indiana to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SHIVELY. Before the question is put, a further word in reply. If this bill belongs to the Committee on Commerce, then a bill to regulate the hours of labor at the navy yard should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. A bill to regulate the hours of labor on public buildings should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The bill applies particularly to dredge workers, because this is the only class of laborers on public work that is now deprived of the benefits of the Federal eight-hour law. The contention of various Senators as to which committee should have charge of the bill only suggests the risk to the bill in the few remaining days of this session should the motion to reconsider prevail.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I think I may say that conclusion does not necessarily follow. The reason for the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota is the exceptional quality of this work in the improvement of rivers and harbors—a reason which would not exist in the case of an ordinary mechanic or other person engaged on public buildings. There is certainly here an exceptional condition, which should receive further consideration from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion made by the Senator from Indiana to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SHIVELY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and withhold my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 65 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted when my name was called, not knowing that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is out of the Chamber. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and let my vote stand.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. BRADLEY. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and withhold my vote.

So Mr. McCUMBER's motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday, January 27.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 22871 to create extension departments in land-grant agricultural schools.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senators very briefly to hear me call attention to the differences between the bill as it comes from the House and the substitute which has been offered for it. The House bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 only. That appropriation is solely for the purpose of establishing extension departments at the land-grant agricultural colleges. The character of the work of those extension departments is familiar to the Senate, the work being especially to place representatives of the colleges in different parts of the States to demonstrate at the homes of the farmers the truths that have been developed during the past 25 to 50 years in the land-grant colleges and the experiment stations. The substitute which is offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] proposes to appropriate $16,000,000 annually, instead of $3,000,000. It carries six distinct plans of work in addition to the extension work. What I desire to urge is that the bill of the Senator from Vermont has been assigned for consideration by unanimous consent immediately after the 30th of this month, and it ought to be allowed to come up on its merits for full consideration, rather than to be now substituted for the House bill, which is so different in its character. I wish to call the Senate's attention to the provisions of this proposed substitute that are in addition to the provisions of the House bill.

First, the proposed substitute would appropriate $3,000,000 to schools of secondary grade for instruction in agriculture, in the industries and trades, and in home economics. How many of those schools are there? Over 13,000. Suppose the States add $3,000,000 more, you would have $6,000,000 to be distributed among 13,000 schools to establish departments of agriculture, of industries and trades, and of home economics; you would have a few hundred dollars for each school, and effective work would be impossible; it would be a mere spreading abroad a few hundred dollars at each secondary school throughout the entire land. It would not be sufficient to accomplish the work desired.

The second appropriation is for $3,000,000 for schools of the secondary grade, with distinct departments in which the industries and the trades and home economics are taught. My criticism upon the appropriation is that there should be some requirement as to the amount of investment in the separate departments dedicated to instruction in the industries and the trades and home economics, or else, again, your $3,000,000 might be scattered abroad and do no good.

For practical work it takes a substantial plant to teach the industries or the trades. I think the experience of those cities which have undertaken to introduce special instruction in the industries and trades has demonstrated that a substantial plant is necessary for the conduct of the instruction. Specialists, trained with their hands to conduct the work, and with mental strength enough to teach, are required as instructors, and such men are called to places as superintendents of manufacturing plants. They command good salaries. To make effective even this second appropriation, there ought to be a requirement as to the amount of money invested in the plant and the amount of money spent at each one of the schools conducting an industrial department, lest our money simply be wasted.

There is another criticism as to these two appropriations. They are to be directed by a vocational board, which, in turn, must establish rules subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. It introduces the national control into all of our secondary schools. I am not sure that many of the States are ready to submit their high schools or their schools of secondary grade to the supervision of the National Government. They are home enterprises; they are now controlled largely by home trustees; and I doubt whether many States would make an appropriation to meet an appropriation of this kind by the National Government, if by so doing control of ordinary high schools largely passed to the National Government.

The third appropriation of $3,000,000, under the proposed substitute, is for agricultural high schools. Let us see just what they are to be. They are to be in districts in each State, with not less than five counties nor more than 15 counties. Before they can receive national aid they must be established with a special plant, including quite a large tract of land. So far as I am personally concerned and my own State is concerned, I should be delighted to see this provision pass. We already have in each congressional district an agricultural high school. Each plant has cost us over a hundred thousand dollars. You can not establish a successful agricultural high school of the character contemplated in this bill for less than a hundred thousand dollars for the plant. So, if that $3,000,000 is to be utilized in each one of the States practically for each congressional district, there must be a preliminary investment of something over $100,000 to establish the plant.

As we have already gone to that expense and as we are appropriating $120,000 a year to support these 11 district agricultural schools in the State of Georgia, we are ready to take any part that can come from the National Government. We have already made our appropriation. I would be delighted to see the Senate and the House of Representatives agree to add that measure to the bill as it has passed the House, but I would hesitate to consent to its being substituted here, for the reason that I fear so many of the States have not already gone to this expense, and such hesitation could exist about passing such an appropriation that the entire bill might be stopped if we insisted upon putting that amendment on it.

The next appropriation, for about a million dollars, is for the establishment of branch experiment stations throughout the States, each one of these experiment stations to be located, in accordance with the terms of the bill, at one of the agricultural colleges.

I think that the substitute bill confuses the work of an experiment station and the work of a demonstration farm. I believe in having a demonstration farm at each district agricultural high school; but experimentation is not the proper thing for a high school. Experimentation in agriculture is the work of the trained student, of the scientist in testing out truth. Demonstration is the application of that truth before those, perhaps not scientists, to show them by its practical application that a process claimed is true. The agricultural high schools will all need demonstration farms, but not experiment stations.

That part of the appropriation, I think, might well, when we come to pass upon it, be divided in two ways—one half of the amount to be given to the agricultural high schools for demonstration work and the other half to be given to the experiment stations, which shall select places over the State wherever experimentation is required to test out unknown problems and to change from the unknown to the known and established truths.

Those are the four largest appropriations. It also gives, in round numbers, a million dollars to the colleges of agriculture to establish departments to educate teachers in these specialties, and also to the normal schools a million dollars to train specialists for the work as teachers.

It seems to me, Mr. President and Senators, that substantial modifications must be made in the substitute before we shall be ready to adopt it. What is meant by the first suggestion of $3,000,000 to go to schools of secondary grade for instruction in agriculture, in trades and industries, and in home economics? Shall each one of these schools have instruction in all three branches? The fund is entirely inadequate to launch out on such a field of work. Instruction in agriculture is not a proper specialty to be introduced into the cities, where the children are not going to engage in agriculture. Instruction in the industries and trades probably would not be suited to some other high schools. There is no plan of division of the work.

If we are trying to reach out for additional work in the line of agriculture to instruct the children beyond the knowledge which is to be given them at the colleges and high schools, I would suggest that along with the demonstrator from the college of agriculture in the different localities of the State there should be a trained agricultural educator who could visit the schools—not the high schools, but the agricultural grammar schools, where 95 per cent of the boys who work on the farm are at school—and explain to those boys in advance what is about to be done in the demonstration field, how the ground shall be prepared, how the seed shall be selected, how the crop shall be cultivated, and spend the money training boys for agriculture by using skilled teachers, covering a considerable area of territory, who would invite the teachers and the scholars to study with them, largely through the utilization of the demonstration farm or the demonstration patches or the demonstration work that is carrying the knowledge of the colleges of agriculture and the experiment stations to the fathers and mothers throughout the various localities alongside their homes.

It might be that the first appropriation of $3,000,000, mixed, as it is, between agriculture, the industries and trades, and home economics, might be so modified as to give half of that sum exclusively to agriculture and let it be spent, not in the high schools all over the land, where the majority of the children are not concerned with agriculture, but be spent by using educational leaders in different areas of territory who will visit and organize agricultural instruction in the rural schools, for 95 per cent of the farm children are in the rural grammar schools and not in the city high schools.

Then, add to the industrial work the million and a half saved and give something like four and a half million dollars to schools that really are doing industrial work, that have a plant, and that are organized for something practical and substantial. Then the limitation should be placed upon it that no money should go to any school that has not a plant certainly worth $5,000, and I should say $10,000, and did not spend as much as $10,000 a year for industrial or trade instruction.

But, Mr. President and Senators, why should you substitute that bill for the bill that has come from the House? I understand that Senators will have an opportunity to vote for it; it will have its day in court in a few days; it will come up regularly for action immediately after the constitutional amendment is disposed of, as it is set by unanimous consent for that time. I have only called attention to its features sufficiently to indicate, if I can, that it is entirely a different measure from the measure which has come from the House. They are not substitutes for each other at all. The measure from the House is simply an appropriation to perfect the work of the Morrill Act and the Hatch Act. It is simply to complete this great work that has been going on for 50 years—first, the agricultural college 50 years ago and, then, the experiment station 25 years ago. Now, as the call is coming to both of these institutions to carry the knowledge they have gathered, to carry the truths they have proved, to the whole people engaged in agriculture, to carry them to the farmer, to the farmer's wife, and to the farmer's child, and let the 49,000,000 people who are on the farm have the benefit of this knowledge, the House of Representatives has sent us a bill which will meet the call. That is the bill that the House sent you; that is all.

That we are ready for it nobody questions. That it ought to pass the friends of the substitute concede, for it is included in not quite so perfect shape in the substitute bill. Not originating with the Senator from Vermont at all, not originating with those of us who have presented it to the Senate and the House, but originating as far back as five years ago from the necessities of the situation, from the demand for the work by the people at home. The demand has been made of the heads of the colleges of agriculture and the experiment stations; it has so pressed upon them that they have already taken steps, to the extent of the funds within their reach, to do something along the line of this work; and where it has been done its beneficial effects to the people touched have been almost beyond what could have been hoped.

That within 10 years the House bill will double the production per acre I have no question. That the application of the knowledge ready for demonstration can make an acre of land yield 75 or 100 bushels of corn where frequently to-day only 15 or 20 are raised I have seen demonstrated and I know from practical experience and from personal observation. I have seen the demonstrated truths from the college of agriculture carried to the field and put on the land, and I have seen the corn product quadrupled and more than quadrupled by the application of the knowledge which their experimentation had demonstrated to be truth. I have seen it applied to the cotton field; I have seen it applied to the oat field; I have seen it applied to the potato field. I have heard from other States of its application. Before our committee we had testimony from all over the land to the wonderful blessings which came to the men to whom these truths were carried and taught by practical demonstration.

We have the assurance of the Director of the Office of Experiment Stations experience has taught that they can not carry these truths to the men who need them simply by pamphlets; that the one great available way is to recognize that agriculture is an art as well as a science, and to go and do this work in the presence of the farmer, so as to bring to the farmer a knowledge of the benefits which they have learned can be conferred upon him.

I have no doubt that the knowledge yet to be learned through our colleges of agriculture and our experiment stations is far greater than that they have already learned. I believe it is still a great book full of unknown knowledge, to be acquired by study and experimentation and to be carried to the field to bless the human race.

My deep interest in this House measure is due to the fact that I do not discuss it without having seen it tried. We had the privilege in the State of Georgia of giving $50,000 for demonstration work to our State college of agriculture, and I have seen the good it has done. I would have the State colleges of agriculture in every State in the Union given funds sufficient to carry to the people the blessings which I am sure they could give if we furnished them the means.

The legislatures are in session. In a number of the States they meet biennially, and another session will not occur for two years. This extension work of the department must be accepted by the various States to bring its full benefit to the people of the States. This bill has been before the Senate now for more than 12 months, and I would have it passed. We have received it from the House. There are one or two small amendments that are suggested—one by the Senator from Ohio, which I am prepared to accept. He desires, at the end of section 2, to strike out the period and to add the words "and farm management work." It seems that in some of the States that is the term used, and it was thought necessary to add that phrase to cover that work. It is entirely acceptable to the friends of the measure.

Another is a suggestion from the Senator from Wyoming that the term "Territories" as well as "States" might be added, so that the beneficial effects of the measure may be felt in our Territories as well as in our States. I have no objection to that. We were considering that matter ourselves. We were not exactly sure how it could be handled, and that was why we did not undertake to put in the Territories. But I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say that he had an amendment which would cover it, and that it would carry the beneficial effects of the bill to the Hawaiian Islands. I am not seeking to limit it so as to exclude the Territories from what I consider the very great benefits of the bill. I wish to say that I appreciate the magnificent work that the Senator from Vermont has done in the study of the problem of vocational education.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. On the question of amendment to the bill I have had in mind an amendment which I have not offered and which I may not offer, because in the present state of the law it may not be feasible. I have received communications from my State with reference to the subject to which I am going to call the attention of the Senator, and I wish to ask him whether, in his judgment, it would be feasible to attach such a provision to the bill to meet the situation in my State and, I presume, in some other States.

The bill provides for an appropriation for a college of agriculture and mechanic arts for the purpose of extending agricultural work and home economics. In my State we have an agricultural college, and instruction in that college is confined exclusively to males. Then, we have our State normal schools for the instruction of females. In the agricultural department, as I understand from the communications I have received, they have never taught home economics. In the normal schools for females they do teach home economics.

Does the Senator think it would be feasible so to amend the bill as to allow this fund in States situated like mine to be divided up between the agricultural college and the normal schools for women? I merely want to get the Senator's view about it. I presume the difficulty is that this is to carry out a law already in operation and that does not apply to any colleges except agricultural and mechanic colleges. Does the Senator think it would be feasible by a provision of law to make a division of this fund to meet a situation of that kind?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it would be a great mistake to undertake to divide it. In the first place, the bill requires that 75 per cent of the expenditure shall be used for practical and actual demonstration work. The home economics that will be taught will be largely in the line of dairying and work of that kind. I think it would be a mistake to scatter the fund. I think the $6,000,000 will really be as little as we could hope substantially to cover the States with, and that to undertake to separate the responsibility and transfer any of it to the normal schools would be to defeat the very plan of the bill.

The object of the bill is to carry to the farmers truths that have been and are being worked out by duly constituted organizations which may be regarded as national in their character. Though now supported perhaps not one-fourth by the contribution which comes from the National Government, their existence was the result of the inspiration they derived from the national contribution. The bill is limited in its scope, based upon the recognition of the fact that these two agencies already receiving national aid, and as much national children as State children, have a fund of knowledge and a fund of information and a store of truths that the whole people engaged in farming can not use unless some outlet is furnished to carry those truths to them. It is the entire scheme of the bill to furnish a way to take these truths to the farmer's home and let the farmer and his wife and children have and use them.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Georgia has spoken about the futility of expending any part of the money provided under the substitute bill in the city high schools, because it is fair to presume that the boys attending those schools will not become farmers. Does the Senator understand that the use of the money in those schools is compulsory under the bill, or is there a discretion left in the authorities to use it where it will be beneficial?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there is a discretion. But what I was endeavoring to suggest was that we ought to make a division of the subject ourselves in our plan. What I suggested was that instead of joining in the first appropriation instruction in agriculture, the industries, and the trades, and home economies, and giving $3,000,000 to those three without classification and without separation, it would be far better to make a distinct appropriation for farm instruction to reach the agricultural or rural grammar schools, where the great part of the farm children go, and to spend what we intend to spend for the farm children other than through the agricultural high school by an agricultural instructor assigned to a territory to carry his instruction into the rural grammar schools; and then to use the part that was intended for instruction in the industries and trades, by consolidating it with the second branch of the appropriation, which was $3,000,000, enlarging that appropriation, and undertaking to do that work where there was a plant, I having undertaken to press the fact upon the Senate that it required a plant and required a substantial investment to obtain substantial results from instruction in the trades and industries——

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Georgia is addressing himself to Senate bill No. 3, which is now pending before the Senate. I am violating no confidence when I say that he and I have recently had a number of conferences following a suggestion that some compromise be made between the two bills. In these conferences the features of Senate bill No. 3, which he regarded as objectionable, were thoroughly discussed. I had understood that we had come to a meeting of minds with regard to the criticisms which he is now urging—that they had all been taken care of by a compromise bill which he had approved—and until this afternoon I had understood that we were in perfect accord upon the principal features of the compromise.

The objections which he has just raised on the floor to Senate bill No. 3 were raised by him in previous conversations, and have been met to the satisfaction of the Senator from Georgia, if I understand aright, in the proposed compromise measure containing the present Lever bill and the present Senate bill No. 3 with minor amendments.

He says that he feels that the $3,000,000 given by Senate bill No. 3 for agricultural, industrial, and home economics education in departments of secondary schools would be wasted because of the lack of proper safeguards standardizing the work. This objection has been met in the proposed compromise bill, which would undoubtedly go before a joint conference between the two Houses, should my motion to substitute the Page bill after the enacting clause of the Lever bill, now pending, prevail.

It has been done by confining the instruction in rural schools to agriculture and home economics, leaving the instruction in trades and industries to be given in separate and distinct departments or schools in towns and cities, $4,000,000 being annually appropriated for this purpose.

In addition, the experience and qualifications of the instructors in agriculture and home economics have been prescribed in the bill. Such instructors are required to give all of their time to the school work.

I make the above statement for the purpose of showing clearly that it is no defense of or argument against the motion to substitute the Page bill for the Lever bill to say that there are objectionable features in the Page bill. Such changes in the Page bill as meet with the approval of this Senate could be made either by action upon this floor now or by the committee of conference, as might be deemed advisable after its report had been returned to this body. It is doubtful if any measure in this new and difficult field can otherwise be brought to such perfection as to command the general approval of the Senate.

I believe that the changes which I understood to have been agreed upon with the Senator from Georgia safeguard certain things in the bill and strengthen it in the opinion of those best qualified to pass judgment upon it.

I have the highest regard for the Senator from Georgia as the most profound thinker and student upon this matter of vocational education of any Senator with whom I have ever talked, and I have great respect for his opinions and his ability. I very much regret, however, that after our conferences of the last few days he has thought it necessary to urge upon the Senate action upon a special bill for agricultural education for the adult farmer in such a way as to put in jeopardy the program for widespread vocational education petitioned for by organizations representing a very large majority of our educators, provided for in Senate bill No. 3, and which this Government should adopt and enter upon at once if it is to preserve the prosperity of its people.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand, then, the Senator desires to offer a substitute for his present substitute. I was discussing the measure as it is still before the Senate, the only substitute that is before the Senate. If the Senator from Vermont intends to present this additional substitute, I would be glad to yield and let it be read.

Mr. PAGE. I would be very glad indeed to present it. I was waiting for an opportunity to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as the time has been fixed to consider and vote upon this measure, I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont and I have had several conferences recently. I have had conferences both with him and the experts who have been studying these measures, and I know that the question of redrafting in some respects the present substitutes has been considered. If the Senator from Vermont contemplates presenting another substitute for the substitute he now has pending, I think probably I had better suspend and yield to the Senator from Vermont to let that be read first.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to yield absolutely to the wishes of the Senator from Georgia in that regard. If he wishes to finish his remarks, I would be very glad to have him do so.

But I thought I would suggest to him that he was addressing himself to another bill than the one I had supposed he and myself were in perfect accord upon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have said all I desire to say about the measure that I understand is before the Senate just at this time. I think if the Senator has determined to present another substitute it ought to be presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont withdraw the amendment previously offered and submit an amendment in lieu thereof?

Mr. PAGE. I do, Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the Senator's privilege.

Mr. PAGE. I then ask leave to withdraw the amendment to the bill under discussion which I offered several days ago, and substitute therefor another amendment. I would prefer to explain to the Senate what the substitute means before it is read by the Secretary, if there is no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield, then, to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am interested in one thing especially stated by the Senator from Vermont. I infer from his statement that he has now a bill which he proposes to substitute for the House bill in which the Senator from Georgia concurs.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not mean that. I have never concurred in the proposition——

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have never concurred in the proposition that any substitute should come in here and stop this bill. The Senator from Vermont called on me with an expert on the subject, and I undertook to point out defects in the bill he had offered as it was then pending. I presented my criticisms, and I understood that they agreed that my criticisms were sound, and they have rewritten their bill. I have been unable to carefully examine it.

I think it is a mistake to try to perfect the vocational bill as a substitute for this House bill. I think we ought to pass the House bill as we have it and perfect the bill of the Senator from Vermont when we reach it on the 30th. But if the substitute of the Senator from Vermont is to be passed instead of the House bill, of course I am anxious to see it just as near the legislation which I think ought to be had as possible.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I understand better now. I rather inferred from the statement of the Senator from Vermont that he has a bill here that is acceptable both to the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Vermont and that practically it is to be presented with their joint approval, so that we might consider the controversy at an end so far as they are concerned.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, perhaps I ought to make a brief explanation before I go on and state what the substitute is which I propose to offer.

As will be remembered, at the discussion which we had recently in the Senate with reference to the substitution of my bill, the Senator from Georgia said that there were objections to my bill which he thought could be remedied. I thought that there was then a prospect in sight that a bill acceptable both to the Senator from Georgia and myself could be written. Having that supposition in mind, as the Senator said, I went to his home with an expert and said to the Senator, "Tell me the objections which you have to the original Senate bill No. 3." He, with a good deal of elaboration, and, as I think, ability, explained its defects. I said then to the Senator (and I hope the Senator will correct me if I make a mistake), "This bill shall be rewritten in accordance with your suggestions, and it will be submitted to you for your approval; and if when resubmitted there are further objections, I would like to have you name them."

I afterwards saw the Senator, and he said, "The bill seems to me to be very good"; and even as late as this morning I said, "Senator, if there is anything about the bill as rewritten that you think should be changed I should like to have you so state to me, because I think we can probably reach an agreement, since we are in such perfect accord in regard to the fundamentals of this measure."

The Senator, in debating the question this morning, has argued in favor of the Lever bill. The Lever bill is Senate bill No. 3 as to one feature. It is true the Lever bill appropriates $3,480,000 for college extension work, while the Page bill, or Senate bill No. 3, appropriates only $3,000,000 for this particular feature of the bill. I care nothing about that difference. I am very glad indeed to make an amendment to Senate bill No. 3 to meet exactly the Lever bill. So in the amendments submitted to the Senator from Georgia, as I stated, there were incorporated, word for word, without so much as the change of a comma, the provisions of the Lever bill for agricultural extension departments.

So far as the Lever bill is concerned, all debate in favor of that bill by the Senator from Georgia is equally an argument in favor of Senate bill No. 3.

The next provision which was debated by the Senator and myself was the branch-station feature of the bill. One million dollars are appropriated under Senate bill No. 3, known as the Page bill, for branch-station work. I want to say that of all the features of the bill, that, perhaps, has received the greatest criticism. At a meeting held here in Washington in December, 1911, at which Dean Russell, of the Wisconsin University, and Dr. Thompson, of Ohio University, were both present, their position was substantially that they did not approve of any research work at any experiment station connected with district agricultural schools. At their suggestion an amendment was then prepared that made these branch stations, so called, simply testing and breeding stations of cattle, qualities of seeds, and some minor work.

I supposed at that time that this change met the criticism of those who opposed Senate bill No. 3 because of this experiment-station feature; but I am frank to say that in the discussion and correspondence I have had during the past two years that feature of the bill has perhaps been criticized more than any other, and as all measures are somewhat the result of compromise, I cheerfully assented to the suggestion that we eliminate the $1,000,000 for the experiment stations in connection with these district agricultural schools.

The next suggestion of amendment made by the Senator from Georgia, as I remember it, was the impracticability of teaching the industries in rural schools. The Senate will remember, perhaps, that Senate bill No. 3 reads "for the teaching of agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in rural schools," and an appropriation of $3,000,000 was made therefor. As I have stated, in order to meet the views of the Senator from Georgia—and I think they are sound—we eliminated the industrial-school feature from the rural schools and reduced the amount appropriated for that purpose to $2,000,000, adding the million dollars taken off at that point to the appropriation made for the benefit of industrial schools in the towns and cities, because under the bill, as it will be amended, agriculture gets $3,480,000 for the college extension work, it gets $3,000,000 for the different agricultural high schools, and it gets $2,000,000 for the district agricultural schools, making $8,480,000 in all as against $4,000,000, as the bill is rewritten, for the industrial schools.

That seemed to be a fair division—$8,480,000 for agriculture and $4,000,000 for industrial schools—although, as is well known, the rural population of our country to-day is only about one-half of our total population.

I think those who favor the appropriations in Senate bill No. 3 for industrial education are content. I believe they are satisfied with $3,000,000, and that they are pleased now to think that industrial education has been taken from the rural schools, where they felt they might not get any substantial benefit from it, and that $1,000,000 has been transferred to industrial education in the city schools.

The next objection urged to this bill at our conference, and it has also been urged by the Senator from Georgia this morning——

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PAGE. I am very happy to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator explain as to the secondary grade or high schools. There is an appropriation of $3,000,000 for that class of schools, and it is for the purpose of teaching agriculture, industries, trades, and home economics. I understand there are about 13,000 or more such schools. Does the Senator think that that amount of money distributed among 13,000 schools for the teaching of these four subjects will be sufficient to do any particular good? And if not, why not state positively just what that will be expended for—whether it shall be for agriculture, for the industries, for the trades, or for home economics? Because, it seems to me, that with that amount of money divided up into 13,000 schools the amount will be too small and that none of them would get any particular advantage from it.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that I am not at all disturbed by these interruptions. I only wish that every Senator here might interrupt and that we might have a full discussion of this measure, so that all Senators would understand its provisions.

I do not know how many schools will avail themselves of the provisions of this bill. It is not believed that many will do so except in localities where there are consolidated rural schools, so called, and in the larger villages; and there will not, in the judgment of educators, be anything like the number named by the Senator from Utah. All that I can say in regard to the bill is that I have submitted it to the educators of every State. During the last two years I have written to every governor, every board of education, and to every superintendent of public instruction. I have asked them all to suggest amendments to the bill, and, Mr. President, there has been, with scarcely an exception, an approval of the measure. I can say positively that 35 States, and I can give them by name if any Senator desires, have taken the bill under discussion and carefully analyzed it and said it was good.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill as I understand it purposes that for every dollar paid by the Federal Government, before it can be made available in any State that State must appropriate and provide an equal amount, so that the Federal appropriation represents only one-half the amount which will be used.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator is mistaken. The bill provides that for every dollar appropriated from the Federal Treasury two dollars shall be added.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So much the better.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say in this connection that educators say that the way this bill will work out will be this: The Federal Government, for instance, will give $500 for a school, the State will add to it another $500, making $1,000, and then the local community will add another thousand dollars, making $2,000 for every $500 from the Federal Treasury. Indeed, it is said by Dr. Thompson, of the Ohio State University, who has been before our Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that the amount expended by the State of Ohio for agricultural colleges exceeded by forty times the amount that they drew from the Federal Treasury under the Morrill Act; and I think one of the educators who appeared before our committee from Rhode Island said that in his opinion, on the average, every State of the Union would pay thirteen or fourteen times as much as is contributed by the Federal Treasury.

This bill is not designed to place upon the Federal Government the chief burden of conducting our schools. It is designed to go ahead and blaze the trail, to stimulate and encourage the States to take up this vocational work, and it is designed that they shall bear the greater portion of the burden.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. In order to get an understanding as to just what the Senator meant by his statement in answer to what I said before, I should like to ask him this question: Suppose there are 100 high schools, or secondary schools as they are called in the bill, in a State and there are only 25 of those schools that desire to avail themselves of this appropriation, will the State receive only an amount pro rata to the number that apply, or will the State receive the full amount pro rata to the high schools in the State?

Mr. PAGE. The State will receive its pro rata, which will be based upon the number of people of Utah, for instance, engaged in agricultural pursuits. Let me say in this connection, that this matter is so adjusted that the State itself can say what constitutes a rural school under this bill. If they wish to say to a rural community, "You must raise $2,000 before you can have the benefit of the Federal appropriation," they can do so. The language of the bill as amended—and I want to say that this amendment was made in accordance with a suggestion by the Senator from Georgia, and is a most excellent one—is this:

> Provided further, That the meaning of the words "rural high school" as used in the act shall be determined for each of the States and the District of Columbia by the board of vocational education for each State and the District of Columbia, etc.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just what I was coming to. I wanted to know whether that idea has been incorporated in the amended substitute of the Senator——

Mr. PAGE. It has.

Mr. SMOOT. Because it was not in the original bill. I was going to lead up to that question by asking my former one and then follow it with just what the Senator has spoken of.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that in all the suggestions I have received from Senators on this floor or from others none have been more valuable than those suggested by the Senator from Georgia. This is one of his suggestions, and I think it is a most excellent one.

Now, let me proceed, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, to refer to him in this personal way, and I trust I am giving him no offense. He suggested the danger or liability of having schools established which would waste or fritter away the money we appropriate, and he said, "Before we give any of these industrial schools any money, I want to know that a substantial sum shall be expended by that school."

To meet the Senator's views, the following provision was written:

> And provided that no such separate industrial or home economics school shall receive the benefits of this act which does not expend more than $5,000 annually for maintenance.

The State of New Jersey has this law. Any town or city desiring to avail itself of State aid for industrial education may draw from the State treasury as much as they expend up to $5,000. In other words, under the New Jersey law a $5,000 school must in reality be a $10,000 school, the city raising $5,000 and the State contributing $5,000.

If this plan is adopted with reference to Federal aid, it is hoped that where the Federal Government contributes, for example, $2,500 the State will contribute another $2,500 and the local community will raise $5,000, in this way providing for a $10,000 school.

Another provision of the original bill was this, that in order to avail themselves of the appropriation for the industrial schools in cities a new building must be built and equipped. The Senator from Georgia said, "In my State they have a good many buildings that are ready to take in this work, and it would be wrong to compel cities that already have suitable buildings to build separate buildings. The bill has therefore been so amended that these industrial schools may be conducted either in a separate building or in a separate division of an existing building.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have been desiring to ask the Senator a question on this point for some time, and as he has just reached it I can with propriety ask it now.

Mr. PAGE. I am very happy to be interrupted by the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to know what provision there is in the Lever bill or in the amendment which is proposed to the Lever bill for determining what shall be deemed an agricultural college. What board or faculty or who is to determine that question?

Mr. PAGE. Agricultural colleges in both the Lever and Page bills are those colleges which have been established under what is known as the Morrill Land Grant Act.

Mr. McCUMBER. The point is that in a number of cities we have agricultural colleges that for the most part have a curriculum that will correspond with that of the State university. Some of the branches taught are practically the same as in high schools, and there are some in which the larger proportion of the studies are those pertaining to ordinary branches rather than to agricultural subjects. There ought to be some person empowered to determine what may be properly called agricultural education, and that ought to be made clear and definite in the bill.

I am making the suggestion because I offered an amendment which proposed to provide that no portion of the fund should be paid out by any State until the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and the governor of the State should jointly certify that they were giving an education in conformity with the spirit of the law.

Mr. PAGE. I am very glad to have the Senator bring up that point. In a conference with the Senator from South Dakota only yesterday he said, "I am fearful that sufficient care has not been taken to safeguard this great fund." I read to him the provisions of section 24 and sections following, and after I had finished reading them he said, "The bill is splendidly safeguarded, and I am thoroughly in accord with what has been done, because it provides what shall be done if any State does not carry out the spirit and purpose of this act."

The bill is safeguarded in the most careful way, and I would be glad to read the particular provisions or the whole of the bill, if the Senator would like—indeed, I think the bill ought to be read after we have concluded our discussion. Is that an answer to the Senator's question?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have proposed a simple amendment, which, it seemed to me, would make that clear:

Provided, That no State shall pay out any part of the appropriation provided in this act to any agricultural college until the governor of said State and the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States shall jointly approve the courses or departments of study that are being or are proposed to be offered in said college or colleges.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply wanted to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that I was preparing an amendment when the Senator from Vermont and I had the conversation to which he refers; but after reading those provisions of the bill which seek to safeguard this fund I abandoned the idea of doing it. It seems to me, if the Senator will permit me, that it would be better to have the substitute, which is now being perfected, printed, so that it may be carefully and critically examined before undertaking to suggest such an amendment to it, because upon the examination of the printed copy of this new draft the Senator might feel, as I did, that the point was already covered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Probably the Senator would have no objection to reading that particular portion that is designed to effectuate the same purposes I have mentioned.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it runs through a couple of sections.

Mr. PAGE. Let me suggest, in answer——

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not like the idea, I may say, of some department that is not connected directly in the first instance in determining what the course of an agricultural college shall be to determine afterwards whether the money should have been paid out. That ought to be established before the money is paid out in the first instance, and it ought to be established in such a way that any college will know when it is receiving this money that it is receiving it lawfully, and that no question can possibly arise in the future as to its being entitled to its proportionate share of that fund.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator allow me to read the section?

Mr. McCUMBER. I should be very glad to have it read.

Mr. PAGE. Let me say, in this connection, that there has been no change in any of the last 10 or 15 sections of the original bill. Such changes as have been made have been made in the earlier portions of the bill to make it conform to the views of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. There have been no changes made, except two or three unimportant ones suggested by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] last evening, and I will mention one of them now. Section 28 reads:

SEC. 28. That whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior, from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of the custodian for vocational education of any State or the District of Columbia—

The Senator from South Dakota asked that I insert at that point the words "or otherwise," because if the Secretary of the Interior gets the information from any source he may regard it—

that a portion of the preceding annual disbursement made to such State or the District of Columbia from the rural-school fund, the industrial-school fund, the agricultural high-school fund, the college teachers' training fund, or the teachers' training fund remains unexpended, a sum equal to such portion or amount shall be deducted by him from the next succeeding annual disbursement from such fund to such State or the District of Columbia—

In other words, that fund if paid out for any other purpose than the purposes of this act can not be regarded as a part of their disbursements. It is for the Secretary of the Interior to say what has been properly disbursed, and if not properly disbursed a similar amount will be withheld from the next year's appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but the Senator himself undoubtedly observes the weakness of that proposition; at least that it does not answer the suggestion I made, in that when it shall appear, after a college has been run for one year or more, that certain funds have not been used, then action may be had. The point that I want to establish is that some proper authority shall determine, in the first instance, whether the course of that particular college is such as to entitle it to the fund, and when that has been established there can be no question but that the college would be entitled to it and would receive it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the Senator think, taking this whole bill, that it is drawn so that there would be any possibility that the fund would be paid over to an institution that was conducted for the purpose of educating dentists in a State or pharmacists in a State? The whole purpose of this bill is for institutions and branches of such institutions as are conducting this particular type of education. How is it possible to give the money to something else?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator knows as well as I do that there is not an agricultural college in the United States that does not teach something besides agriculture.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. They necessarily are compelled to do so, and should be compelled, of course, to give a course in chemistry, in biology, and in a great many other branches, such as geography, grammar, English, and the other simple branches.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the terms of the bill are very plain as to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want some authority to determine, in the first instance, definitely whether such a college is really an agricultural college, primarily designed, I might say, for an agricultural college, or whether agriculture is simply one of the branches that is being taught there; and, if it is but one of them, whether it is taught to such an extent that it becomes the important one.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Dakota has possibly overlooked the fact that there is no appropriation made here for any State agricultural college except for its agricultural extension work. There is no appropriation that any agricultural college can use for its general purposes.

Mr. PAGE. None at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think section 18 is the section which really guards the matter. I mean section 18 in the print originally supplied by the Senator from Vermont. I know nothing about the manuscript that he now has before him. Section 18 of that print provides:

That no State shall be entitled to any part or all of its allotment for extension department work until its legislative authority shall, by law, provide for the establishment of an extension department or division in the State college of agriculture and the mechanic arts as herein provided, and shall have provided as an appropriation for that work an amount at least equal to the amount annually allotted to the State for such extension work under this act.

It therefore not only requires the action of the State executive, but requires the action of the State legislature in establishing an extension department in connection with the agricultural college before any part of this money can be drawn; and then it is drawn only for agricultural extension work; it can not be drawn for any of the general purposes of the college.

Take our own agricultural college. Its curriculum is almost as comprehensive as that of the State university. Of course, it requires a vast fund to support it annually, and I take it for granted that the Senator from Vermont has not intended that any part of this contribution shall be used by that college for any other purposes than agricultural extension work.

Mr. PAGE. It certainly could not, as I understand the measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. And it does seem to me, so far as the agricultural colleges are concerned, that the expenditure of the fund is fully provided for. Of course, there are a great many expenditures here for a great variety of schools, but none of them, save the one which I have read, pass under the control or management of the agricultural college. They go through other channels.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it will, perhaps, be observed that this discussion is relative to the administrative features of the measure. I want to assure every Senator that the business end of this proposition has been provided for, I think, with painstaking care. I think the Senator from North Dakota will find it absolutely safe. But, be that as it may, of course no Senator here will object to any amendment that seeks to safeguard the measure in any way. I shall be very glad indeed to have amendments suggested. The whole of this bill, as it has been rewritten, has been submitted to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and I understand he approves of its features. If he does not, I should like him to point out wherein he dissents.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If I may interrupt the Senator, I wish to say that I have not been able to examine the bill carefully. I have said to the Senator that, so far as I got with the reading, the bill seemed to me to be upon the proper lines; but I was entirely unable to give it the time and the thought that was necessary to really master it. It impressed me very favorably, so far as I went, but I was not able to reach a conclusion.

Mr. PAGE. I want to thank the Senator from Georgia for that suggestion, and I want to assure him that not only has the bill been drawn with a scrupulous regard to the conversation which he and I had relative to it, but I will say that if I should find that in any particular I had failed to catch the spirit of his suggestions, which I regard as very good indeed, I should, with great pleasure, modify the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it seems to me that, under this rather extraordinary situation, there is nothing to do but to have this new bill printed, so that Senators may examine it. I am not yet able to discover what change is made in section 3. Does the Senator from Vermont still propose to expend part of the appropriation provided in that section for the teaching of agriculture in secondary schools or high schools of the respective States?

Mr. PAGE. The Senator refers to section 3?

Mr. CUMMINS. In section 3 it is proposed to give $3,000,000 to the teaching of agriculture and instruction in the industries and trades and home economics in the secondary schools; that is, the high schools of the various States. Has any change been made in that regard?

Mr. PAGE. There has been. As I explained before the Senator from Iowa entered the Chamber, the Senator from Georgia objected that instruction in trades and industries could not be properly combined with instruction in agriculture in what we call the rural schools, and that——

Mr. CUMMINS. Those are not rural schools; on the contrary, they are practically all city schools. In our State, at least, we do not have any high schools save in the towns of reasonable size.

Mr. PAGE. The construction of the words "rural schools" has, under the amendment offered by me, been left to the discretion or decision of the board of vocational education, but it is supposed that the rural school is a school in the open country or in villages.

Mr. CUMMINS. Section 3, Mr. President, does not refer to those schools. It provides:

> That for the maintenance of instruction in agriculture, the trades and industries, and home economics in departments or divisions of schools of secondary grade, other than the separate industrial or home economics school.

Those are not the rural schools, the schools in the country; those are semicolleges or high schools in the cities or towns. I have not been able to gather just what change, if any, has been made in the appropriation for such schools. The Senator from Georgia says, and he says with absolute truth, that generally these schools are not attended by those whose especial interest is in agricultural training. They are more commonly than otherwise, at any rate, attended by pupils who live in the cities or towns. I merely wanted to know what had been done with that section, in view of the conference which the Senator from Vermont had with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, as I understand, the appropriations originally in the Page bill, or Senate bill No. 3, separated the rural schools from the urban schools. The cities, as has been suggested by the Senator from Georgia, do not want agriculture taught in the city schools, and it is his judgment—and I think it is mine, too—that the States that have high schools in agricultural districts do not, as a rule, want to teach the industries in those schools. The suggestion was made, therefore, that we drop the words "trades and industries" from the second line of section 3 as it appears in the Page bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then we would have this situation, that in the secondary schools there would be taught agriculture——

Mr. PAGE. And home economics.

Mr. CUMMINS. And home economics. The pupils in such schools in my State are vastly more interested in the trades and industries than they are in agriculture. I would rather have agriculture taught in the common schools; that is, the grade schools—what the Senator from Georgia calls the grammar schools, I suppose. I would be very sorry to see that part of the bill which relates to instruction in trades and industries stricken from the appropriation in aid of the secondary schools.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have probably taken up that matter with 500 different persons, and the general view is that, except in towns or cities of 2,500 or more population, it is not wise to seek to do much more in regard to instruction in trades and industries than would be necessary to assist the farmer in taking care of his own machinery, wagons, and so forth, on the farm; but instruction in home economics should be provided. That I confess was conceded to the Senator from Georgia without reluctance on my part, in view of the criticisms that have been made. It may be that in the State of Iowa they have towns of less than 2,500 population that would want to have industries taught in the schools; but the general trend of thought, so far as I have been able to get it, is that in the smaller towns they will want agriculture taught. In North Dakota, for instance, the schools will scarcely teach anything but agriculture, while in the schools of Massachusetts they will want generally to teach the industries. So we have divided it and said that in the larger towns they may have instruction in industries and home economics and in the smaller towns in agriculture and home economics.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont misunderstands the situation, at least in my part of the country. Section 4, to which he referred just a moment ago, though not by number, gives aid only when distinct schools have been established for instruction in the trades and industries and home economics.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me, that has been changed, so that there need not be distinct schools. That was changed as a result of the conference with the Senator from Georgia. Aid may now be given to any of the high schools having a suitable room in which to teach industries.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that we can not get very far until we know what his bill is to be. I am very deeply interested in the general subject, and, therefore, I suggest both to the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Georgia that the matter ought to go over until we can know what has finally been determined upon by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have with me only one copy of this measure, and I wish to refer to that during the discussion here. It is my purpose, when we close the discussion to-night, to ask that the redrafted bill be printed and laid upon the desks of Senators. Of course, it will be impossible to act upon it in any other manner; but during this discussion I have felt called upon to answer the criticisms of the Senator from Georgia in the way I have. I want now to provoke as much discussion as I can on this measure. It is a great big measure. The great political parties have indorsed it; the President-elect has indorsed it specifically; the present President has indorsed it; others have indorsed it, including, I may say, the candidate of the Progressive Party. It is, as I have said, a great big measure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So that we may look ahead a little and see what the issue is going to be here, I should like to know, if the Senator from Georgia has no objection to informing me, whether or not in any event he will oppose the incorporation into what is known as the Lever bill of any of the provisions of the vocational educational bill?

I make that inquiry because, Mr. President, as coming from an agricultural State, a State which has no industrial problems, no large cities, no congested centers, and which has very seldom, if ever, in its history had a labor difficulty of any sort within its borders, I am necessarily in most hearty accord with the purposes of the Lever bill and all provisions for agricultural extension work; yet, as a nation-wide problem, there is no feature connected with the whole subject in which I have a more profoundly active and deep sympathy than with the provisions for vocational education. I think that is the biggest question, the most far-reaching question, and that it presses upon us as one of the most necessary of any of the subjects with which we can deal. I should like to know, therefore, whether the Senator from Georgia, even though he may approve in an academical way a bill providing for vocational education, will oppose its being attached to the Lever bill. I make the inquiry so that we may have some idea whether we can reach an agreement on that question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I thought I had made myself perfectly clear upon that subject. I said that it seemed to me to be right that the vocational bill should come up in an orderly manner after the disposition of the constitutional amendment, and be tested out upon its own merits; that I favored vocational education and favored Government aid to vocational education, and would be glad to support a bill when I understood it sufficiently and thought it properly perfected, providing for Government aid to vocational education along industrial lines and trade lines; but that I did not see any reason for attaching measures of that kind to the House bill. The House bill is an entirely different proposition. The House bill is the mere completion of what the Government is now doing. It is involving the Government in no new enterprise; it is simply saying, "We have been preparing for the people this information for these 50 and 25 years, and now we are going to carry it to them." It is itself a species of vocational education; it is a species of vocational education that would reach one-half of the American people.

I would prefer, as that bill has come to us from the House, that it should stand on its own merits and be passed on its own merits. It seems to me vocational education along the lines of the trades and industries might well stand upon its own merits and the measure be perfected and passed.

We have had the vocational bill with us in the Senate for 12 months and are just beginning to find out what is in it; and on Monday we are going to have a new bill from the Senator from Vermont with reference to it. How can we expect, having taken 12 months upon it here, to send it over as a substitute for or to ingraft it upon the House bill, and expect the House in 30 days to become satisfied with it? How can we hope for such a thing? The so-called Page bill has been on our calendar since February. I do not want to see the House measure jeopardized; I wish to see that much legislation, at any rate, passed at this session. I am not perfectly clear yet as to just what kind of a vocational bill I will vote for. I have been studying the question; I have been giving what time I could to it, and I expect to keep on studying it; but when we pass it we should pass a proper measure; we should be sure we are doing some good and not simply wasting money. I do not think any of us have any doubt about the wisdom of the House bill. To pass that bill is an easier thing to do, because we already have the necessary agents to put it into operation; we have the instrumentalities, and it would be a mere completion of what we are already doing; but in vocational work along the lines of the trades and industries we are going out into a brand-new field; we are going into new territory, and we should first know that we are going right. I would rather have the House bill passed. Then let the vocational bill come up on its merits on the 30th of January and let us see if we can not at this session, so far as we are concerned, at least, complete it also.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAGE. Does not the Senator understand fully that to pass the Lever bill at this time is to postpone indefinitely or, without question, until January, 1914, the great, broad measure involving vocational education?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no doubt it will be postponed. I think it is postponed anyway. I think it is utterly unreasonable to expect to send a measure of this kind to the House 30 days before the close of the session, and expect them to become satisfied with it and act on it at this session. I do not believe they will do so. We have had it before us for 12 months, and at the end of that time we find the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry withdrawn by the Senator from Vermont, and a new bill, twice as long and very different, substituted for it. That is the result of his thought and his study during the present year. Then we find, to-day, that as the result of further study and further criticism he is about to present us a new bill, and we must let the matter go over until Monday in order to have it printed and read.

If we in the Senate have found such occasion for change with reference to the measure; if we in the Senate in 12 months' time have abandoned the bill that came from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and have substituted another, and then have substituted another for that, and even to-day are finding it necessary to substitute a new bill, how can we expect the Members of the House, when we send this new line of work over to them, to be satisfied in regard to it in 30 days? I think it is utterly impossible for us to perfect a vocational bill as applied to the trades and industries that we can hope the House will accept and pass at this session. We have one measure dealing with agricultural extension work perfected and I wish to see it passed.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the last bill before the one which I have to-day presented was a good measure. I am very glad, indeed, to have the Senator call attention to the fact that measure after measure has been presented here, because every measure that has come here has come as the result of study and labor in the effort to perfect this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Which one of the Page bills?

Mr. PAGE. I will answer any question that is asked in candor. It was the bill I then presented. I have asked that it be allowed to be reported, that it might have a chance for consideration. I understand, however, that that is not likely to be done.

This bill is one that, in my judgment, the Senate ought to pass. The only way it can be passed is to add it to or make it a part of the Lever bill and get it into conference, and when it gets into conference we will then have an opportunity to bring it before the House. In no other way can it be brought there. If we pass it here and take it over to the House it will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and there, in my judgment, it will remain.

Let me repeat that the only way we can reach what it is desired to reach is by amending the so-called Lever bill as I have proposed to amend it and let it go into conference, and then I believe there will be action upon it. I have no doubt about it in my own mind. But, at any rate, I hope the Senate will pass this amendment, because it is actually germane.

It has been said that the amendment is foreign in its features to the Lever bill. Senators, the Lever bill proposes to send out experts from the agricultural colleges to the different counties of the country to instruct the adult farmer on the farm—not the boy and the girl—in agricultural extension work. The Page bill provides that there shall be a farmer, a man who has had the equivalent of two years in an agricultural college, who shall take the boy into the school during the winter months and teach him from the books, who shall devote his whole time to farming, and who, when the spring months come, shall go out on the farm and instruct the boy on the farm. In that way he is linked up with the man sent from the agricultural colleges to do the county work. The boy is instructed at the same time that the farmer is instructed. The two bills are not inconsistent. They should go forward together.

I hope the Senate will put this matter in such shape that the House will consider it at this session, because it is a great, big measure and ought not to go over until 1914.

Let me ask, Mr. President, that the amended bill—I do not know but that I might properly call it the Smith-Page bill—be printed and laid before the Senate for its consideration on Monday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I must insist that the Senator retain the entire responsibility for the bill.

Mr. PAGE. I wanted to give the Senator the credit for some excellent amendments in the measure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am complimented to be associated with the Senator, because I know he has done splendid, hard work. But I want to be able to read the bill before stating whether I approve it or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute submitted by the Senator from Vermont will be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before that is done, I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator.

I notice that in both of these bills a very important section of our agricultural country, at least, has been omitted, and that is the Territory of Hawaii. There is no section of the United States or its Territories where either of these bills will be more beneficial and effectual than in that Territory. I hope it has been an oversight, and not intentional.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to say to the Senator that it has been an oversight.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that in the reprint the bill be so printed as to include not only the States but the Territories of the United States—Hawaii being, as I understand, the only distinct Territory that we now have.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator has omitted the great Territory of Alaska.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Sometimes we call Alaska a Territory and sometimes we call it a District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether his request for printing included printing in the RECORD or simply printing in the usual form?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it occurs to me that if that amendment is included in the bill it may require something more than the bare insertion of the words "and Territories." I wish that matter might be left for future consideration, and that the bill may be printed as it now appears. Personally I feel so generous in regard to any matter of vocational education that I wish it could extend over the whole world.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I see no reason why Hawaii should not be included if the bill is to be favorably considered. There is certainly no reason why the Territory of Hawaii should be omitted from this bill any more than any State in the Union, because there are possibilities there that few States in the Union possess.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator please prepare his amendment and have it ready by to-morrow?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there is nothing to which I can present an amendment. It was only a suggestion that in printing the draft which the Senator proposes to offer on Monday it be so arranged that the Territory will be included.

Mr. PAGE. I shall be glad to have the Senator prepare an amendment, and I think I will accept it if he will present it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont whether the amendment which he proposes covers in exact terms the provisions of the Lever bill which comes to us from the House?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I stated at a time when the Senator was not present that we incorporated word for word, without so much as the change of a comma, the provisions of the Lever bill for agricultural extension work. The difference between the two bills is this: The Page bill, or Senate bill No. 3, appropriates $3,000,000 for extension work. The Lever bill appropriates $3,480,000. I do not object to the addition of the $480,000. So I thought it wise, to save any trouble or question, that we should adopt the Lever bill, or the Smith-Lever bill, without the change of a single comma.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Are we to understand, then, that the Lever bill covers simply agricultural work, and that the substitute offered by the Senator covers not only agricultural work, but vocational work?

Mr. PAGE. The Lever bill does not contain a single word or line in regard to industrial education. It provides for conveying knowledge from the experiment stations to the adult farmer on the farm. The Page bill, or Senate bill No. 3, provides for agricultural work in secondary schools and in district agricultural high schools.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is the amendment which the Senator offers an amendment which covers in express terms not only the provisions of the Lever bill, but also all the provisions of the old Page bill?

Mr. PAGE. Not all of it, because it was amended at the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, so as to exclude the $1,000,000 appropriation for branch-station work.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to correct the statement of the Senator from Vermont. That was done, not at the suggestion but as a result of the criticism of the Senator from Georgia. I think perhaps that is a distinction that I should draw.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to say that I went to the Senator's home, and I sat at his feet like Saul at the feet of Gamaliel, and I listened to the wisdom that came from his lips, and this measure was drafted exactly to meet his desires. After it was drafted I took it to him, and said: "Senator, is it all right?" He replied: "Yes; so far as I can see."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator ought to modify that statement. I said, "I have not had time to study it carefully." The Senator sent me three different bills after the conference. I have not been disposed to state just what happened, but I must. He has sent me three new substitutes—one No. 1, one No. 2, and one No. 3—and each of those three is different. They are long. It would have taken me two or three days with nothing else to do to carefully study and critically master each of the bills. Each of these new bills was nearly as long as the 26-page bill he has just withdrawn. The first of the three I examined more carefully than the others, and I said to the Senator that it seemed to me that that bill was freer from criticism than either of the other two. I told him that I was more impressed with it, and that so far as I had had time to investigate it, I thought it was all right.

That is about the substance of what I said. The Senator certainly does not mean that I committed myself, or affect in any way in his action, except as he had invited criticism of the bill, and I tried to give it just as I gave it on the floor of the Senate. In the discussion we had at my house the criticism I made of the bill was very similar to the criticism I have made of it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator's argument to-day was addressed to the original bill with all its defects. I want to say that after I had presented the bill to the Senator, he said to me: "Senator, the first provision that you have suggested seems to me practically to eliminate my objections to the bill."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think I ever said that.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the statement if I misunderstood the Senator. That is as I understood him.

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia obtained the floor.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I rose to give notice that on Monday, January 27, following the routine morning business, I would ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (S. 8033) to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River, above the village of Windsor Locks, in the State of Connecticut. I understand, however, that it is desired to finish the agricultural extension bill on Monday, and at the request of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Georgia I will change the date of the notice to Tuesday, January 28.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to give notice that on Monday, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up again House bill 22871, providing for agricultural extension work, and shall urge the continued consideration of the measure until we dispose of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I did not hear the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was no request, but a notice that on Monday morning, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up again the agricultural extension measure and continue to consider it until we dispose of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 27, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 24, 1913.

The House met at 11 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, we draw near to Thee in the spirit of prayer and devotion, that we may feel the pulsations of Thy loving heart and be reassured in our quest for a life of godliness, the surety of individual and national progress. Inspire us, we beseech Thee, with high ideals, and give us the desire and the strength as individuals and as a people to attain. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to state, before the House begins the morning business, that in regard to the conference report on the immigration bill, submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] yesterday for printing in the RECORD, everything was done by the clerks at the desk that it was their duty to do. It was published as a document, which shows conclusively that the conference report reached the Printing Office, and it was no fault of the clerical force of the House that it is not in the RECORD.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, right in line with that statement, would it be in order for me to ask unanimous consent to take up the conference report this morning?

The SPEAKER. Anything on earth is permissible by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, while we are upon that subject, to take up the conference report on the immigration bill. I can make a statement of the few changes that were made by the conferees.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will my colleague yield for a minute?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Kentucky was on his feet to ask for recognition to correct the Journal.

Mr. BURNETT. I simply called it up now because we were upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that after the Speaker's table is cleared the conference report on the immigration bill be taken up.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he does not make that request until later.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well; I will wait.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriations for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 19115, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if the bill has been printed with Senate amendments so that the House can have access to it?

Mr. SIMS. It has not, because the bill has remained on the Speaker's table by my request.

Mr. MANN. Then I think I will object.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I requested that this bill remain on the table in order that I might make some investigation of the Senate amendments. Mr. Speaker, I find that practically all of the House provisions of the bill were stricken out by amendment in the Senate and a great number of new items were added by amendments, and therefore the conference on the bill will require much time because there are such a great number of items to be considered. It is now getting toward the latter part of the session, and it will be practically impossible for the conferees to consider this bill unless it goes to conference immediately. That is the reason why I am hoping that the gentleman from Illinois will withhold his objection, because if it goes to the Committee on War Claims and that committee reports with recommendation to disagree to the Senate amendments and asks for a conference, it will simply go upon the Private Calendar to be called up only on the day when business on the Private Calendar can be considered under the rules, which may and probably will make it impossible for it to go to conference at the present session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many Senate amendments. The bill has not been printed to show what those Senate amendments are. It would be a difficult matter to ascertain what they are by an examination of the record of the proceedings in the Senate. If objected to, the bill will be referred to the Committee on War Claims and printed with the Senate amendments numbered. Then the bill will be reported back and the same request can be made after we have had an opportunity of examining the Senate amendments, and therefore I will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

CONTRACT FOR TRANSFERRING FOREIGN MAIL.

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules be discharged from further consideration of House resolution 778, directing the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to investigate certain mail contracts, and that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 778 and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the resolution?

Mr. TUTTLE. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution providing for the investigation of certain mail contracts which have been let by the Post Office Department. The Committee on Rules, I understand, is so congested with work that it may not receive consideration promptly, and as this affects certain contracts which are to go into effect on the 1st of July, it is thought that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads could give it the attention which it deserves at this time.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether the Committee on Rules has as much work as the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. May we not have the resolution reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk will read as follows:

House resolution 778.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be, and the same is hereby, directed to institute and carry forward an investigation into the letting of contracts for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay to the steamship and railway piers, and especially into the making of a contract between the Government of the United States through the Post Office Department and Howard Carroll, of New York, on or about the 19th day of November, 1912, for four years beginning July 1, 1913, for an annual compensation of about $77,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey if this investigation requires an appropriation or will require an appropriation?

Mr. TUTTLE. It will not. It has developed that a certain contract has been let without competition, to the amount of about $300,000, to cover an average of four years from next July.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that I did not hear the resolution read. I would like to know who is to make the investigation.

Mr. TUTTLE. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. And there will be no expense attached to it?

Mr. TUTTLE. No.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No counsel employed?

Mr. TUTTLE. No.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The committee is going to make the investigation itself?

Mr. TUTTLE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, while I think this resolution, of course, should go to the Committee on Rules, yet, under the circumstances, I believe it is right that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads should be permitted to make the investigation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. Does not the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department have the right under the rule to make the investigation at this time?

Mr. TUTTLE. I believe it has. There is a resolution which provides that it may; but that committee is conducting some extensive investigations at the present time, and we felt that attention could be more properly given to this by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, understand this proposition?

Mr. TUTTLE. He does. It was done after consultation with him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the bill (H. R. 27874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, a pension bill, to call it up and ask that the House as a Committee of the Whole House take the bill up for consideration, as this is pension day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman what the condition of business is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business, which is the regular order, is the bill H. R. 23669, the reclamation town-site bill, on which the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the Chair that to-day two weeks ago the Pension Committee was absolutely cut out and had no chance to do business, and we were to be allowed to come first to-day. We are calling our cases up in regular order.

The SPEAKER. We have not yet reached the stage of the proceedings where either the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] would have the right of way. The unfinished business is to vote on the bill H. R. 23669, on which the previous question was ordered last Wednesday evening, unless it should be knocked out of joint by a conference report. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the immigration bill may be taken up and now acted on.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice I will call it up in the morning the first thing after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Alabama, in view of the notice he has just now announced, to withhold the consideration of the conference report until Monday. I would like him to modify the notice that he has just now given. The gentleman is acquainted with the fact that some gentlemen in the House are necessarily detained from attendance here, and to-morrow being Saturday they may not arrive in town. Now, under those circumstances, I think the gentleman from Alabama ought to withhold the consideration of this conference report until Monday.

The SPEAKER. That rests entirely in the discretion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is the reason I am making the request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Without further order the conference report will be printed in to-day's proceedings in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just directed the reporters to notify the Public Printer to have it printed in the RECORD in the morning. What does the gentleman from Alabama say?

Mr. BURNETT. I will not.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the report is printed in to-morrow's RECORD, will not then the consideration of the conference report be necessarily postponed until Monday? I put that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. It will not; no.

RECLAMATION TOWN SITES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the second amendment to the bill H. R. 23669.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be submitted en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all these amendments be submitted in gross. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 21.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] demands the yeas and nays, and both things are accomplished at one time. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Evidently there is no quorum present.

YEAS—107.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I am paired with my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, and I desire to change my vote and vote "present."

The name of Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma was called, and he voted "Present."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The name of Mr. MANN was called and he voted "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FILIBUSTERING.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] saw proper to conduct a filibuster and delay the approval of the Journal for three hours and a half on yesterday. In discussing his reasons for conducting that filibuster he said that he wanted to teach this side of the House, and especially the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], how to conduct a filibuster, and in the same statement said that I had on the previous day undertaken to filibuster in this House. There is not the slightest foundation in fact, nor is there the slightest indication in the RECORD, to justify the gentleman from Illinois in that statement. As a matter of fact, the RECORD shows in the proceedings of Wednesday that the "gentleman from Texas" specifically stated to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that he was not conducting a filibuster. I call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the proceedings on page 1901, in which this colloquy occurred:

Mr. MANN. This is not the only bill that can be filibustered on, I will say to the assistant whip.
Mr. GARNER. I am not filibustering. I think it is full time that we took out. I have heard the gentleman from Illinois say that many times at this hour in the day.

I call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that often when that clock has shown it was 10 minutes of 6 o'clock I have heard the gentleman from Illinois rise in his place and suggest to the gentlemen who were in charge of legislation on this side of the House that the committee had better rise. I have at the same time seen these gentlemen cast their eyes over the empty seats in this Hall and realize that they were helpless to keep the gentleman from Illinois from making a point of no quorum, and agree to his dictation. Moreover, I refer to the RECORD to show that I inquired of the Speaker as to what the parliamentary status of the legislation we had just voted on would be in case the previous question was ordered. On page 1903 of the RECORD this colloquy occurred:

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARNER. As the previous question has been ordered, and a separate vote is demanded on each amendment adopted by the committee, when will the vote be taken on each amendment?
The SPEAKER. Next Wednesday morning.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to the Speaker himself and to this House that when I asked that question I had a right to conclude that on next Wednesday morning this identical question would come up in this House for consideration. I had certainly gone to the highest authority that I know of in this House on parliamentary law, especially since he occupies the chair now—the Speaker himself—to determine what the parliamentary status of this legislation was. I have no quarrel with the Speaker for his ruling. It may be correct, but I do deem it my duty to call the attention of this House to the fact that whenever you adopt this rule that the Speaker laid down as permanent you give to the Calendar Wednesday of this House not only one day, but possibly three days in each week.

For instance, Calendar Wednesday business has taken up two hours of to-day's work. To illustrate, suppose we had called for the yeas and nays on each one of these amendments. These amendments would have taken not all of to-day only, but to-morrow, or at least 12 hours, for there are twenty and odd amendments. So, I say that I have no quarrel with the Speaker for this ruling, because it may be technically correct, but I believe I should call the attention of the House to the effect of this rule.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did me an injustice, he did himself an injustice, and he did the membership of this House an injustice when he created the impression yesterday not only in remarks made on the floor of the House, but in remarks to his colleagues, that I was the cause of this filibuster.

Mr. Speaker, if I was the cause of bringing on a filibuster that took three hours and a half to approve the Journal, I did wrong. But I invoke the RECORD here and place in the mouth of the gentleman from Illinois the statement that he "did not blame the gentleman from Texas for making the point of no quorum and asking that the House adjourn" on Wednesday evening last. If the gentleman did not blame me, then certainly I could have done no wrong. The gentleman must blame me for some wrong or else he himself is not justified in bringing on a filibuster, because I moved that the House adjourn on Wednesday evening.

The truth of the matter is that the gentleman from Illinois has been so accustomed to dictating to this side of the House that he has got to the point where, if you cross his wishes, he will see that no business in this House is accomplished. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois is an efficient legislator; he is an accommodating gentleman; but in the detail of his work and in the multiplicity of it he has got to the point where he overlooks the larger things in legislation, and the result is that he is making himself ridiculous, as he did yesterday in undertaking to organize a filibuster here for no purpose. [Applause.] I think the gentleman himself made a spectacle by undertaking to give as an excuse for conducting the filibuster the fact that I on the day previous had said that I wanted the parliamentary status of this bill preserved until next Wednesday, it then being 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and asked that we adjourn.

We got a roll call to-day. That is all I asked for on Wednesday. We got it to-day, and we have defeated the bill. Did I not have the right on Wednesday at 6 o'clock to ask that this legislation remain until I could get an opportunity to record my vote, knowing that there was not a quorum here?

Mr. Speaker, I care nothing about the amendments. I never try to play in this House other than in the open, but the gentleman from Illinois appears rather to conduct his game under concealed hands.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GARNER. I must confess that the method of the gentleman from Illinois is most effective, but I prefer to play mine as I have done, and I think the American people prefer that kind. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. GARNER. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there will be two more Calendar Wednesdays at this session of Congress besides the Wednesday which will be required to count the electoral vote. On last Calendar Wednesday a bill was pending before the House which had been agreed to by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and reported back to the House with about 20 amendments. If a separate vote were demanded on each amendment and a yea-and-nay vote were taken on each amendment, it would have consumed the entire two days on Calendar Wednesdays yet remaining at this session of Congress and would have prevented any other bill being called up for consideration. The next bill which will be called up for consideration on Calendar Wednesday will be a bill called up by the Committee on the Library. I understand that the Lincoln memorial bill will be that bill. So that it was quite possible, if the bill that was under consideration last Wednesday went over until next Wednesday and a separate vote was had by yeas and nays on each of the amendments, that the Lincoln memorial bill could not be reached at this session of Congress. I was notified by gentlemen all over the House that that was the intention of certain gentlemen in the House. When the bill was reported from the committee back to the House, this is a portion of the proceedings:

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that we can not pass the bill to-night, because there are a number of us on this side who propose to have a yea-and-nay vote on this bill to its final passage.

I take it there is but one construction of that language, and that is a yea-and-nay vote on each of the 20 amendments. Further, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] said:

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I understand his anxiety and the anxiety of the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] with reference to this particular bill being gotten out of the way. I speak for myself. I am not in accord with that movement, and there are a number of others over here who are in the same attitude, and I think it is perfectly legitimate to ask, at least for the present, that all the rights of Members with respect to this bill may be preserved from the parliamentary standpoint in order that we may take advantage of it to fight a bill that is to come up later.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

If I misunderstood the gentleman, if he did not mean that he expected to demand a roll call on each of those amendments, to consume two days, and thereby prevent the Lincoln memorial bill coming up, I am willing to apologize to the gentleman. I would not have used such language unless I had intended what it meant. I thought then that I was justified, and I think now that I was justified, in demanding all the rights of a Member on the floor, in order to demonstrate to the House that the majority side of the House can never afford to filibuster against the consideration of a proposition which ought legitimately to come before the House. [Applause.] I was willing then, as I would be willing now, to filibuster against any other measure if it was intended on the other side to filibuster in order to prevent this Government at this late hour from giving a proper expression of its love, affection, and veneration for Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. BORLAND objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CANNON. Who objected, Mr. Speaker? Did the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] object?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not object, but I want to find out how long this is to proceed. We have two of the big supply bills waiting for consideration; and without desiring to be discourteous to anybody, it occurs to me that the public business is at present of the first importance.

Mr. GARNER. It is only 10 minutes. I hope no one will object.

Mr. CANNON. I only desire to know who objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. MANN. We are entitled to know who objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to serve notice that I will object to any similar request hereafter.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who objected, and I reserve the right now to object, simply to state that this request will be the last one that will go unobjected to, to the delay of the public business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the high privates in the rear rank who followed the lead of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in the filibuster yesterday. I have rarely resorted to filibustering during my service. I have no apology to offer. I indorse what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said.

Now, I want to say just a word about the Lincoln memorial. There is a difference of opinion in the House. Some of us believe that the memorial ought to be erected in Washington. Others believe that there ought to be a highway, to be called the Lincoln highway, built from Washington to Gettysburg. I am on that commission, and as a member of it did not get my way entirely. I would have located the memorial out in the Soldiers' Home, but the Arts Commission and an almost unanimous House and Senate commission chose the other site.

I am willing that it should be discussed. I desire that it should be considered, and when it is considered I will be content with what the majority of the House may say touching the proposed legislation.

Much has been said in the newspapers. I have not gone to the newspapers. It is said that many Members are holding frequent councils, either in the Capitol or the Office Building, organizing, and that great pressure is being brought to bear throughout the country. I will not criticize that. It is the right of the American citizen to promote as best he can that which he is in favor of, whether a Member of Congress, or automobile owners, or others are behind him—many men of many minds.

Now, a word as to the Lincoln Monument. There were four great characters in that great contest for the preservation of the Union—Abraham Lincoln, Gen. Grant, Gen. Lee, and Jefferson Davis. It is all behind us. Arlington, the home of Lee, is now the burial place for Union soldiers and Confederate soldiers—a monument that will stand forever across the Potomac in the State of Virginia. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I stand here a Representative from Illinois. I had a personal acquaintance with Abraham Lincoln when I was a young man and came on to the sphere of action. I loved Abraham Lincoln personally. I loved his magnificent service in the preservation of the Union—the great, wise, strong, charitable, patriotic man. Speaking respectfully, to my mind it is the prostitution of that great man's name when you speak of using it as an argument for the promotion and construction of goods roads. [Applause.]

I am willing to assist, and have the Federal Treasury assist properly, toward their construction as post roads, or in aid of their construction. With the Washington Monument standing there, as it will stand through the ages, is there a man within the sound of my voice, is there a man in Congress, is there a man North or South, that would purchase the construction of a road from here to Gettysburg or from here to Richmond, the price thereof being the pulling down of the Washington Monument? [Applause.] Not one; not one. Talk about utility, there are certain great characters that will dwell in the history of the country. First, and barely first, Washington; second, Lincoln; third, Grant; fourth, Lee, a great man, a great general who did his duty from his patriotic standpoint; fifth, Jefferson Davis, a great man performing a great service for a proposed new republic as he saw his duty.

A hundred years from now the ordinary reader will recall this period, and there will be in the mouths of the school children the names of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Lee, and Jefferson Davis. But you will have to search the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the encyclopædias to find out about the balance of us, who have been Speakers, ex-Speakers, Members of Congress in the House and Senate. Take Mr. CANNON, for instance. I have been Speaker for eight years. They will say, "It does appear that there was a man from Illinois by the name of CANNON, but I don't know much about him. There was another man by the name of Cannon in Congress from Utah, and it was said that he had seven wives." [Laughter and applause.]

And, gentlemen, I trust that the Washington Monument and the Lee home at Arlington, holding the hallowed dust of the Union and Confederate dead, in the fullness of time will be connected with the site of the proposed Lincoln Monument by a bridge across to that great burial place.

I have no quarrel with anybody, but as I pass out of this Congress I hope that a memorial will be provided for the memory of this, the second greatest man, if not the first, that ever lived upon this continent, that ever lived in the history of the race. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 27874, a pension bill on the Private Calendar. And I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPARKMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. POU rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. POU. I rise to present a conference report on the bill H. R. 24121 for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have a correction made in the RECORD and the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] calls up a pension bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what became of the conference report submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to state the situation, and his statement of it will answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a pension bill, this being pension day. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] makes a preferential motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] submits for printing under the rule a conference report, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] desires to correct the RECORD. The Chair will take up these matters in the following order: First, the gentleman from Massachusetts, then the gentleman from North Carolina, and then the motion of the gentleman from Florida.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, this being pension day, I desire to ask if this motion to go into the Committee of the Whole should prevail——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will complete his question.

Mr. RUSSELL. If this motion to go into Committee of the Whole should prevail, will there be any other opportunity to call up and consider pension bills on the Private Calendar until the second Friday in February, which is the 14th day of February?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. If the motion prevails, it will dispense with private business for the day and pension bills will not be in order until the next day set for them. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Florida, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NORRIS and Mr. ADAIR) there were—ayes 80, nays 86.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirteen members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the motion was rejected.

PENSIONS.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment will be accepted by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, by adding, after line 9, the following:

"The name of Charles Myer, late of Company E, First Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the Committee on Pensions authorizes this amendment, and all I desire to do is to put in evidence the report they made upon it at the last session of this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

H. R. 20999. Charles Myer, of Macon, Ga., is pensioned under the general law at the rate of $6 per month on account of malarial poisoning incurred as an artificer in Company E, First Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, in which he served from May 2 to November 18, 1898, during the War with Spain.

The pension was allowed December 11, 1903, commencing February 21, 1899.

A claim for increase, filed December 18, 1911, was rejected January 26, 1912, on the ground that the degree of disability shown from the pensioned cause did not warrant an increased rating; that no disability was shown from stomach trouble independent of that covered by the rate allowed for malarial poisoning, and alleged loss of sight was not accepted as a result of the pensioned disability.

In support of the claim for increase, A. Moody Burt, M. D., testified December 14, 1911, that the pensioner had been under his professional care a considerable part of the time during the past four or five years, and that—

"At first the said Myer was suffering from an obscure, obstinate, chronic intestinal indigestion; that for the past year optic neuritis has supervened and has finally developed complete blindness of both eyes, and the said Myer is totally blind, and is now totally incapacitated for any ordinary avocation of life."

The medical examination on which the adverse action was taken was made by the board of surgeons at Macon, Ga., January 3, 1912. The board reported: Age, 45 years; height, 5 feet 6½ inches; and weight, 146 pounds. They said:

"General appearance healthy; tongue clean; skin clear; heart negative; lungs negative; urine negative; conjunctiva slightly injected; pupils react slowly to light; can not discern objects; can tell light from darkness; no disease of rectum; liver, spleen, abdominal organs negative. Don't know cause of loss of vision; board not in position to make opthalmoscopic examination. No evidence of vicious habits or excessive use of intoxicants. Claimant is so disabled from blindness as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor and is entitled to $30 a month."

In an affidavit accompanying the bill the petitioner states that he is wholly disabled by malarial poisoning and resulting total blindness; that he is without property of any kind and is solely dependent upon his pension and the charity of acquaintances.

The gentleman who introduced the bill states from his own personal knowledge that the pensioner is blind, has no property other than his pension of $6 per month, is an object of charity, and is being supported by a benevolent order and by friends.

The evidence, your committee thinks, shows an increased degree of disability from the pensioned cause and results, and they respectfully recommend the allowance of pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I call up Private Calendar 313, it being House bill 28282.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28282) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Before the reading of the bill, Mr. Chairmain, if I may be allowed to do so, I would like to make a brief statement of its contents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. This bill, Mr. Chairman, has received most careful consideration at the hands of your Committee on Invalid Pensions. We have endeavored to present a bill that would be unobjectionable to the Members of this House, and yet that is a matter that is almost impossible to do. Still we have done our level best. Our committee since the session began in December has been somewhat crippled. There are two or three vacancies on our committee, and there have been several absentees since the last election. Our subcommittees are somewhat crippled by reason of there being sometimes only one member of a subcommittee present to work with us, and it is barely possible that under such circumstances some objectionable bills may have crept through. I have noticed that some subcommittees that have been fully represented at all times have presented bills here that were without objection, and if there are cases in this bill that are objectionable I think it is on account of there being an inefficient force on the subcommittee.

I desire to explain that in this bill there are 468 claimants, 332 being soldiers, 120 being widows, 14 being children, and 2 mothers. The bill carries a total appropriation of $148,296. This is a total increase of $48,048 per year on the part of the 332 soldiers; an increase of $14,928 per year on the part of the 120 widows, of $2,016 per year on the part of the 14 children, and of $288 on the part of the 2 mothers, thus making about $68,000 increase altogether. The average amount allowed per year under this bill is but $361 to a person. Of course, some are receiving a larger amount per year and some less.

This, in brief, is our explanation of the present bill.

We hope that it will be the last one that we shall present at this session. If it is not the last one that we shall present at this session, it will probably be the last one that we shall call up for passage.

Mr. MANN. That is, the gentleman means House bills?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at this time the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] be allowed to address the House on this subject for 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] is entitled to an hour, and the Chair understands he yields 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], who is recognized for that time.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, as has already been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE], this is probably the last bill that will be reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the life of this Congress. There may be a few bills reported for desperate cases.

This bill was prepared under a resolution that each Member who had his evidence prepared should be allowed three bills.

Now I have in my district 4,000 living soldiers. I have to-day bedridden soldiers to the number of 50, and you can see from that statement what proportion of adequate relief we have in this bill when you consider the whole body of over 500,000 surviving soldiers.

I have some statistics here, part of which have been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I think it is due the House to know how many pension bills have been introduced in this Congress. There has been introduced in this Congress 15,151 private pension bills.

Now, it is the presumption that every Member on this floor who introduces a bill thinks that bill has some merit. Of that number we reported and passed 3,000 bills. That is only 1 out of 5 introduced.

I stated on the floor of this House when the so-called dollar-a-day pension bill was under discussion that if that bill should pass the House it would largely dispense with private pensions. That was true; but, as you will remember, during the four days' consideration of that bill on this floor amendments were added to the bill which increased the aggregate between eleven and twelve million dollars. Then the bill went over to the Senate. There another and an entirely different bill was substituted. That was a pauper pension bill largely, and not a bill based upon service or upon sacrifice like the House bill.

The conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate had a contest lasting over four months, in order that our conferees, representing this House, could secure a bill partly based upon service and upon sacrifice, and we had to submit to a new classification in order to get any bill at all. Under this law a soldier who is totally disabled, who was wounded in battle, if he has not reached the age of 70 years, can only get a maximum of $19 per month, whereas a soldier who is 75 years old, under this law, whether he was in the service for only 90 days, will get $21, and if he was in 2 years, $30 per month, without regard to his service or disability.

Let me illustrate why these private bills are necessary. I went into the Army at the age of 26 years, when I was at full maturity. The boys who went into the Army at 16 and 18 and who served through the war are older men than I am to-day. If I had gone into the Army at 16 or 18 years of age and had gone through the same service in that war, I would probably have been in the cemetery by this time or a physical wreck, utterly incapacitated for manual labor.

So that this law which passed in May last does not take care adequately of those who are disabled and who have not reached the age of 70 years. That is the reason why these private bills are necessary now. I have a table here showing the increases in this bill, referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin The increases in this bill, should it become a law, will be $5,472 a month, or $65,704 a year, should all the beneficiaries live that long. That is the total increase for the 467 cases involved in this bill, but the death rate will reduce the aggregate to less than $40,000. So you will concede that the increases are very moderate and in many cases not as liberal as they should be.

Now, my friends, a good many men on this floor, and more outside, do not appreciate or understand the magnitude of this great war. Do you know that more men lost their lives in one great battle—the Battle of Gettysburg—than in the entire American Revolution and in the two years' war with Mexico and the War with Spain, all combined, covering a period of 10 years?

In the War of the American Revolution, lasting 7 years, there were 56 battles fought, or 8 battles a year. In the Civil War there were over 2,000 battles fought, and 400 battles in which more men lost their lives than in the bloodiest battle of the War of the Revolution—the Battle of the Brandywine. In the whole War of the American Revolution 1,735 men were killed in battle. In the War with Mexico, where 105,000 soldiers were recruited in 2 years, 1,049 men lost their lives. In the War with Spain, including the terrible slaughter at San Juan Hill, according to the official report, 247 men lost their lives in battle. In the Battle of Gettysburg there were 3,070 killed on the battle field or died on the battle field from wounds.

Now, you can figure up your 1,735 in the War of the American Revolution, 1,049 in the War with Mexico, and 247 in the War with Spain, and you will find that 41 more men were killed in that one Battle of Gettysburg than in all these three great wars.

Let me call your attention to another fact. There were more men killed on the Union side in that war than all the wars of England—the greatest imperial Empire and the most warlike of any nation around the world—for 350 years, including the 43 wars of conquest under Queen Victoria. I have not the statistics of the loss on the Confederate side, for they are not so available.

Now, it does not seem to me to be beyond patriotic duty to bring in a bill here for these deserving and destitue old soldiers staggering to a nearby grave and only carrying an aggregate increase of $65,000 a year.

Let me make another statement that may seem startling. Considering the size of the armies, considering the battle fatalities of these armies, the American people have provided more pensions, more benefits, more bounties to the soldiers of the American Revolution than we have up to this date for the soldiers of the Civil War. And now I will prove it.

Take Virginia—only one of the thirteen original Colonies—for illustration: In a speech made by Representative Smith, of South Carolina, in January, 1828, quoted in Thomas H. Benton's Abridgment of the Debates of Congress, is a statement of the amount of lands, the amount of bounty, and the amount of money given to the soldiers of Georgia and South Carolina by these Commonwealths for the services of their volunteer soldiers in the War of the Revolution. Congressman Smith, of South Carolina, said:

> The truth is that the officers of your Revolutionary army had been more liberally provided for than any other class of men in this or any other country. In addition to their pay during their time of actual service they were promised half pay for life after they should retire from the Army, which was commuted for five years' full pay—which was a mighty stretch for a Government at the dawn of its struggle for freedom—and were promised and received large tracts of valuable lands. Each officer, from a major general down to an ensign, had his lands, and that placed upon the most fertile spots. In addition to this, the Southern States gave their officers large tracts of the finest land in the world. Virginia gave largely and liberally in lands to her officers. South Carolina did the same. North Carolina gave to each brigadier general 12,000 acres; to a colonel 7,200; to a captain 3,500; and to Gen. Greene that State gave 25,000 acres that were said at one time to be worth $500,000. To that meritorious officer Georgia gave $22,500 in money, and South Carolina gave him $45,000 in money. These were free-will offerings after the war was ended, which those States were prompted to make to exalted merit for distinguished services, and surely they would redeem the Carolinas and Georgia from the crying sin of ingratitude.

In 1828 the Congress of the United States passed a law retiring all soldiers of the War of the Revolution and all officers on full pay for life (on the maximum pay of a captain) who served for two years in the continental line. Four years later, in 1832, the Congress of the United States passed a law retiring for life on full pay (limited to the full pay of a captain) all the minute men, all the militia, and all the militia officers who served on and off for two years. In 1833, a year later, Congress modified and liberalized that law. The second section of the act of 1832 required the reduction of all invalid and other pensions and a total relinquishment thereof before receiving its benefits; but Congress, on the 19th of February, 1833, removed this restriction; so that, since that time, the soldiers of that war received two pensions, where their service has been of sufficient duration to admit them to pensions under the act of 1832. Congress also made the law retroactive two years, to date back to 1830.

Here is something very substantial that Virginia did for her soldiers. In chapter 21 of the act of October, 1779, it is provided that—

> Officers who shall serve in the Virginia line on the continental establishment * * * to the end of the present war, and noncommissioned officers, soldiers, sailors, etc., shall * * * receive land * * * following:

	Acres.
Every colonel	5,000
Every lieutenant colonel	4,500
Every major	4,000
Every captain	3,000
Every noncommissioned officer	400
Every soldier	200

And so forth.

In the act of October, 1780, chapter 3, it was provided—

> And each recruit, and all our soldiers now in service, * * * or who may enlist by the 1st of April next to serve during the war, and who shall serve to the end thereof, SHALL THEN RECEIVE A HEALTHY NEGRO between the ages of 10 and 30 years,

That is most startling news—more startling than Hannibal brought back from Africa.

> Or he shall receive £60 ($300) in gold or silver, at the option of the soldier, in lieu thereof, and moreover be entitled to 300 acres of land.

Here are a few cases where the United States paid Revolutionary War officers money under the half pay originally promised by Virginia:

Laban Bailey, sailing master	$2,021.50
Charles S. Bonoch, lieutenant, Navy	5,066.00
John Bailey, captain	10,548.16
Robert Andrews, chaplain	7,284.88
James Barron, commodore	32,382.50
John Bailey, Bardstown, Ky	9,480.68
Corbin Griffin, captain	10,970.10
John Cox, captain	13,715.22

And many others.

These payments were made good by the United States to redeem promises made by Virginia and were in addition to the full pay and pensions provided by Congress.

Again, officers of the Regular Army—not more than 5 per cent of whom have any chance to see any battle service—are now retired at 64 years of age on three-fourths pay for life, and those Regular officers who served in the Civil War, if for a day only, are paid the salary of one rank above their rank at retirement. They receive three-fourths pay which, after five years, ranges from $1,400 for a second lieutenant to $4,500 for a brigadier general.

And quite recently 10 per cent increase in pay was voted the officers and soldiers of the Regular Army, aggregating some $10,000,000 annually of our hard-earned tax money. And this was followed by a 10 per cent increase in pay of the officers and sailors of the Navy, aggregating $6,000,000 more per year. All this for the benefit of men always well paid, well housed, and well fed, who produce nothing, earn nothing, improve nothing, and who have suffered no hardships, compelling every wage-worker to carry a soldier upon his back in addition to the tremendous burden of onerous taxation on everything he wears, eats, or consumes.

Congress provides liberally for the Navy in time of peace. The official pamphlet entitled "The Making of a Man-of-War's Man," issued by the Navy Department, May, 1910, to induce young men to enlist in the Navy, shows that a man may enlist at 18 years of age, spend half his wages, lay up the remainder, and at the age of 48 have savings of $27,486. I quote a paragraph from this official pamphlet:

FINANCIAL BENEFITS OF A LIFE IN THE NAVY.

Regarding financial benefits we will suppose, for example, that a man enlisting at the age of 18, reaches the rank of petty officer by the end of his first enlistment (four years more). Any man can do this if he is willing to work. If he saves half his pay during 30 years, from the age of 18 to 48, and he invests it in the Navy Savings Bank at 4 per cent interest and reenlists immediately on the expiration of each enlistment those 30 years, at the end of that time he will have in cash $27,486, and may retire on three-fourths of his pay, which will be about $105 a month, or $1,260 a year. Thus he will have $27,476 in cash, which he can invest at 4½ per cent, which will bring him in over $1,236 a year. Add this to his retirement pay and you will readily see that he would have $2,496 per year income from the early age of 48 for the balance of his life.

And yet we have great metropolitan journals and magazines claiming to be in a moral and patriotic uplift who utter no word of protest against the six hundred millions a year spent on militarism. But when it is proposed to spend a few thousand dollars on the seared and sorrowed remnant of that great army of veterans of the Civil War these same journals and magazines do not hestitate to denounce the surviving veteran soldiers as grafters, seeking to bankrupt the Federal Treasury. Verily are we not, ethically speaking, on the toboggan slide?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Other instances might be cited showing the vast amount of land rewarded other officers of the Revolution. I will cite only one case, which is perhaps a marked one. Lafayette was first given 11,520 acres of land; afterwards he was given a full township, 36 square miles of land, to be selected by himself, and also $200,000 in gold.

All these vast rewards were in addition to the pension and full pay given to Revolutionary officers, according to their rank, by the Congress of the United States.

Again, 40 years after the Mexican War, we pensioned every soldier who served 60 days in that war, and those who enlisted north of Texas could not reach the Army in Mexico at that time in 60 days. So these soldiers of the Mexican War were pensioned because they were soldiers who enlisted in that war and not because of actual service at the front or any disability whatever.

I invite your careful scrutiny to this bill. No soldier is pensioned without service or without disability and unless he is in destitute circumstances. It is our patriotic duty to care for these grizzled, battle-scarred veterans.

We can not call back from 70 national cemeteries our valiant dead. They are forever beyond recall. But we can do something for the living, who in that terrible four years' war offered their lives in battle to preserve the Republic. Let us see to it that the last sad remnant of that Army, now passing rapidly away, shall have their last days on earth made comfortable and free from biting want. Let us give to the fast-fading remnant of the men who stood behind the guns, who did the hardest work of war, a small token of our sense of gratitude to cheer their worn-out, weary lives. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] desire to occupy any more of his time?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Not now.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the remarks of the distinguished ex-Speaker [Mr. CANNON] this morning he made reference to the location and type of memorial that the Government should erect to Abraham Lincoln.

I do not propose now to discuss what type of memorial would be most fitting for the Government to undertake, but I venture to suggest that if the policy or plan to be adopted is that of a great national highway reaching from one point of the country to another, rather than have it from Washington to Gettysburg, it would be more appropriate to construct it from Washington to Richmond, Va.—Richmond, as the seat of that virile young government that thrived for a season and perished forever, and Washington, as the seat of that Government which has survived and will survive forever [applause]; or, rather still, discard the seat of government altogether, for there is, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] stated, or should be, a higher purpose than the construction of this memorial as the occasion of emphasizing any great project. Appeasing the esthetic taste and love of appropriations is a great Washington project. It is equally true that it should be for a still higher purpose than gratifying the ambitions and desires of many to make it chiefly a factor that goes to make the Capital of the Union the most beautiful and most attractive of all the cities of the world.

I should rather go to Illinois, whence came the immortal Lincoln to assume the Presidency of the Republic in the most crucial period of its existence, and there with enduring arches begin the consecration of the memorial, letting it stretch southward across the plains, from which thousands and tens of thousands of soldiers went forth from their homes, both to the Union and to the Confederate lines, and let it reach to Mississippi, there to connect the home of Abraham Lincoln and the home of Jefferson Davis, the two Presidents of the respective Governments in this great and trying period, both of whom died martyrs for their country's good, as country's good each thought it. Either of these, it seems to me, would be more fitting than the proposition to connect Washington, with its grandeur, with Gettysburg, nigh by, with its memory and record of fratricidal strife and fraternal destruction. The only sound reason that makes the plan to construct a highway to Gettysburg of equal importance with either of the plans that I have suggested—to construct it from Washington to Richmond or from Illinois to Mississippi—is that on one occasion Lincoln repaired to Gettysburg, and there, in a few words and in brief speech, gave deliverance to expression of patriotic thought that, for the time consumed in their utterance, are equaled in no age and in no language yet spoken by man. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we have digressed from the purpose for which we arose to address the House. On January 10, 1913, when the preceding omnibus pension bill was under consideration, I took occasion, without knowing Capt. King, without knowing Commissioner Davenport, to read into the RECORD a letter that Capt. King, past commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, had written, in which letter Capt. King called attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions is now and for several years had been drawing a fair salary of $5,000 a year as such commissioner, and was at the same time, and had been for more than 20 years, drawing a pension as a disabled soldier because of disease contracted during his service in the war. Capt. King also took occasion to say that the Commissioner of Pensions saw no active battle and sustained no injury in his service; that he procured himself to be placed upon the pension roll at a time when he was an employee in connection with and in service of the Pension Bureau. Other remarks were made touching this question. On that occasion, my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY], took occasion, after I had concluded my remarks, to say:

I made it my business to telephone the Pension Commissioner, and he informed me that he endeavored on three occasions to enlist in the Union Army in his native section in New Hampshire, but was rejected because of his youthfulness. He was less than 18 years of age, and in order that he might serve his country, in order that he might assist in keeping this Union whole, he left home, a boy under 18 years of age, and worked his way westward to Wisconsin, and was finally accepted and enlisted in Wisconsin; that he served five months in the Civil War in Mississippi and in Tennessee, and that he participated in the Battle of Memphis, on August 5, 1864.

My colleague said further:

In the light of the testimony of the commissioner himself, who would not dare state an untruth as far as his record is concerned, because it could be easily discovered by an investigation of the records at the War Department, I believe it is not only unjust, but it is unwarranted, it is unfair, and it should be condemned.

I accept the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts as correct. I mean to say by that that the gentleman from Massachusetts undoubtedly correctly and truthfully reported what the Commissioner of Pensions had said to him over the telephone.

If what the Commissioner of Pensions said to the gentleman from Massachusetts is true, then it undoubtedly follows that the statements were unwarranted, unfair, and should be condemned. Any remarks I now make in no way bring into question either the good faith, the accuracy, or the propriety of my colleague's statement just quoted. But I assert again that I assume that, fresh from the telephone, he quoted the commissioner correctly—that is, that Commissioner Davenport told him that he undertook to enlist in his native State three times, and because he was under 18 he was too young and could not; next, that he went westward and finally enlisted and served five months in the Army; next, that in addition to that service in the Army, after it had ended he was in such a condition as to be entitled to a pension; and, further, that during that service he was engaged in the battle at Memphis on the 5th of August, 1864. Mr. Chairman, I lay down the proposition that neither statement is true. I not only lay it down, but I propose in my time here to prove it by the record and incontrovertible fact. On that occasion my friend very properly, as he thought, said:

I can very readily conceive that some joker has been indulging in the very pleasing task of writing letters.

Let me read this letter, Mr. Chairman:

25 WEST MOUNT ROYAL AVENUE,
Baltimore, Md., January 13, 1913.

Hon. JAMES M. CURLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I was interested, if not amused, at your defense of Commissioner Davenport, Friday last, in the House.

Mr. Davenport informed you over the telephone that he was less than 18 years of age when he enlisted (presumably in the summer of 1864), and the "fairy" tale that he had made three attempts to do so in New Hampshire and was obliged to make his way to far Wisconsin before he succeeded.

About a year ago four ex-Union soldiers were at lunch together—Davenport and the writer were of the number. The question of age came up, and it was disclosed that all of us were born in 1845. I was the youngest of the four, being some two or three months Davenport's junior (he likes to repeat this incident). Now, Davenport claims to have enlisted in the summer of 1864; 1845 from 1864 leaves 19 plus 6 months—nearly 20 years instead of less than 18. Has Mr. Davenport told you the truth? I was born June 24, 1845, and on the 15th day of August, 1862, was mustered into the service of the United States in Company H, Sixth Regiment Maryland Volunteers; served until the close of the war (2 years 10 months); wounded three times, used crutches for nearly 12 months after the war, and had the honor of commanding my company in the Wilderness campaign. Again, Mr. Davenport told you in that telephonic conversation that he served 5 months and was in the Battle of Memphis, August 5, 1864. As my entire service was in the Army of the Potomac, in the famous Sixth Corps (Keifer's brigade), I am not very familiar with the battles fought in the Southwest. As I had never heard of the Battle of Memphis, August 5, 1864, I have looked through Strait's Alphabetical List of Battles, 1754 to 1900, and it fails to disclose any such engagement. This book is accepted as authentic in the Pension Bureau. Now, Mr. CURLEY, did Mr. Davenport tell you the truth? You can verify his statement by a call on the Adjutant General of the Army for his record and of the Battle of Memphis. If there was such a battle, it must have been disastrous to this gallant soldier, who was so anxious to "keep the Union whole," as 21 years thereafter, while holding a position in the Pension Bureau, had himself placed on the pension rolls at $16 per month for "chronic diarrhea," and under the law that wasting disease must still be present or be dropped from the rolls. Does he look it?

I have on my desk a late photograph of the Commissioner of Pensions, and he does not look it. Capt. King goes on to say:

I have served several years on the Grand Army of the Republic national pension committee, have always urged the most liberal pensions for my comrades who deserved them, but have never favored those "chocolate" soldiers who never saw the front or felt the shock of battle. We read in Holy Writ that those who went into the vineyard at the eleventh hour received the same pay, but nowhere do we read in that sacred volume that they received more than those who bore the whole heat and burden of the day.

Now, Mr. CURLEY, it was not a "joker" who wrote to Mr. RODDENBERY. I pride myself on having been a real soldier, and you are at liberty, and I court the inquiry, to call on The Adjutant General of the Army for my record, or to my dear old commander, Gen. J. Warren Keifer.

Respectfully, yours, JOHN R. KING.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague said that it would be easy to obtain from the War Department the military record of the Commissioner of Pensions, and that the Commissioner of Pensions would not dare misstate it. I read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1913.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Care of War Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Please cause to be forwarded to me the military record of James L. Davenport as a private in Company B, Fortieth Wisconsin Regiment, 1864–65.

Yours, truly, S. A. RODDENBERY.

This is the reply from The Adjutant General's Office:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1913.

Hon. S. A. RODDENBERY,
House of Representatives:

The records show that James L. Davenport was enrolled May 23, 1864, at Beloit, Wis., and was mustered into service June 7, 1864, as a private of Company B, Fortieth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, to serve 100 days, and that he was mustered out with the company as a private September 20, 1864, to date September 16, 1864.

GEO. ANDREWS, Adjutant General.

So the record of the department shows that the distinguished Commissioner of Pensions served less than three months and a half in this great war and that his arduous sacrifices and services nowhere approximated five months. I also addressed a communication to the Surgeon General of the Army, which was referred to The Adjutant General, under the same date, as to Mr. Davenport's confinement in hospital from disease or injury. The reply is:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
January 16, 1913.

Hon. S. A. RODDENBERY,
House of Representatives:

Inviting attention to the letter addressed to him to-day by this office, from which it will be seen that nothing has been found in the hospital records to show that the said Davenport was wounded or received any injury while in service, or that he was under treatment in hospital for any disability while a member of the regiment mentioned.

GEO. ANDREWS,
The Adjutant General.

Gentlemen, the record is speaking for itself. This is no telephone conversation. The correctness and truth of the commissioner's telephone statements are not supported by the official record. But I proceed.

Capt. King referred to Strait's Alphabetical List of Battles. So that the record may be complete, I supplement him by saying that on page 85 of that volume it shows what transpired in the nature of battles, engagements, sieges, or skirmishes at or near Memphis, and nowhere does it appear that any battle, engagement, or skirmish took place at any time during the war at Memphis on August 5 or thereabouts, so the commissioner who gave his record over the telephone fought in a battle of which nobody has a record except himself. Either Davenport is wrong or the war records are falsified. The record is speaking now, not the Commissioner of Pensions. His enlistment in the Fortieth Wisconsin Regiment—I read from Love, Wisconsin in the Rebellion, "Roster of Union Soldiers," not only recognized as an authority but accepted as such by the Pension Department, and it so appears in the volume quoted and it so appears in the records of the Pension Bureau; not only that, but it appears in the preface of Strait's Alphabetical List of Battles that the Commissioner of Pensions then accepted and now accepts it as authentic record of the battles. From this authority, "the men of the Fortieth Wisconsin were principally students of the Wisconsin colleges and seminaries and members of the several professions." That is evident from the fact that when the college term was out the latter part of May these young men, patriotic and valiant, engaged for 100 days in the war, and for perhaps longer if occasion should require. They enlisted, went forward to Tennessee, and there served, returning to their State and their colleges in ample time for the fall term. The Commissioner of Pensions seems to have abandoned his business of soldier-broker long enough then and thereafter to go to Tennessee with the college boys. The record from the official roster, on page 858 et sequentia, says that but three soldiers in the entire regiment received a wound of any kind, and that no soldier, officer or private, of Commissioner Davenport's company received an injury of any kind.

It further appears on page 1119 of the roster that the entire Fortieth Wisconsin Regiment, composed of 776 privates, mostly college boys, was mustered out in Wisconsin, where they enlisted, and that when the roll was called every soldier, every boy who went forward with the regiment, answered present except 13. The names of the 13 who did not answer present are there recorded. Every one of them is reported to have died from disease, and of the company in which the Commissioner of Pensions was a member only two are reported to have been fatally afflicted with disease of any kind, and no record in the War Department that the Commissioner made a charge upon the hospital. That is the Wisconsin regiment in which he served, and because of which service for nearly 30 years while he has served as an employee of the Pension Department he has been drawing $16 a month, when these old veterans that Gen. Sherwood was talking about were receiving $8, $10, and $12, although they fought where lives of men were swallowed up by blood and death.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman has stated heretofore that there are several ex-soldiers who are drawing pensions and who are receiving high salaries from the Government at the same time. Why does not he give some more of those cases instead of confining all of his remarks and criticisms to Commissioner Davenport, who happens to be a Republican official?

If he desires to be fair and impartial and to help correct what he regards as an abuse, why does he not refer to the cases of some Democratic officials as well? Why not give the cases of some others, like that of Gen. Black, for instance, who, to my knowledge, has been drawing a pension of $100 a month for nearly 30 years on the theory that he is and has been all along a physical wreck, and yet nearly all of that time he has been serving the Government in some capacity or other, and has received much more salary and pension, too, than Commissioner Davenport has? He has been a Member of Congress. He was Commissioner of Pensions for a number of years and is now president of the Civil Service Commission, and has been a member of the commission for many years. I have no objection to all this. Gen. Black was a distinguished soldier and has been a faithful public official. I am his personal friend, and am not seeking to criticize him, but why does not the gentleman refer to some of these other cases instead of continually hammering at Commissioner Davenport and talking about him getting a fat salary and drawing a pension at the same time, just as if that is a crime and he the only man who ever committed it?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I am glad the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has again called attention to Gen. Black, and it is very appropriate in this connection; but if my friend will read the RECORD, and I am sure he usually does, he will find that my colleague [Mr. TRIBBLE] drew attention on the floor to Gen. Black's pension, and not only stated his salary, but the whole amount he has drawn in pensions and the whole amount he has drawn in his respective high public offices. The reason I call attention to Commissioner Davenport now is that I received a letter from Past Commander in Chief John R. King, giving me facts which I would not otherwise have known and which should be brought to the attention of the House. I immediately verified them and presented them to the House. Then the correctness of the statements were brought into question by Commissioner Davenport in conversation over the phone with my colleague [Mr. CURLEY], who accurately and correctly repeated on the floor what the commissioner said; that is, that he served five months; and I have proved by the War Department and the war records that he did not.

He stated that he was in the Battle of Memphis on August 5, 1864, and I have proved by the War Department records that he was not. In fact, have shown there was no such battle; that he tried to enlist and could not because he was under 18 years of age; and I have proved by the record, and now prove by his own autobiography in Who's Who in America that he was born on January 27, 1845, and that he could have entered nearly two years before he did and been clear of the age that he gave to my friend Mr. CURLEY.

I will also call attention to facts that seem appropriate when we are about to consider this commissioner's sad disappointment at not being able to break into the Army. On the first page of the bill we are now considering, on the first page of the report, and the first bill in the report, and the first item in the bill, is a paragraph authorizing a pension for a soldier who enlisted in the Union Army when he was 15 years old. Was this young American more diligent than the distinguished Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Did the gentleman notice the second page, where the pensioner was only 13 years of age when he enlisted?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I thank the gentleman. Yes; just 13 years of age, and, lo and behold, he comes from Wisconsin, the State in which the commissioner enlisted.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will be glad to yield later, but let me finish just now. I turn to page 11 of the report and find that a young lad from Illinois, according to this report, enlisted in the Army at the age of 13 and rendered service on the battle field. What was the reason Commissioner Davenport could not get in at 16, 17, or 18 years of age?

In the same report, on page 15, we find young Hughey, of Ohio, who enlisted and served at the age of 14. What was the matter over in New Hampshire, that the Commissioner of Pensions could not get in after three futile efforts? Why, my God, if he had been as expeditious in getting into the war as he was in getting onto the pension roll, John C. Black and old Gen. SHERWOOD would be pigmies in battle by the side of him. [Applause.]

Turn to page 21 of the record and there you find another Ohio lad who, according to the record, was accepted and enlisted in the Army at 13 years of age. Where was the commissioner then? This young Ohio man was younger than the Commissioner of Pensions.

We find again, on page 32, out in Wisconsin, where the gentleman finally broke in to save the country, a lad who at 16 years of age enlisted and participated in the service of his country. We turn to page 54 and find that Bradley W. Hill, now 67 years old, entered the service at the age of 16. And, gentlemen, does it not astound you that this soldier enlisted in New Hampshire, where the Commissioner of Pensions made three fatal and futile efforts to enlist? So he says. I wonder what they had against him.

On page 57 of the record we find that Charles D. Jones, now 65, enlisted in the Army at 16 years of age; and, behold, this lad also was from New Hampshire. Where was the commissioner? He was over 18 years old at that time. But he contented himself by trying to explain to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] how he strove in New Hampshire to get into the Army and crossed the American Continent to the State of Wisconsin in order that he might do service to save the Republic and get upon the pension roll. [Laughter.]

On page 86 we find a 16-year-old lad from Wisconsin gets upon the fighting roll. We find on page 98 another 16-year-old lad; on page 100 another 14-year-old lad. We find on page 119, also from Wisconsin, a 16-year-old lad. But Commissioner Davenport, whose record, being questioned upon the floor of the House, sends by telephone from his luxurious office in the Pension Building, where he is drawing now $5,000 a year from the people's Treasury, a demonstrated false statement in the despefate effort to exculpate himself from the charge made by his old comrade, Capt. King, saying over the phone to my colleague, "Tell the Congress I would have got there quicker but I was too young and they would not take me." Was he of sound mind and was he of fighting disposition? I can not tell you.

On page 121 another lad of 15 was able to get into the Army, and so on all through the report. On page 138 we find young Thurston at 17 years enlists and is accepted in the State of New Hampshire. He is four years younger than Davenport, but he went out to fight—not for a pension but for his country. I call your attention to it because my friend says that he knows the Commissioner of Pensions would not make a statement that was not correct, because the records would show it, and we have resorted to authentic sources and produced the records. They show what the facts are. Let Members now judge this man. What an incident, that Commissioner Davenport was the only 16 or 17 year old boy who could not enlist in New Hampshire.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia if Capt. King, whose name has been used here, or whose statement was used in this House to make an assault upon the worthy and efficient Commissioner of Pensions, is the same Capt. King who was pension agent in the city of Washington before the consolidation of the pension agencies?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Lately?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not know. Gen. SHERWOOD can tell you.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that his pension was granted and increased while holding the office of pension agent in this city, and that his fight on the Commissioner of Pensions grows out of the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions declined or refused to place him in the office of disbursing agent after the consolidation of the pension agencies?

Mr. RODDENBERY. So far as I know, it may be entirely true, and, again, so far as I know, it may be entirely incorrect.

Mr. AUSTIN. How long has he been pension agent—this man who now uses his position in the public service to assault his superior officer, a man of such splendid efficiency as Commissioner Davenport?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not know that Capt. King is now in the service. I do not know that he ever has been in the service; but I do know that according to his card he is past commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States. I do know that according to his card he was a member of the Sixth Missouri Volunteers; that he is past commander of the Department of Maryland; that he is District of Columbia commander of the Loyal Legion; that he is president of the Grand Army Club of Maryland. I do know that according to the records of the War Department this lad entered the war at about 17; that he stayed with it 2 years and 10 months; that he was in Gen. Keifer's brigade; that in the terrific Battle of the Wilderness, where America met America, he commanded his company; that when he came out of the war he had left flesh, blood, muscle, and bone on the field where he did battle for his country; and I know that for years he drew $10 a month in this infirm condition when the Commissioner of Pensions was drawing $16 a month, and never stumped his toe or had the colic, so far as his military or hospital record shows. If Capt. King is not getting a liberal, fair pension, he ought to have it, and if Davenport is getting any it is a fraud on the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman from Georgia know that Capt. King made a personal appeal to the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Davenport, to have his pension increased beyond what the evidence in the case warranted, and that Mr. Davenport declined to increase it, and that that is probably the beginning of the animus he has displayed in this matter, and that it was probably aggravated later on when he blamed Mr. Davenport for not getting a place he wanted?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I do not know.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, I do. I have been so informed, and, I think, reliably.

Mr. RODDENBERY. But before I have finished I will show you that applicants and influences have appealed to Mr. Davenport for pensions contrary to law, contrary to the findings of the examiners, and that he has granted them in the face of both the law and the facts.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is a pretty serious charge, and it should be sustained or withdrawn.

Mr. RODDENBERRY. I will show it, and don't you doubt it. In further answer to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] in this connection, he says Mr. Davenport is a faithful, valiant, and efficient Commissioner of Pensions. I will make direct reference to it presently.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Capt. King calls attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions, while drawing a large salary, secured a pension.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Capt. King himself, while drawing a large salary as pension agent in this city, had his pension increased, and, I understand, then became displeased with the Commissioner of Pensions because he would not give him a further increase and would not recommend or appoint him disbursing clerk.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Yes; and Capt. King was entitled to his and Davenport was not, and I will prove both those statements. When Capt. King walks along the street you can see him limp, and if you will lift his trousers, you will see where braces of steel, knit around his muscles, strengthen his wounded limbs, where the bullets of the enemy tore away his bones to rot on the field of battle. Davenport is drawing a pension on the ground of chronic diarrhea that renders him permanently disabled for physical labor, and yet day after day he goes to the Pension Office, and at high functions he revels, in spite of his wasting disease, and cuts fantastic steps in "turkey-trot society." [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. RODDENBERY. In a moment. If my friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] would call on Commissioner Davenport at the Pension Office some day about 1 or 2 o'clock, when he has returned from luncheon, I have no doubt the commissioner would recognize him; but if the gentleman from Tennessee, who habitually fashions his attire in the humble style which is characteristic of the country people, should see Davenport riding along in his limousine, with a silk plug hat on as high as a churn, and with a long-tailed coat that puts to shame the plumage of a peafowl, and with studs that sparkle like the eyes of a toad, the commissioner would know him not. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. As I remember the gentleman from Georgia has stood on the floor and criticized Government officials for drawing large salaries and at the same time drawing and enjoying a pension. In the King case, where he was pension agent in Washington City and drawing a salary of $4,000 a year, the gentleman from Georgia says he is not only entitled to a pension but entitled to have the pension increased. I thought the gentleman from Georgia was consistent and I thought he was sincere in opposing Government officials drawing high salaries and pensions at the same time. Now he indorses that theory himself in King's case.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in principle, there is nothing in policy, there is nothing in any statement ever made by me on a pension policy that will justify the conclusion that a soldier who draws a pension because he has lost his arm, because he has lost a segment of his limb, caused by actual wounds or injuries sustained in the service, that on that ground he is not entitled to a pension. There is nothing to bar him from obtaining the salary, the highest in the Republic, and drawing his pension at the same time; because the pension he is drawing for the wounds received or the injuries he sustained in a measure compensates his loss, and the salary he draws from the Government is for the service rendered to the Government.

But there is a principle and policy in my utterance, which I now reassert. I announce that a soldier who draws a pension from the Government on the ground that he is suffering from disease—chronic, incurable—which physically and totally disables him from service to the Government, lives a lie when he draws his pension and at the same time does full time in the employ of the Government. A soldier draws a pension because he is totally incapacitated from incurable disease; if that be true and he at the same time draws a salary from the Government, he is getting the salary for which he can not render service, because the rendition of service and incapacity to serve are paradoxical and inexplicably contradictory. It can not be.

If it is true that the Commissioner of Pensions is drawing a pension since 1886, obtained on the ground that he contracted a chronic disease that permanently and totally and physically disables and incapacitates him for labor, and therefore he was entitled to a pension, one of two things is true, either he obtained his pension on false grounds or he is drawing a salary in the perpetration of a fraud on the Government, because the propositions are absolutely irreconcilable and incompatible. He who works for the Government and earns a salary of $5,000 can not at the same time be entitled to draw $16 a month pension on the ground of incapacity and permanent disability from wasting, chronic, and incurable disease.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I will.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman believes in a pension under certain circumstances, or I so understand from his remarks?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Proceed.

Mr. BATES. Has the gentleman appeared before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or any of its subcommittees, or attended the hearings, as a result of which they have reported this bill to the House carrying increase of pensions? In other words, I have listened to some strictures on the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I ask the gentleman how that is involved in this bill when this bill is a report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions carrying increases, and in a few instances original pensions, but all reflecting the judgment, not of the Commissioner of Pensions, but of a committee of this House, the gentleman's colleagues, sitting in their capacity as a committee to make up their reports from the testimony that is adduced before them as any other committee of this House is bound to do? Has the gentleman attended and asked to be heard on any single case that is provided for in this report or bill?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Before answering the gentleman I will say this, that if his question was inspired and was incorporated in the Bible we would have to correct the catechism which teaches the Sunday school children where the longest verse of the Scripture appears.

Mr. BATES. No; I asked the question in a spirit of fairness.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The remarks I am making have nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. BATES. Have your criticisms of Mr. Davenport anything to do with this bill?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Not a thing; I am directing these remarks at the conduct of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman is not confining his remarks to the bill under discussion, as the rules require.

Mr. RODDENBERY. My remarks deal with Commissioner Davenport drawing $5,000 a year salary for hard labor, who is at the same time drawing $16 a month pension obtained on the ground that he is not able to work at all. That is the proposition. He either is not qualified for a pension or not qualified for the office. He may be wanting in both. He can not be entitled to the two.

I want to say to the gentlemen you have now before you the war record of Mr. Davenport. Gentlemen have suggested that I am attacking Mr. Davenport. What I say is based on the writings of his comrades, on the records of the War Department, on his autobiography, on the records of the Wisconsin regiments, in one of which he served, on the authentic record of the battles of the country, on documents now pending before the House. I say to you, gentlemen, do not answer here by crying that it is a shame and an outrage for a Member to stand on the floor and assail a faithful servant. Go down yonder to the Pension Office, by telephone or otherwise, and bring to the floor of this House the application of the commissioner for his pension, the examiner's testimony as to his abilities and disabilities, the evidence of the witnesses upon which he drew the pension, the statement of the surgeons that passed him, and let the Congress see, and, if general debate is still in progress, it will leave here full of holes faster than some of the spectators from the city of Washington left the hill down here in the early days of the war when they went forward to see it ended in a few minutes. Bring in the commissioner's record. He is getting a pension. He is not denying that. He had to get out papers to get the pension on. Bring them in here. I do not command them.

I have given you the War Department's record showing that he never participated in any fighting, and that he did not serve for five months. I have given you the Surgeon General's statement that there is no record of his illness. I give you the record of the regiment, which shows that he was not reported as sick. I have shown you that thousands of 16 and 17 year old boys got into the Army. Let sensible men say whether he could have done so if he had tried. Why was it that the commissioner, in 1864, when 19 years old, when there was more than one year of the war and six months of terrible fighting left—why is it that he went back to Wisconsin with the soldier college boys and did not stay down about Memphis, where in a few weeks afterwards there was bloody battle? The commissioner told my colleague that he tried to get in and on account of extreme youth they would not admit him, that finally he went to Wisconsin and was accepted, and that he served his country. The record shows he went where the fighting was, but when the schoolboys' vacation was over in the fall of 1864 he went back to Wisconsin with them. Why did not he enlist with some of the other depleted companies around Memphis when the siege was there, when the great batteries of the respective sides were in action, when a few weeks later a terrific and bloody fight took place? If the commissioner was too young in New Hampshire, he was not too young at Memphis and in Tennessee to be taken in. Why, Mr. Chairman, his own statement of inability to enlist stamps him as a fraud and an imposter on the pension rolls of the country. I make the statement upon the record. I did not say that he tried to get in and that he could not. He said that. I now say that if he wanted to get in in 1864, instead of going back and being mustered out, and rushing back to New Hampshire and later on to Washington for a pension, he could have gone to the front. Thousands of men perished between September, 1864, and June, 1865. Where was the Commissioner of Pensions in his yearning desire to fight for his country then?

But I made some promises to my friends just now. Under the rules of the House there are certain committees. One of those committees is the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department. The rule says that committee shall inquire into the honesty, the justness, and the legality of the expenditures made in the Interior Department. The Pension Bureau is under the Interior Department. The Interior Department expends money. The pension laws of the country are statutes. They are carried into execution by appropriations. I will ask for the benefit of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department convene his committee, summon witnesses, and make inquiry into the Interior Department and find out whether or not one pensioner, who draws a pension on certificate No. 1088170, did not take an examination under the law of 1890, and if he was not turned down by the examining board because his case was not meritorious. Then let them ascertain if a little later he was not again on application examined and turned down for the same reason. Then inquire if again he was not examined for the same case and turned down the third time in the Pension Department and by the examiners.

If the records of the Commissioner of Pensions do show that, then let this Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department find out if about November, 1911, when it looked as though Mr. Roosevelt was going to take the Republican nomination away from Mr. Taft, and when everyone, from Taft's first lieutenant, the Postmaster General, down to the private in the Pension Department, was trembling lest Roosevelt might grab the nomination and sweep the country and plunge them out of office—find out if about that time Mr. Roosevelt did not address to Mr. Davenport a communication and tell him to reopen that particular claim, reinvestigate it, and allow it. Then find out if it was not reopened—I could not tell you about its being reinvestigated—and see if the packet on which the pension is entered, if it is not destroyed, will not show that immediately in reply the Commissioner of Pensions wrote to Mr. Roosevelt that he would at once order it reopened and have the pensioner allowed his pension. Finally, ascertain if he did not get a back pension, including a future pension, under the act of 1890, after having been rejected three times nearly seven years before.

Then see if in fact it was not so allowed and if he did not get more than $500 back pension, and if that pension was not granted without new evidence, without new showing in any way different from what appears in the three hearings in which he was turned down. Now, gentlemen, if you want to find out whether or not Davenport is a faithful servant let your Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department make an inquiry and ascertain. I make the statement on the floor. It will not take any appropriation nor a resolution for a special commission to make the inquiry. Under the rules you can do it now. I suggest for the benefit of my friends of the committee that they can go further. Under the law we passed last summer appropriation and provision was made that extra clerks might be obtained by the Commissioner of Pensions, appointed and paid for the purpose of expediting the auditing, approval, and payment of the pensions to the old soldiers under the Sherwood law. Now, the Constitution, if I remember it rightly, states that no person convicted of a felony or high crimes or crimes involving moral turpitude, or words to that effect, shall hereafter enjoy or receive an office of trust or emolument from the Government. There is some such provision in the Constitution.

Let the Committee on Expenditures inquire if since we passed that law an applicant has not been appointed to one of these positions; also if the appointee had not been convicted of embezzling and defrauding the Government, served his sentence, and completed it. Further, ascertain if, with the stigma of the offense and the inhibition of the Constitution upon him, the Commissioner of Pensions has not as a personal appointment placed him in office on the pay roll and in the service, and if he is not on the pay roll now, when did they fire him and why? See how the Commissioner of Pensions will show up. Gentlemen, I am not through yet. Go to the telephone and answer now. Let the Committee on Expenditures investigate it. I give you the facts sufficient to base it upon, and, gentlemen, as the days go by we shall present some others. We have called attention to this matter at this time for reasons that have been already stated. No man is further than I from casting obliquy upon a man who does not deserve it. No man has greater antipathy and less respect for that reckless creature who will make a common traffic of another's conduct and without justification hold it up to public gaze. He who does it without cause, he who dares it without justification, will justly merit the execration and scorn of his fellows and of his countrymen. But he who points out corruption or malfeasance and does it justly has, in some measure, rendered a service to decency and done something toward promoting the virtues of honesty and integrity, both in public and private position. On what the outcome, judged by these standards, will be, without fear of the result of the issue, I now take my stand. The fittest will survive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know that. The Chair misunderstands me. I am asking the gentleman from Wisconsin to——

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I yield the gentleman a minute.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] yields to me for the purpose of making a request to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including, among other matters, a copy of a letter of an ex-commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, bearing on the subject matter that the gentleman from Georgia has been discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the inclusion of the letter which he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the letter is. I could not hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. LANGLEY. The letter is from Ex-Commander in Chief Torrance, of the Grand Army of the Republic, addressed to Capt. King. The gentleman from Massachusetts is familiar——

Mr. MURRAY. What is it? Let us hear it. Will not the gentleman read it or have it read?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will send it to the Clerk's desk to be read in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Kentucky; and if so, how much time?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to have read at the Clerk's desk the letter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. Being entitled to the floor for three minutes, I could, of course, have it read in my own time without unanimous consent, but it does not matter, so I get it read. I have no prejudice whatever against Capt. King, nor have I the slightest desire to injure him in any way. On the contrary, I have been his friend for many years, and I admire his excellent military record. But the gentleman from Georgia has quoted him repeatedly and seems to rely upon him as his chief witness. Therefore, in justice to all concerned, I think this letter from one of his distinguished comrades, himself an ex-commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, should go in the RECORD in connection with this debate, since it bears upon the credibility of the witness, so to speak. I therefore ask that it be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 14, 1913.

Comrade JOHN R. KING, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR: I have just read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the debate in the House of Representatives last Friday, when the pension bill (H. R. 27475) was under consideration, and was astonished beyond measure to read your letter of the 2d instant to Mr. RODDENBERY.

Knowing, as I do, your long, intimate, and confidential relations with Commissioner Davenport and your oft-professed friendship for him and your frequent tributes to his worth and good qualities, I can not conceive of any honest or manly justification for your discreditable treatment of him, and I feel that you have forfeited the confidence and respect of every decent comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Not content with besmirching your own friend to the limit, your perpetual egotism had to assert itself in contrasting your own military record with that of Comrade Davenport. I am not a special friend of Davenport, but I have always regarded him as a gentleman, and I would a thousand times prefer his record to yours, with the spirit you possess. I do not care what provocation you may have had for writing such a letter, but I will guarantee that you will soon be able to count your friends on your two thumbs.

Yours, truly,

ELL TORRANCE.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the letter that it is not in order for any person to read into the RECORD a derogatory article on an old soldier of the Union who for over two years fought for his country and left his limbs on the battlefield——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman is overruled.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of placing in the RECORD a great number of letters and extracts from letters of eminent and well-known men, and also extracts from editorials in newspapers and magazines and other periodicals regarding the exemption of American vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States from Panama Canal tolls:

[From Hon. George F. Edmunds, formerly United States Senator from Vermont.]

941 SOUTH ORANGE GROVE AVENUE,
Pasadena, Cal., January 6, 1913.

ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON, Esq.,
The Century, 33 East Seventeenth Street, New York.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have received your note of inquiry upon the subject, and have no hesitation in saying that I think the so-called Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from payment of tolls in passing the canal ought to be immediately repealed: First, because I believe that both the language and spirit of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty compel us to subject our own coastwise vessels to the same tolls established for the commerce of all other nations making use of the canal. Such equality was, as everybody knows, the consideration made to Great Britain for her releasing us from the supposed obligations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850. Although I am sure from the careful examination by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations when the treaty made by President Arthur with the Republic of Nicaragua was under consideration that the United States was no longer bound by the stipulations of the treaty of 1850 and our engagement not to build a canal through the Isthmus had become entirely inoperative, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was made in language so clear for universal equality that it is impossible to successfully construe it in any other way. If we have made a bad bargain we are bound by every consideration, as well of expediency as of justice, to stand by it; second, if as a matter of expediency alone we withdraw the favor proposed to our own constwise commerce, although we might have the right to grant it, the way will be left open to deal with the subject in future in such a way as the public interest should require.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

THE "COASTWISE EXEMPTION."

I. OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

[Clarence Poe, president and editor the Progressive Farmer and Southern Farm Gazette, Birmingham, Ala.; Raleigh, N. C.; and Memphis, Tenn.]

The repeal of the constwise exemption in the Panama bill, I think, is the best way out of a blunder that has already damaged our reputation throughout the rest of the world.

[William H. Robson, publisher the Indianapolis Trade Journal.]

I have always considered the passing of the bill exempting the constwise trade of the United States from paying tolls as a most unnecessary and altogether shameful action.

[Clinton B. Evans, editor the Economist, Chicago.]

Irrespective of any obligation under the treaty, we should require the payment of tolls by American vessels simply out of self-respect and to show that we are not disposed to take any advantage of other nations, even if we have the power to do so.

[Editor of the Evening Herald, Norwalk, Ohio.]

While the Herald has not expressed itself editorially so far, I can say that personally I am very much in favor of the United States obeying to the letter a treaty that seems to have been made in good faith and with the eyes of our representatives wide open.

[F. Arford, editor Western Trade Journal, Chicago.]

The Western Trade Journal has from the first been opposed to the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill and is doing everything within its power to bring about the repeal of this section.

[Saginaw (Mich.) Daily News.]

We have no right to grant preferences to our shipping in the use of the canal. The obligation of good faith carried in this treaty provision is of greater international consequence to the United States than all the benefits it might possibly reap by violating it.

[Levi M. Wise, Butler (Pa.) Eagle.]

We can not afford to trifle with this matter, and we must carry out the agreement as it was understood by the parties to it. Otherwise we will suffer national disgrace.

[Richard W. Knott, editor Evening Post, Louisville, Ky.]

Trusting to a return of reason—not to the people, but to Congress, that has been misrepresenting the people.

[William Barnes, jr., editor Albany Evening Journal.]

I heartily favor the repeal by Congress of the coastwise exemption provision in the Panama Canal bill. There should not be the slightest confusion in the mind of anyone on this proposition.

[George T. Lincoln, editor Banker and Tradesman, Boston.]

I am in favor of the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. I do not see how any Senator or Representative can vote to retain on our statute books a law which they are afraid to submit to arbitration.

[J. L. Doyle, editor New Britain Record.]

No man or company should be given the use of the canal free.

[Lafayette Young, publisher the Des Moines Capital, Des Moines, Iowa.]

I think every vessel, regardless of ownership, should pay the same rate for going through the Panama Canal. There should be no favoritism.

[The Independent, New York, N. Y.]

The act of August 24, 1912, contained the clause: "No tolls shall be levied upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States."

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty, ratified by the Senate December 16, 1901, contains this clause: "The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and war of all nations on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions of traffic or otherwise."

Can even a Philadelphia lawyer make these two clauses agree? No wonder Great Britain protests. We protested when Canada attempted to rebate a part of the tolls on Canadian freight through the Welland Canal, and Canada conceded the point.

[A. S. Johnston, editor and publisher the Monroe Watchman, Union, W. Va.]

I favor the repeal of this provision, primarily because it is, in its present form, a violation of the plighted faith of this country as proclaimed in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Norris G. Osborn, editor Morning Journal-Courier, New Haven, Conn.]

I think it—the Panama Canal bill—is a monstrous evasion, if not violation, of the Nation's honor. I did all in my power to defeat its passage and should welcome any movement that would promise its undoing.

[Merchant and Manufacturer, Nashville, Tenn.]

The Government must set an example to its citizens. If it breaks faith with other countries, as it unequivocally does when it gives preference to our coastwise vessels in canal rates, it tends to vitiate and weaken public standards of conduct everywhere.

The necessity for the repeal of the coastwise vessel preferential rates provision by Congress is so urgent that extensive argument favoring it is not needed.

[Maurice L. Muhleman, The Banking Law Journal, New York.]

Your circular letter on the subject of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama Canal bill was duly received.

The Banking Law Journal confines itself to subjects which do not include the matter.

The writer desires, however, to express his personal views. The clause in the bill exempting coastwise trade from tolls is not only in contravention of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, but also in conflict with the treaty under which we obtained title to the Panama Zone.

[Utica Daily Press, Utica, N. Y.]

The United States can not afford to take the position before the world that it does not intend to observe every last letter of its agreement. A business man who does not keep his word is lightly thought of and the same is true of any government.

[Worcester Evening Post, Worcester, Mass.]

Can it be possible that this [arbitration of the canal-toll question] will be refused?

Certainly this question of subsidy to a special interest does not come within the excepted cases, and there is nothing in good faith for our Government to do except to comply with Great Britain's proposal.

[Virginian-Pilot, Norfolk, Va.]

The national honor is, of course, the most important consideration involved in connection with the proposal to repeal the provision of the Panama Canal act granting exemption from tolls to American bottoms engaged in the intercoastal trade. There are material reasons of a compelling nature why Congress should be prompt to undo the mistake committed in the enactment of the provision in question.

[Utica Herald-Dispatch and Daily Gazette.]

To exempt coastwise vessels from payment of tolls will be simply to lay so much greater a burden on other shipping and on the Nation.

Particularly, it will be to impose heavy tolls upon our foreign commerce, which can ill afford them, for the sake of remitting tolls upon coastwise commerce, which can well afford them. Seeing also that our right to remit tolls on our shipping is seriously challenged by another nation under our treaty relations, it may well be asked if it is wise to raise such an issue of right for the sake of doing something which is neither necessary nor expedient.

[Every Evening, Wilmington, Del.]

It is certain the British minister has made out a good case against this country, on account of the gross violation of treaty faith involved in the discrimination of free use of the canal for vessels of the United States engaged in the coastwise trade.

We are wrong in two very important respects—in violating a treaty obligation by unfair discrimination and in imposing a financial burden upon our people thereby. The sooner we retrace our steps and get back to the solid ground of fair and square dealing the better it will be.

[The Gazette-Times, Pittsburgh, Pa.]

Great Britain's formal protest against exemption of American coastwise shipping from tolls for passing through the Panama Canal is a comprehensive and temperate statement, exhaustive in its analysis. There ought to be no hesitancy or delay on the part of our Government in opening negotiations either for adjustment of differences by mutual agreement or their reference for settlement by arbitration.

[Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.]

The suggestion that the ships of the United States are exempt from that provision (of equality under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty) because we built the canal must be regarded as little short of puerile.

[Robert Adams Suffern (Suffern's Quarterly).]

I am very strongly opposed to the present bill, and hope that the objectionable matter will be repealed.

[Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Mass.]

A just interpretation of the clause must finally be reached. Nations no more than individuals may profitably stand upon technicalities when common honesty is the main question.

[The Sioux City Journal, Sioux City, Iowa.]

The remission of tolls on American coastwise traffic through the Panama Canal amounts to subsidy where subsidy is not needed, and can not be justified.

[St. Joseph Gazette, St. Joseph, Mo.]

We base opposition to free passage for American coasters upon the fact that that privilege would be a gift of $1.30 to them for every ton of freight they carried, it being a proven fact that they now pay $4 a ton for having their freight railroaded across the Isthmus.

This subject deserves considerable space and honest reasoning, because it is liable to involve us in bitter controversy and serious trouble with perhaps more nations than Great Britain.

[The Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S. Dak.]

No country is so great that it can afford to break its treaties, and certainly a great Republic like the United States, which has done more for the cause of arbitration than any other country in the world, can not refuse to submit a business question, involving the construction of a treaty, to arbitration.

[The Daily News, Chicago, Ill.]

The sooner Congress undertakes to revise the Panama Canal toll act and eliminate certain of its provisions, that ought never to have been incorporated in that measure, the better it will be for all concerned.

[Boston Globe, Boston, Mass.]

If the United States should offer to adopt measures providing that the Federal Treasury would regularly transfer to the canal account an amount sufficient to make up for the loss of tolls on the coastwise trade the main point in the British note would be met.

[Evening Post, Louisville, Ky.]

Keep the letter and spirit of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty; keep open the canal on equal terms to the whole world.

Then, if you will, gentlemen of the predatory callings, exact your blood money of the American consumer and producers alike.

[The Baltimore News, Baltimore, Md.]

Without regard to other features of the case, a good many people will feel less regret about the disagreement over the treaty if the result is to make us pause in a hastily arranged plan to tap the public till for the benefit of the owners of coastwise vessels.

[The Dispatch, Pittsburgh, Pa.]

The United States has therefore, in the term of a single Congress, been brought down from its high position as the leader in establishing fair and honest arbitration to the position of the one that repudiates that advanced and beneficial principle rather than let its own pet jobs be inquired into. And the grim irony of the case is heightened by the fact that it is done to support a favor to the interest which least of all needs any such favor.

The greatest offense is against the United States, since it takes from a project that can not be self-sustaining for years a part of its proper revenue to give to an interest that has no claim either of justice or need. But it is a rank discredit to the United States that in that domestic job it took the pains to advertise to the world that when the whim takes it to carry out such a job treaty compacts are simply waste paper.

[Evening Post, New York.]

The straight and manly course would be to repeal the dubious and offensive clause of the canal act. By outright and speedy repeal we should at once avoid any international difficulty and escape from a domestic blunder. If Congress refuses to give heed, then it will, indeed, be necessary to submit the dispute to arbitration.

[The Rochester Herald, Rochester, N. Y.]

An arbitration of the points in dispute is asked for, and the United States can not in decency refuse. If it does refuse this reasonable and proper demand, no future treaty we may enter into should be considered worth the paper upon which it is written. The country is too old to begin the policy of playing chuck-a-luck with the rest of the world.

[Suffern's Quarterly and Foreign Trade Journal.]

Whether the treaty prohibits us from offering free registry to American ships or not, it certainly was very unwise for this country to arouse foreign antagonism as did the action of the Government in the matter. The future will show that we made a serious diplomatic blunder, and one which did incredible injury to the commerce of the United States.

[The Post Express, Rochester, N. Y.]

Secretary Stimson recommends the repeal of the law of August last exempting from Panama Canal tolls our vessels in the coastwise trade, arguing that it is an unsound business policy which would increase the profits of a shipping monopoly. The British Government also protests against this discrimination in favor of American vessels as in derogation of the clear rights of England under the treaties of 1850 and 1891.

There is only one law of equity and just dealing, and it is the same for men and for groups of men or nations. Heretofore a lower standard of honor has prevailed in diplomacy, and it has been argued that a nation might properly do what would be shameful and dishonest in an individual. Against this theory we have fervently protested, and to fall back upon it now would be to convict ourselves of duplicity and hypocrisy.

[Boston Evening Transcript, Boston, Mass.]

The granting of free tolls to American vessels or its equivalent in rebates to the amount of such tolls would certainly be bad enough. It would make us guilty of what is known as sharp practice, and such a course with respect to solemn treaties could win for us neither the world's approval nor yet its respect. We have taken a position untenable in national honor and should promptly retrace our steps.

[The Chicago Journal, Chicago, Ill.]

The national honor of the United States is involved in Panama Canal tolls, but not in the way some ranting jingoes proclaim.

National honor depends on keeping national faith. The faith of this Nation was pledged to a canal open on equal terms to ships of all countries.

If we keep that pledge, keep it without quibbling, with caviling, and without waiting to be nagged into doing our duty, our national honor will be secure.

The Panama Canal bill should be amended by striking out the provisions of free tolls to the coastwise shipping, or by abolishing tolls altogether. This should be done, not because England wants it done, but because it is the only fair thing to do.

[The Record-Herald, Chicago, Ill.]

The progressive, sane position is this: That the arbitration treaty should be renewed, and even improved upon, and the toll-exemption provision repealed.

[Brooklyn Eagle, Brooklyn, N. Y.]

It is better to settle out of court a case there is not the slightest chance of winning. That is one way to save something besides expense. It is one way to escape humiliation.

And the way to settle a case in or out of court is to settle it right. In this matter the right way is to repeal the exemption clause. In this matter strength is a poor substitute for honor.

[The New York World, New York.]

In spite of sophistry and bluster, there can be no doubt that if we persist in our discrimination at Panama we shall presently be compelled to meet justice, honor, and civilization at The Hague or accept the consequences of world-wide contempt and condemnation. We are powerful enough to do almost anything except to find profit in bad faith.

[The Duluth Herald, Duluth, Minn.]

This Nation has pledged its word that the canal will be opened to all nations on equal terms. In the interest of a concealed ship syndicate our pledged word has been broken by the law giving American vessels special privileges.

Perhaps we should not have made this promise. Perhaps it would be to our material advantage to break it. But we did make it, and we can not break it in honor.

[The Post-Standard, Syracuse, N. Y.]

That the advocates of the bill as it stands talk seriously of refusing to submit the treaty to the tribunal at The Hague is evidence of their doubt about the validity of their position. We do not believe that America would refuse to submit it. Such action would give the lie to all our professions of faith in the principle of international arbitration.

[H. F. Bliss, managing editor, the Janesville Gazette, Janesville, Wis.]

I am in hearty sympathy with the efforts being made to influence the repeal of the Panama Canal bill, and am at a loss to understand why Congress ever passed the measure. The honor of the Nation was entirely ignored.

[Allen Walker, publisher, the Index Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.]

We already have published editorials urging that the United States shall not repudiate her obligations in regard to the Panama Canal and that there be no violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Personally we are unable to see how it will be possible for the Federal Government to repudiate such an agreement under the circumstances.

[John P. Bowman, editor Loudonville (Ohio) Democrat.]

We would be for repeal of any provisions which might be in conflict with the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or mitigate against arbitration.

[The Sun, New York.]

There is no duty before the Congress more urgent than the repeal of the act of August 24, 1912, so far as it specifically exempts American shipping engaged in the coastwise trade from the payment of tolls at the Panama Canal.

[The Springfield Leader, Springfield, Mo.]

The idea seems to be slowly coming about that the United States has taken the wrong position in our Panama Canal controversy with Great Britain. It is really difficult to see how we can avoid the plain obligations of the treaty now existing.

[W. W. Screws, editor the Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.]

The Advertiser hasn't the slightest doubt that if this case were taken before The Hague the United States would lose. Unbiased judges from other countries could hardly reach any other conclusion than that in seeking to exempt its own steamers from toll duty, the United States was violating the terms of an honorable treaty. It would be seriously embarrassing to our country for this matter to be decided against us. It would be far better, far more honorable, should we acknowledge the error into which some of our national representatives had fallen.

[The Bridgeport Standard, Bridgeport, Conn.]

The shortest way out of the last-named difficulty is through the repeal by Congress of the exemption provision in the Panama Canal bill. That would take the whole business out of the way and leave the conditions clear, as they should be.

[The Christian Work and Evangelist, continuing the New York Observer.]

If our Nation can so lightly break a treaty, who can trust her with any new ones? If the United States should refuse to arbitrate the question when Great Britain demands it, it will be impossible for her ever to say anything about arbitration again.

It is greatly to be desired that the United States should let this go to The Hague, if Congress does not rescind its action.

[Newark Evening News, Newark, N. J.]

The dispute should be taken to The Hague directly—if diplomacy fails—provided, of course, that we have a good case. And if the case is as dead open and shut against us as Mr. ROOT and some others think, it should be abandoned without subjecting this country to the humiliation of an adverse arbitral award. Nothing can be more "galling" to right-minded patriots than to have their case thrown out of court, exposing them to the shame of the world.

[Paul E. More, editor the Nation, New York.]

The Nation has been steadily against the exemption of coastwise trade of the United States from the Panama tolls. I agree heartily with the arguments brought forward in favor of repealing the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting our coastwise trade.

[The Dayton Journal, Dayton, Ohio.]

The protest of the British foreign office simply calls attention to the fact that the proposed exemption of American vessels contravenes the specific agreement of the United States in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that the canal shall be open to the merchant vessels of all nations on equal terms without discrimination in the matter of tolls or terms.

Difference of opinion, if it can not be settled in conference between the diplomatic representatives of the United States and of Great Britain, should certainly be proper matter for submission to The Hague tribunal.

A refusal of such submission on our part would place us in the lamentable position of attempting to cast discredit on the integrity of motive of a tribunal we helped to create and have always stoutly advocated.

[Rollin E. Smith, editor the Commercial West, Minneapolis, Minn.]

I am most decidedly in favor of the repeal of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade from toll.

[The Lewiston Daily Sun, Lewiston, Me.]

That theory that the United States by getting title to the canal strip absolves itself from its treaty with England is too thin. The land of brotherhood and equal rights becomes the gobbler-up of everything in sight, and the millions of people, in this country and others, who have only what they earn, robbed.

More worthy of the great, richest Nation to let the ships of all nations through without any charge.

[The Youth's Companion, Boston, Mass.]

Perhaps the most of us will think that, all things considered, the best thing to do is to keep faith with England, keep our pennies in our pockets, and let our shipowners pay their tolls themselves.

[Stuart H. Perry, publisher the Adrian Daily Telegram, Adrian, Mich.]

We can only take our choice between repealing the law voluntarily and going into The Hague court to face almost certain defeat.

[The Daily News, Burlington, Vt.]

The important obligation now under discussion is not ownership, but the solemn promise of our Nation that the canal would be operated on the same basis for all nations, which would naturally include the United States. This agreement is in the treaty, and it can not honorably be removed except by the consent of the nations which signed the treaty. Lacking that unison, the question then, in honor, must be sent to arbitration at the nations' court at The Hague.

[Decatur Herald, Decatur, Ill.]

Congress must either rescind its action on canal tolls or agree to arbitration.

This is not lack of patriotism; it is patriotism of the highest kind; the demand that this country shall take a course now that will save it from shame in years to come.

[Scientific American.]

The fact is that this whole free-toll business has been engineered by powerful interests, who hope to fatten their bank accounts with the millions that rightly should go to the United States Treasury. England has protested, and rightly. The wording of the treaty that she calls to our attention is perfectly plain, and for any true American to try to interpret it differently is to invite suspicion and scorn from all civilized nations.

[The New York Times.]

The honorable way out is the repeal of the act remitting the tolls, as the Secretary [Stimson] recommends.

Sir Edward expresses the hope that a reference of the question to arbitration may be made unnecessary by some steps taken on the part of the United States to remove the objections urged against the act by the British Government. If no such steps are taken, arbitration will be inevitable, for we can not decline it without adding to the causes of reproach which we have already piled up against ourselves.

[Courier-Journal, Louisville, Ky.]

The exemption of the coastwise trade of the United State from tolls through the Panama Canal was, to begin with, flagrant and dishonest, a violation of the treaty obligations of the Nation, and, to end with, a gigantic and perpetual subsidy to a shipping trust quite as objectionable as the Sugar Trust or the Steel Trust.

[American Exporter, New York.]

Great Britain protests against proposed congressional acts freeing American vessels from tolls in the Panama Canal. However much we may want to foster American shipping, however strongly we may feel that the United States has built the canal on its own property, however great a sacrifice our expenditure on the canal may seem, however bitter our enmity against great railways, and however anxious we may be to impress our constituents with the idea that we are simon-pure American through and through, and what care we for the British lion or anyone else, yet there is no getting away from the plain and simple language of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. No more plain, simple, and unmistakable language was ever written into a treaty solemnly signed by two nations. There is but one question before the people of the United States to-day, and that question is, Shall we or shall we not live up to our bargain—honor our signature? If we do not, we insure for ourselves the scorn and contempt of the nations of the world. That price no country can afford to pay.

[The Evening Press, Grand Rapids, Mich.]

The truth is—and this truth is more generally realized than it was a few months ago—that we were wrong when we attempted, against the plain obligations of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, to give a subsidy to American coastwise shipping by exempting it from tolls.

Now it is our duty to keep our word. This can be done by repealing the exemption clause of the canal bill.

[The Congregationalist.]

The way is still open for Congress to repeal the clause in the Panama bill which has brought us into evil odor with all the maritime nations of the world.

[The Grand Rapids Press.]

The canal is ours and we purchased possession of it by surrendering the right to do exactly as we pleased in the matter of canal tolls. In the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which superseded the Clayton-Bulwer guaranteeing British cooperation in building and protection, we gave a pledge to treat all nations, including ourselves, alike. This pledge was given in return for Great Britain's relinquishment of the right to help us build and boss the canal.

The time to have protested against its provisions was when it was signed, not after the lapse of years. The quibble that coastwise traffic, being a national monopoly, is not involved in our pledge is unworthy of a great nation.

[The Century Magazine.]

But there remains for us another chance—or will, if Great Britain shall a little longer pursue her friendly and forbearing course of waiting for our public opinion to assert itself. The coastwise exemption should be repealed. And, our obligations aside, why should we enter upon a policy of subsidizing our ships just at the time when apparently we are giving up the policy of subsidizing our manufactures? Are we never to get away from the inequality of privilege that has already corrupted the sources of government by the "vicious circle," creating and feeding by legislation agencies whose natural interest it thus becomes to destroy the principle of equality? Why subsidize ships any more than subsidize railways, or newspapers, or authorship? But if we must subsidize our ships, let it be done outright, in bills for that purpose, and not through the violation of the plain words of a solemn treaty.

[Troy (N. Y.) Record.]

If the United States should refuse either to modify its law or to arbitrate, it would place itself on record as unworthy of its present position of moral leadership in the world.

[Sioux City Tribune.]

England has been wronged and all Europe offended in order that the United States may pay a bonus to her shipping interests.

[Mining and Scientific Press, San Francisco.]

What is important is that we have apparently blundered into a position that we seem afraid to defend before an international court of arbitration. This is serious. If Congress is not sufficiently sure of its position to warrant going into court, by all means repeal the law. The matter itself is not important, but the good faith and good name of the country must be preserved.

[Milwaukee Times.]

The movement which is now on foot to further the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States is one which ought to receive the hearty support of both the press and the public in general.

[Epworth Herald (Methodist), Chicago.]

We got power to dig the canal only through a treaty in which we agreed to certain conditions. The other party to the treaty protests that our new toll law does not harmonize with those conditions, by which we are pledged to stand. Therefore, the other party asks that the matter be arbitrated, but it seems that we are getting ready to say, "There is nothing to arbitrate." If, when the time comes, we actually do say that, we ought to tear up all our treaties with other nations, and frankly take our national place with the countries which do not believe in any law but that "they should take who have the power, and they should keep who can."

[New York Evening Post.]

What Congress has voted not to collect the shipowners will coolly put in their pockets as a subsidy, and a vicious kind of one at that. Prof. Johnson's whole argument is well worth studying, and it should help along the movement to induce Congress to undo its blunder by repeal.

[Edmund F. Merriam, editor the Watchman, Boston.]

John Hay was an honest man. In international diplomacy he substituted frank and fair dealing for the traditional tricks of diplomats. In agreeing to the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty no one can doubt that Mr. Hay meant just what he said—that the ships of all nations should use the Panama Canal on exactly the same terms. The action of Congress is a descent from the high plane of John Hay's diplomacy.

[Charles E. George, editor the Lawyer and Banker, San Francisco.]

There is nothing left for the United States in honor to do but to repeal the discriminative acts passed by a mixed Congress in favor of our own coasting ships. Not to do this, we at best force a submission of the matter to arbitration in The Hague Tribunal. An adverse decision there is certain. We regard the exemption of the coastwise trade of the United States from tolls through the Panama Canal as a political measure without color of law, in every sense flagrant and dishonest, a violation of the treaty obligations of this Nation which in the end will amount to a gigantic and perpetual subsidy to a shipping trust.

[W. C. Deming, editor Wyoming Tribune, Cheyenne.]

If it is good that individuals should avoid the appearance of evil, it is a thousandfold more important that a great nation should suffer no blot upon its honor. The exemption of American coastwise trade in the Panama Canal bill is inexcusable as a domestic policy. It is flagrantly pernicious as a violation of the spirit of our treaty with Great Britain. Let us rescind a hasty error, conceived in materialism and born in dishonor, by repealing the offensive clause or by submitting it to arbitration in the same big broad spirit that Great Britain has met the United States in the past.

[Howard C. Rowley, managing editor California Fruit Grower, San Francisco, Cal.]

The Panama Canal bill, in so far as it provides for coastwise shipping exemption and in any other way differentiates between any one nation's vessels and those of any other, is about the most humiliating piece of work that has been done by our national authorities in recent years. Let us amend this Panama Canal act and make it an entirely international affair, and then go to work and argue out our own national problems on their own merits.

[The New York Tribune.]

It would be inappropriate, to use no stronger term, for either party to a controversy which is practically in course of adjudication, or which is about to be submitted to adjudication, to declare by legislation that its side is right and to proceed to act upon that theory. That portion of last year's canal law which pertains to the disputed point should therefore be repealed pending agreement between the two powers.

[Henry Mills Alden, editor of Harper's Magazine.]

Arbitration obviously can lead to but one result, and it involves useless delay and expense. The shortest way out of the situation in which we have placed ourselves is to repeal promptly the legislation exempting from canal tolls our coastwise shipping. This legislation, moreover, confers an unreasonable privilege upon the owners of such shipping, and is an unjust discrimination against the great body of American taxpayers.

II. OPINIONS OF COLLEGE PRESIDENTS.

[Francis Brown, president Union Theological Seminary.]

I have always been opposed to the provision of the Panama Canal bill which exempts the coastwise trade of the United States on the grounds that it violates treaty obligation.

[Elmer E. Brown, office of the chancellor, New York University, Washington Square, New York.]

I hope Congress will repeal the exemption of our coastwise trade rather than stand by a contention which, at best, hangs upon a narrow and unexpected interpretation of the terms of the treaty.

This country entered into a solemn contract that there should be no discrimination in tolls or conditions in the management of the Panama Canal. Under the present circumstances the least humiliating thing Congress can do is to repeal the provisions of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[George Rice Hovey, president Virginia Union University, Richmond, Va.]

It gives me unusual pleasure to add my word in favor of a repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. I believe that this provision is in contravention of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[John Grier Hibben, president Princeton University, Princeton, N. J.]

Concerning the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, I am very glad to join in efforts to bring to the attention of Congress the imperative need of the immediate repeal of this bill.

I feel that this is not merely a matter of wisdom, but also of national honor, and I am glad to have any part, however humble, in helping to forward this cause.

[William Alfred Mielis, president Hanover College, Hanover, Ind.]

It has seemed to me that the "coastwise exemption" clause of the Panama Canal bill is clearly in contravention of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and that for this reason its enactment was a mistake and its retention impossible.

[Louis Edward Holden, president University of Wooster, Ohio.]

To my mind the exemption is a penny-wise and pound-foolish measure and not in accord with our historic and generous treatment of other nations. It is my judgment that the proper and most graceful way to answer England's just protest is to repeal the bill by a unanimous vote, if that be possible.

[W. D. Agnew, president Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill.]

The "coastwise exemption" in the Panama bill—I am most heartily in favor of the repeal of this provision.

[E. J. Goodwin, principal of the Packer Collegiate Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.]

I am very positive in my belief that the Congress should repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill, which exempts the coastwise trade of the United States.

[J. C. Williams, president Westminster College, Tehuacana, Tex.]

I am heartily and earnestly in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption bill, because we now stand in an undesirable position before the world—more undesirable by far than after we have repealed the measure.

[F. W. McNair, president Michigan College of Mines, Houghton, Mich.]

Relative to the toll provision of the Panama Canal bill, I would say that I am heartily in favor of its repeal.

[Henry S. Drinker, president Lehigh University, South Bethlehem, Pa.]

The effect of exemption in reducing or keeping down transcontinental railway rates may be gains dearly bought at the cost of the discredit which will be reflected on us if we refuse Great Britain's request for arbitration in a matter which is wholly arbitrable, and which we can not refuse to arbitrate without discredit and a clear repudiation of our previous steady and consistent advocacy of arbitration.

[A. W. Harris, president Northwestern University, Chicago, Ill.]

The United States can not afford to make any regulation or enact any law which raises justly a serious doubt in regard to the proper observance of treaty obligations. Coastwise exemption does raise such a doubt. I therefore favor its repeal.

[J. P. Greene, president William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo.]

I am in favor of repealing the bill. If it is in controvention of our treaty contract, we certainly ought to repeal it. But I think it ought to be repealed on general principles.

[Frederick D. Kershner, president Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, Tex.]

I need scarcely say that I am most heartily in favor of the proposed repeal. I fail to see why the same standards of morality which obtain among individuals should fail to obtain among nations. There ought to be but one opinion upon the subject.

[Fred W. Atkinson, president The Polytechnic Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.]

I am glad of the opportunity afforded to place myself on record as being opposed to the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Aug. Seifert, St. Joseph's College, Rensselaer, Collegeville P. O., Ind.]

It has always been incomprehensible to me how Congress could pass the Panama Canal bill, exempting the coastwise trade from its toll provisions. I do hope that Congress will rectify its mistake and save us from further humiliation.

[Leroy Weller, president Beaver College, Beaver, Pa.]

I am in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. This enactment has impeached the honor of the United States in the eyes of many Europeans.

[Rev. B. W. Valentine, president Benedict College, Columbia, S. C.]

I sincerely hope for the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. We can not be the moral force in world affairs as a Nation if we do such things as will cause the world to believe that we are not sincere.

[Mary E. Woolley, president Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.]

Concerning the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill, may I say that I am heartily in favor of the repeal.

[Silas Evans, president Ripon College, Ripon, Wis.]

I believe that our discrimination and tolls in favor of our coastwise vessels is a violation in letter and in spirit of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

I have yet to find among my friends any one cognizant with the facts who does not take this point of view.

[John M. Thomas, president Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt.]

I am in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. The open canal of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was right and the proposed discrimination is doubly wrong—wrong in principle and wrong in departure from treaty obligation.

[T. M. Hodgman, president Macalester College, St. Paul, Minn.]

I most cordially indorse the effort to secure the repeal by Congress of the prevention of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Wm. De W. Hyde, Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me.]

I beg to say that I am heartily in favor of the repeal by Congress of the provisions of the Panama Canal bill exempting coastwise trade of the United States.

[John Hanson Thomas Main, president Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa.]

I am heartily in favor of the repeal of this provision by Congress. It is my opinion that the action of Congress and of President Taft in approving that action is in contravention of our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, both in its letter and in its spirit.

[S. Avery, chancellor the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebr.]

I have always regarded the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States as a very grave mistake on the part of Congress. As an American citizen with quite a large acquaintance among prominent men in Europe I feel humiliated whenever the subject is mentioned.

[Nicholas Murray Butler, president Columbia University, in the city of New York.]

In my judgment the provision of the Panama Canal act exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from canal tolls is unwise as a matter of domestic policy, as well as in flat contravention of the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. No public act in recent years has so affected our national prestige abroad as this. The prompt repeal of this provision is the easy and honorable way out of the difficulty in which we now find ourselves. To insist upon this exemption means that we must go before the world with a bad case and be subjected to the humiliation of certain defeat before any court of arbitral justice, however constituted or of whomsoever composed.

Indeed, the trial of this issue before any one of our own national courts of high standing would, in my judgment, lead just as certainly to the defeat of the contention to which our Government is for the moment committed as would a trial before The Hague Tribunal.

[R. E. Blackwell, president Randolph-Macon College, Ashland, Va.]

I am heartily in favor of the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. The provision seems to be in contravention of our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Eugene R. Long, president Arkansas College, Batesville, Ark.]

A reputation for smart twisting may be a desirable twentieth century possession for a great Nation. But a high-toned conformity to the spirit of solemn treaty obligations and "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind" we believe to be a much more valuable possession.

[H. A. Garfield, president Williams College, Williamstown, Mass.]

The spirit of the treaty forbids that we discriminate in favor of our vessels, and any construction contrary thereto, though justified by the letter, is unconscionable.

[Robert J. Aley, president University of Maine, Orono, Me.]

Our Government should play fair. Other nations have a right to expect this, because of our attitude in international affairs in the past. Congress should do whatever is necessary to bring our laws into conformity with international agreements.

[Charles Alexander Richmond, president Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.]

Responding to your request for a brief statement with respect to the "coastwise exemption" in the Panama bill, I will say that I consider it a breach of national good faith. Such a policy, if pursued, will inevitably react to our disadvantage.

[Alexander C. Humphreys, president Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N. J.]

I am firmly of the opinion that our contract with Great Britain, as covered by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, should not be violated. We should recede promptly from the unfortunate position we have taken.

[Robert S. Brookings, president Washington University, St. Louis.]

I am clearly of the opinion that the action taken by Congress on that portion of the Panama Canal bill exempting our coastwise trade was a mistake, and that such action should be repealed at the earliest possible date.

[E. C. Kellogg, president Walla Walla College.]

As I view the matter the action taken was a mistake, and I am in favor of a repeal.

[Samuel Hart, dean Berkeley Divinity School.]

I sincerely hope and would urge that the provision be repealed.

[William C. Daland, president Milton College, Milton, Wis.]

I believe that the repeal of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States would enhance our reputation for fidelity and justice, and that in the end it would benefit our commerce and advance the interests of international comity and peace.

[Carl G. Doney, president West Virginia Wesleyan College, Buckhannon, W. Va.]

As a Christian and a patriot I believe the United States should carefully observe all its treaty obligations. Therefore it seems to me that we are bound in honor to make no discrimination in tolls on vessels passing through the Panama Canal.

[Edwin S. Todd, department of economics, Miami University.]

It is my own opinion, and I believe the opinion of the leading men on our faculty, that that part of the law relating to exemption of tolls for coastwise traffic is in direct contravention of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and that it should be repealed.

[James G. K. McClure, president McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill.]

With reference to the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, I am obliged to say that so far as I understand the case my opinion is in favor of the repeal.

[C. A. Duniway, president the University of Wyoming, Laramie.]

I believe that a candid examination of the circumstances of the negotiation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and also a reasonable interpretation of the language used in the instrument should convince a reasonable man that the existing exemption in favor of coastwise trade with the United States is contrary to our international engagements.

The best way of escape from the predicament in which we now find ourselves as a Nation seems to me to be the proposed repeal of this special exemption.

[S. F. Kerfoot, president Hamline University, St. Paul, Minn.]

My own judgment is that this matter should be submitted to arbitration.

[R. W. McGranahan, president Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.]

I agree most heartily with the statement of the reasons that are set forth as to why the act should be repealed. I am exceedingly rejoiced in the effort that is being put forth to secure this repeal before it puts the United States in a position of embarrassment or in any way will throw the influence of the United States against the great fundamental principle of arbitration.

[Carleton B. Gibson, president Mechanics Institute, Rochester, N. Y.]

I am very glad to express myself as being very strongly opposed to the coastwise exemption of American vessels passing through the Panama Canal, and heartily in favor of the repeal of the recent legislation, which seems to be in conflict with the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and in opposition to the spirit of international fraternity which seems to have been developing in recent years.

[Virginia C. Gildersleeve, dean Barnard College, Columbia University, N. Y.]

I approve most heartily of the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill.

[Hill M. Bell, Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa.]

I consider the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States the most unfortunate enactment of the present generation. I am sure that it will discount the prestige of our country in every part of the world. The only sane thing to do is to repeal that provision.

[Isaac Sharpless, president Haverford College, Haverford, Pa.]

It is impossible for me, without a more careful study of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty than I have been able to give, to form a judgment as to the violation of its provisions by the recent Panama Canal bill. It is certain, however, that it is a doubtful question, and that a good American would feel that our country was disgraced if we should refuse to submit the matter to arbitration.

[W. E. Stern, president Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.]

My feeling about the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is that the United States must keep faith absolutely and literally with everybody, and no evasion, technical or otherwise, is to be tolerated no matter at how much disadvantage it may place us.

[A. W. Meyer, president St. Johns College, Winfield, Kans.]

I have never favored ignoring, or rather violating, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. The moral effects of such an act on the young American or on our standing as a Nation must be disastrous.

[A. R. Taylor, president the James Millikin University, Decatur, Ill.]

I most heartily favor the repeal of the Panama exemption law. It has seemed to me from the first as breaking faith with the other nations, even though limited to the coastwise trade of the United States.

[M. L. Burton, president Smith College, Northampton, Mass.]

I believe that absolutely no consideration should stand in the way of our guarding most jealously our honor in all treaty obligations. If the exemption of coastwise trade of the United States is in contravention to the definite agreement of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, then there is but one conclusion, and that is its repeal. If our most able statesmen and best jurists believe that the Panama bill is no violation of our treaty obligations, then certainly there is but one honorable thing to do, and that is to refer it to The Hague tribunal.

[C. A. Cockayne, president Toledo University, Toledo, Ohio.]

Since a serious difference of opinion has arisen as to whether coastwise exemption is contrary to the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, I hesitate to express judgment without a copy of the treaty before me. However, the proper course would seem to be to submit the matter for arbitration.

[R. F. Stevenson, vice president Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio.]

While not sure in my own mind upon all the legal processes involved, I am very much impressed with the fact that a nation tied up as ours is with the spirt of The Hague conference and its efforts at practical amelioration of the distresses of war between nations can and ought to say of itself as Phillips Brooks once said of men: "No man has a right to all his rights."

[G. Leland Green, principal Vermont State School of Agriculture, Randolph Center, Vt.]

My position concerning same is that there is no need of any discrimination in tolls. I furthermore believe that the United States should pass no bill which will throw us out of harmony with the great nations of the earth and thus injure our trade.

[R. C. H. Lenski, president pro tempore Capital University, Columbus, Ohio.]

I agree in full with your summing up of the situation and second your proposal heartily in my double capacity as president (pro tempore) of Capital University and as editor in chief of the Lutherische Kirchenzeitung, the German organ of the joint synod of Ohio and other States (Evangelical Lutheran).

[M. Woolsey Stryker, president Hamilton College.]

Loving my country, I long that she may not plunge, out of mere commercial lust, into violation of the solemn treaty with England upon the Panama tolls.

[D. H. Hill, president the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, West Raleigh, N. C.]

Nations, like individuals, live up to the best that is in them when they make contracts carefully and then live up to them scrupulously. In view of this fact, it seems to me that we ought to observe every line of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Alston Ellis, president Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.]

We, as a Nation, can not afford to violate our treaty obligations. I have always been of the opinion that legislation making discrimination, in the way of tolls, in favor of our coastwise trade was in contravention of the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[John B. Vanmeter, Goucher College, Baltimore, Md.]

I heartily favor the repeal by Congress of that provision of the Panama Canal bill which exempts the coastwise trade of the United States from tolls to which other shipping is subject.

[George C. Chase, president Bates College, Lewiston, Me.]

I earnestly hope, for the sake of the good name of our country, and of the maintenance of a national honor, which alone can insure it a worthy name, that our Congress will repeal, at the earliest practicable date, the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Anderson Sledd, president Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.]

I beg to say that I am firmly convinced that the coastwise exemption provision in the Panama Canal bill ought, by all means, to be repealed. Candor in dealing with a great friendly power, and national good faith in observing the plain obligations of our treaties, seem to me to demand such action.

[Thos. C. Blaisdell, president Alma College, Alma, Mich.]

From the beginning of the discussion my conclusion has been that it would be a mistake to exempt the coastwise trade of the United States from the Panama Canal toll. Our Nation can not afford to put itself into a place where it must refuse arbitration, of which it has been a foremost advocate, or face almost certain defeat if it consents to arbitration in this matter.

[Henry Louis Smith, president Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va.]

The provision of the canal bill, exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, I have always believed to be in direct contravention of the treaty. I believe also that our refusal to submit this matter to arbitration would convict us of insincerity and be a national dishonor.

I am, therefore, most heartily in favor of the repeal by Congress of this exemption.

[John S. Nollen, president Lake Forest College, Lake Forest, Ill.]

It seems to me that the question is not at all whether we have a technical right to make the exemption provided for in the present bill. The question is not one of legal technicalities, but simply of national self-respect and international good faith. We owe it to ourselves as well as to our reputation abroad to repeal the present bill at the earliest possible moment.

[J. M. P. Metcalf, president Talladega College, Talladega, Ala.]

I am very heartily in favor of the proposed repeal, believing it to be a contravention of our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Simeon H. Bing, president Rio Grande College, Rio Grande, Ohio.]

I am heartily opposed to that part of the Panama Canal bill that exempts our coastwise trade, and shall be glad to add my own opinion to that of a large and growing sentiment in this part of the Union for its repeal.

[H. C. Culberson, president The College of Emporia, Emporia, Kans.]

I heartily favor the repeal of the exemption clause in the Panama Canal bill. It certainly seems to me that the spirit if not the letter of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty compels us to avoid all discrimination between American and English vessels in the matter of canal tolls.

[Edmund C. Sanford, president Clark College, Worcester, Mass.]

I am glad of the opportunity of putting on record my earnest hope that the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from the payment of tolls will be repealed.

[Palmer C. Ricketts, president Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.]

I am strongly of the opinion that the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the owners of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States from the payment of tolls should be repealed. This provision, in my opinion, is not in accordance with the intent of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Frank K. Sanders, president Washburn College, Topeka, Kans.]

I take pleasure in expressing a protest against the passage by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

I can not see how as a country we can decline to arbitrate a question like this. Furthermore, it seems clear to me that such arbitration will result in a humiliating decision against the United States. I sincerely hope that Congress may be induced to repeal this objectionable provision.

[William F. Slocum, president Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colo.]

In regard to the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, I think with the largest possible interpretation that it is in contravention of our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and that it has seriously injured our prestige abroad. I am sure that the best sentiment of the country is in favor of a repeal.

[Paul Shorey, The University of Chicago.]

I am opposed to the exemption of the coastwise trade of the United States from Panama Canal dues. Such action is in apparent contravention of the spirit of our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and will be so regarded by international public opinion. It is a special privilege at the cost of taxpayers, and most of the problems with which the statesmanship of to-day is wrestling arise out of special privileges recklessly granted in the past.

[Levi T. Pennington, president Pacific College, Newberg, Oreg.]

I see no reason why American vessels, privately owned, should not pay the Government for the use of a canal provided at the expense of the whole people. I certainly do not see any excuse for the violation of our treaty.

[D. C. Reber, president Elizabethtown College, Elizabethtown, Pa.]

I am heartily in favor of such repeal as proposed. I think that the Panama Canal is of such national and cosmopolitan interest and the United States is performing such a noble and unselfish act. I trust, that it would be only fair to place all nations on an equality as we have already agreed to in a national treaty.

[Enoch A. Bryan, president the State College of Washington.]

It seems to me that as I read the treaty agreements we are, in passing the exemption bill, contravening the spirit if not the letter of the agreement.

[C. H. Stockton, rear admiral, U. S. N., retired, president the George Washington University, Washington, D. C.]

I feel ashamed of the action of Congress and of the President in this matter.

[J. A. Marquis, president Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.]

On the surface it looks as though we solemnly guaranteed not to give the ships of our own or any other country a preference. If this is true, we ought to by all means to stand by it.

[Henry Churchill King, president Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.]

I am glad to say that my own belief is that the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States ought to be repealed both as unwise in itself and as setting us in a wrong light in the eyes of other nations. It seems to me to have been a serious blunder.

[Edward D. Eaton, president Beloit College, Beloit, Wis.]

It seems to me of great importance that our Congress should reconsider the provisions of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, in the light of the judgment of eminent students of international affairs that the bill is in violation of our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[H. H. Wright, dean Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.]

It seems to me that the common people would interpret the meaning of the language of the treaty in accordance with the view expressed in paragraph No. 1, and that the action of Congress contravenes the treaty. Therefore the previous action of Congress should be repealed.

[Benjamin I. Wheeler, president University of California.]

I hope either that Congress will repeal that provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United Staes, or that we may submit the matter immediately to arbitration. The former is far the better course to take.

[Arthur H. Wilde, president University of Arizona.]

In my judgment, this Nation can not afford to be in its present position regarding this treaty. If we are sure the treaty does not concern coastwise trade, we ought to invite arbitration with confidence; if we are not sure of it, we should give Great Britain the benefit of the doubt.

[James Fraser, president New Windsor College, New Windsor, Md.]

I have your communication in reference to the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill, and I very heartily approve of the movement looking toward the repeal by Congress of this exemption in that bill.

[Arthur A. Hammerschlag, director Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa.]

No immediate benefit or hardship to accrue to any interest temporarily should weigh against the duty of safeguarding our national belief in the sacredness of international treaties.

[Ernest Fox Nichols, president Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H.]

As an American citizen who respects the moral integrity of his National Government, I favor a suitable amendment to the Panama Canal act in Congress.

[W. O. Thompson, president Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.]

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty should be submitted to The Hague Court for interpretation, and, if necessary, the terms of the law governing tolls should be trusted to the interpretation.

[James M. Taylor, president Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.]

The Panama legislation was in defiance of our treaty and a dishonor to our Nation and should be repealed. Failing that, we can not refuse arbitration without discrediting our record for the advantage of a few. We are inviting the just condemnation of the world.

[Ethelbert D. Warfield, president Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.]

I favor the immediate repeal of the recent act of Congress, the scrupulous fulfillment of our pledge, and such steps as shall redeem our national honor from all reproach as a breaker of treaties.

[George C. Chase, president Bates College, Lewiston, Me.]

The honor of our Nation requires direct and unequivocal action to this end.

[Isaac Sharpless, president Haverford College, Haverford, Pa.]

It seems that the act is in violation of the treaty. If so, Congress should amend it. If it does not, the question should be submitted to arbitration. The honor of the Nation seems to be involved.

[F. S. Luther, president Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.]

It seems to me that the question is one for arbitration.

[W. P. Darfee, acting president Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y.]

I think the act should be amended so that all nations shall be treated alike.

[Booker T. Washington, president Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.]

The Panama Canal question, it appears to me, is purely a moral one. As to the arbitration treaty agreement it most clearly seems to me that we can not in honor refuse to submit the question to The Hague for settlement.

[H. D. Hoover, president Carthage College.]

According to the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty it does seem entirely wrong for the United States to take the position she has taken with reference to Panama Canal tolls, and I should be heartily in favor of a repeal of the act exempting coastwise trade vessels from paying toll.

[Rush Rhees, president the University of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.]

I most earnestly favor the repeal of the legislation providing for the exemption of the American coastwise vessels from the payment of tolls in the use of the Panama Canal.

[M. Friedman, superintendent Carlisle Indian School.]

The Panama Canal act should be amended so that the high ideals which were declared to the world when we commenced the gigantic task of building the canal shall find fruition by our keeping faith with the world when the canal is completed, even when it touches the national pocketbook.

[Alexander C. Humphreys, president Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N. J.]

We should recede promptly from the unfortunate position we have taken.

[Chancellor Day, Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y.]

If we made a bad bargain we should nevertheless stick to it. We should not repudiate the contract.

[Lyon G. Tyler, president William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va.]

I have read the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and I can not see that the United States has any excuse to except its coast trade from tolls.

[David Starr Jordan, president Leland Stanford University, Palo Alto, Cal.]

By all means amend the Panama act to make it free to all or free to none. It is wretched statesmanship to violate a treaty or even to appear to do so, and wretched policy to grant ship subsidy in such form, needlessly creating a new privilege, when we are trying to eliminate old ones. Cut it out.

[J. A. Aasgaard, president Concordia College, Moorhead, Minn.]

I am entirely in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. First, I believe it is a direct breach of contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and, second, it is an indirect way of voting ship subsidy which has been defeated so often in Congress.

[John J. Hattstaedt, president American Conservatory of Music, Chicago, Ill.]

The selfishness and rapacity displayed by great civilized nations has become so pronounced that no other policy is expected any more. I suppose the United States wished to contribute its mite in that direction when its Congress voted to exempt its coastwise trade from toll. I sincerely hope that the above-mentioned section of the Panama Canal regulations will be repealed.

[H. B. Hutchins, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.]

I beg to say that, in my judgment, the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States should be repealed.

[L. J. Corbly, president Marshall College, Huntington, W. Va.]

I unhesitatingly recommend that the interpretation of the treaty be submitted to The Hague tribunal for interpretation without further delay or quibble.

[M. S. Wildman, professor (executive of economics), Leland Stanford Junior University.]

I am strongly in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption feature of the Panama Canal law.

[Thomas McClelland, president Knox College, Galesburg, Ill.]

I trust Congress may be wise enough to undo as far as possible the injury which we have already sustained by repealing their action with regard to exempting our coastwise trade.

[Dr. Charles F. Thwing, president Western Reserve University and Adelbert College, Cleveland, Ohio.]

You have marked out the proper method: "Repeal the exemption." Let us keep our covenants. Gentlemen do; why should not nations?

[A. W. Harris, president Northwestern University, Evanston-Chicago.]

In my opinion the United States can not afford to make any regulation or enact any law which raises justly any serious doubt in regard to proper observance of treaty obligations. Coastwise exemption does raise such a doubt. I therefore favor its repeal.

[Dr. James B. Angell, former president of the University of Michigan, late American minister to Turkey, Ann Arbor.]

I regard the passage of the bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from Panama Canal tolls as a violation of our treaty stipulations, and therefore reflecting most discreditably on our national honor.

[Stephen F. Weston, secretary Intercollegiate Peace Association, Yellow Springs, Ohio.]

Let us hope that upon second thought Congress will undo the wrong and retrieve the fair name that we have maintained in acting openly, honestly, and justly in our dealings with other nations. It is not a question of dollars, but of sincerity of pretensions, of squaring our national conduct with our national ideal of applying the doctrine of truth, not the doctrine of hypocrisy, in our international dealings. I believe the sentiment of all those who are connected with our work is substantially in agreement with the views I have expressed.

[S. C. Mitchell, president University of South Carolina, Columbia.]

It seems plain to me that we violate the letter and spirit of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with Great Britain by exempting American coastwise shipping from Panama tolls. Hence I favor an immediate repeal of the coastwise exemption. That is a straightforward way out of the difficulty, and American character has been so high and strong in international dealings hitherto that we can afford to take the manly and clean course. All commercial considerations aside, let Congress repeal that exemption and set ourselves straight with other nations.

[W. M. Pearce, president Ogden College, Bowling Green, Ky.]

I am heartily in favor of the repal of the coastwise exemption in the bill named.

[Frank Clare English, president William and Vashti College, Aledo, Ill.]

I am in hearty concurrence with you concerning the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. I most earnestly trust that Congress will reverse its action. If the recent action of Congress stands, it must rebound upon the heads of American citizens and upon our national honor.

[A. B. McCormick, chancellor the University of Pittsburgh.]

The United States Government must arbitrate the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting coastwise trade of the United States, or it must change this provision so that arbitration will become unnecessary. If any reason exists whereby the United States should hesitate to submit the question to the Hague tribunal, then obviously it is the duty of Congress so to change the act as that its fairness and propriety will be universally recognized.

[A. J. Burrows, president St. Louis University.]

I am certainly in favor of living up to our contracts, especially if they have been made with due deliberation and we have reaped the benefit mainly through a concession we wish now to repudiate. This is the honorable mode of acting which befits nations as well as individuals.

[William I. Hull, professor, Swarthmore College, Pa.]

In view of its past history and its present leadership in the cause of international peace and justice, it would be a national and international calamity for the United States to refuse to arbitrate the Panama Canal tolls question. Every consideration of fair play and wise policy demands that this question shall be submitted to arbitration; and if we desire to reassure the rest of the word as to our absolute sincerity in our advocacy of international justice, we should submit this question to the jurisdiction of the permanent court at The Hague and should reject any compromise short of that step, whatsoever it may be.

[E. G. Bauman, superintendent of schools, Quincy, Ill.]

In my opinion, based upon what I have read with regard to the Panama Canal situation, action should be taken against the coastwise exemption.

[Prof. J. Laurence Laughlin, department of political economy, University of Chicago.]

I regard the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States as an unjustifiable attempt to favor some particular interest at the expense of our treaty obligations and the good faith of the United States. It has been a grief to many fair-minded citizens who care for the good repute of their country. The only right and honorable course to be pursued is to repeal that special provision of the bill. I earnestly hope Congress will be led to take this point of view.

A PETITION FROM CALIFORNIA.

To His Excellency, William Howard Taft, President of the United States:

SIR: The undersigned citizens of the United States, resident in California, would respectfully petition that, since portions of the Panama Canal act seem to many persons both in the United States and in England a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, the administration seek an amicable and honorable settlement of this matter, either through diplomatic negotiation or by recommending to Congress the amendment of such parts of its recent act as may be questionable.

The matter at issue is whether our country is observing an international pledge. Even were it clear to all our people that the action of Congress is entirely consistent with our treaty, yet our Government can not with self-respect take the position that one party to a solemn covenant has the right independently to interpret that covenant. Such a position taken by a foreign power we should certainly resent.

We believe that our Government should be ready and willing, as a last resort, to submit this matter to arbitration. But our pride compels us to urge that our Nation itself hasten to correct any wrong that may have been committed rather than await the formal award of a tribunal of arbitration. It is our most earnest conviction that as a people we can better suffer some limitation of our freedom of legislation and some commercial disadvantage rather than disregard or appear to disregard a treaty negotiated in good faith and solemnly ratified.

Benj. Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California; David Starr Jordan, president of the Stanford University; Patrick William Riordan, archbishop of San Francisco; John L. Howard, president of the Western Fuel Co., of San Francisco; Warren Olney, of the San Francisco bar, formerly mayor of Oakland, Cal.; Wm. A. Thorsen, president of the West Side Lumber Co., of Tuolumne and San Francisco; Anson L. Blake, president of the Oakland Paving Co.; James K. Moffitt, cashier of the First National Bank of San Francisco; Herbert C. Moffitt, dean of the College of Medicine, University of California; Edward Robeson Taylor, dean of the Hastings College of Law, formerly mayor of San Francisco; Martin A. Meyer, rabbi Temple Emanu El, San Francisco; Charles W. Slack, of the San Francisco bar, formerly judge of the Superior Court; Horace Davis, president of the board of trustees of Stanford University, formerly Member of Congress from California; P. J. Van Loben Sels, of Oakland, Cal.; Wm. Carey Jones, head of the School of Jurisprudence, University of California; Frederick C. Woodward, professor of law, head of the Law School, Stanford University; W. T. Reid, of Belmont, Cal.; David P. Barrows, professor of political science, University of California; William Kent, Member of Congress from California.

III. OPINIONS OF CLERGYMEN AND MINISTERS.

[W. M. Anderson, D. D., minister First Presbyterian Church, Dallas, Tex.]

I think it very important that the coastwise exemption of the Panama bill be repealed.

[John Balcom Shaw, pastor Second Presbyterian Church, Chicago.]

I am strongly of the opinion that the recent action of Congress regarding the coastwise trade of the United States should be at once repealed. The honor and the good faith of our Nation are involved.

[Harry R. Miles, pastor First Congregational Church, Berkeley, Cal.]

The Panama treaty guarantees the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which accords the same treatment to British and American ships.

The action of Congress seems to me to put in question our good faith, and I earnestly hope that Congress will reconsider and put the integrity of our treaty above consideration of commercial gain.

[A. W. Vernon, pastor Harvard Church, Brookline, Mass.]

It is exceedingly unfortunate that any question should arise in connection with the use of the canal that would seem to put no occupation of territory in the same class with the nefarious obligations of the European powers. We should lift a treaty obligation to a higher place in international codes of honor.

[Henry Kingman, pastor Claremont Congregational Church, Claremont, Cal.]

There seems no reason why a nation should not have as keen a sensitiveness to honor as an individual. For a trifling material gain—even if it were proved to be a gain—we can not afford to put ourselves in the estimation of the nations of the world in the class of those who repudiate honorable obligations. For the sake of every citizen of the United States the objectionable provision should be repealed.

[Charles E. Diehl, minister First Presbyterian Church, Clarksville, Tenn.]

Not only in the interests of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, but in the interests of justice and right, should Congress repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Bunyan McLeod, pastor First Presbyterian Church, Harrodsburg, Ky.]

The proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill is a consummation devoutly to be wished by all fair-minded Americans.

[W. H. Pennhallegon, D. D., pastor First Presbyterian Church, Decatur, Ill.]

In the interest of national honor and international peace, I am strongly in favor of the repeal by Congress of that provision of the Panama Canal bill which exempts the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Murray Hefley Howland, pastor Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Buffalo, N. Y.]

I am in hearty sympathy with the movement to repeal the coastwise exemption bill. I know from my touch with many men that there is a deep feeling of shame that for the sake of pecuniary advantage our country should stultify its position in favor of arbitration and should stoop to repudiation of its treaty obligations.

[A. B. Curry, pastor Second Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tenn.]

I am decidedly in favor of the proposed repeal. To exempt the coastwise vessels would be simply favoring a certain class of citizens, and a comparatively small class, at the expense of the whole body of citizens.

[J. C. Molloy, D. D., pastor First Presbyterian Church, Columbia, Tenn.]

I think our Government should run the canal as a business firm would—receiving from all craft, save Government vessels, the toll due for the privilege of using it.

[Henry Stiles Bradley, pastor Piedmont Congregational Church, Worcester, Mass.]

I sincerely hope that Congress will remedy as speedily as possible the wrong it has already done in placing our country before the nations as one unfaithful to its pledges.

[Rev. John Archibald MacCallum, minister Walnut Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia.]

It is my very earnest hope that Congress will repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Thomas Cummins, pastor First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, Ky.]

I hasten to say that the provisions of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States ought to be repealed. Fair play demands it. Justice demands it. The honor and good name of the country demand it. The passage of the bill was, in my judgment, the most unfair, unjust, dishonorable, and the most high-handed iniquitous thing Congress has ever done. A palpable fraud in the interest of the interests. A veiled ship-subsidy measure with so thin a veil that all the people of the United States, who are not blinded because the "interests" have blinded them, must see through the veil as they have come to see through the protective tariff veil; the high-handed fraud, the broad daylight robbery that regards neither God nor man nor justice nor honor—all for the "interests."

[Washington Gladden, pastor First Congregational Church, Columbus, Ohio.]

I most heartily agree with the protest against that coastwise exemption. I am ashamed of it. It puts this Nation in the wrong. It cripples the Nation in its advocacy of international arbitration.

[William Pierson Merrill, pastor The Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City.]

It seems to me quite clear that the exemption specified does not contravene the contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. I do feel, however, that the main issue is the upholding of arbitration. I should consider it an international sin if the United States should refuse to refer such a matter to arbitration.

I also feel very strongly that our Nation can not afford to put itself in a doubtful position with regard to its honor. Far better waive assumed or real rights than appear dishonorable in the eyes of other nations. For these reasons I am inclined to favor the repeal of the coastwise exemption.

[David Beaton, pastor Congregational Church, Janesville, Wis.]

I am earnestly in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill.

[A. M. C. Covert, pastor Forty-first Street Presbyterian Church, Chicago.]

I am glad to indicate to you my sincere opposition to the coastwise exemption clause in the Panama bill, on the ground that it seems to me to be a contravention of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and to set us against a forward movement for amicable international relations.

[Rev. D. Clay Lilly, pastor Grace Street Presbyterian Church, Richmond, Va.]

I heartily favor the repeal of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. It violates the plain provision of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[A. Edwin Keigwin, pastor West End Presbyterian Church, New York.]

We shall only invite dishonesty if the Panama Canal bill remains as at present.

[S. Parkes Cadman, pastor Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.]

It is certainly the bounden duty and obligation of the United States Government to submit to arbitration this entire matter concerning the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. I am strongly convinced that the whole action as it now stands is unfortunate for the honor and reputation of our Government.

[Samuel Charles Black, D. D., pastor Collingwood Avenue Presbyterian Church, Toledo, Ohio.]

I sincerely hope that the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States will be repealed.

[Rev. George H. Cornelson, jr., D. D., pastor First Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, La.]

So far as I have been able to formulate an opinion in regard to the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill, I am persuaded that the wisest action that can be taken by our country would be to have Congress repeal the provision exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Ernest L. Wismer, minister First Congregational Church, Bristol, Conn.]

Every self-respecting American ought to blush for shame at the sophistry offered in defense of a plain violation of a treaty. The only manly thing to do is to repeal the clause that exempts coastwise vessels from toll.

[Russell Cecil, pastor Second Presbyterian Church, Richmond, Va.]

The movement to further the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States accords with my conviction on the subject. In my judgment the position of our Government is untenable, and the sooner it is receded from the more creditable it will be to us.

The coastwise exemption seems to be in direct violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. One should hesitate to violate even the spirit of the treaty.

[Rockwell Harmon Potter, D. D., minister the First Church of Christ, Center Congregational, Hartford, Conn.]

I am glad to go on record as in favor of the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill.

[W. Bristow Gray, minister First Presbyterian Church, Greenville, Miss.]

Allow me to express my unqualified disapproval of the provision in the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade.

Common honesty and a square deal demands that we repeal the measure.

[Robert S. Boyd, pastor James Lees Memorial Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky.]

I wish to express myself as deeply in sympathy with the effort to secure the repeal of the coastwise exemption of the Panama bill by Congress.

[Charles M. Sheldon, minister at large, Central Church, Topeka, Kans.]

I am heartily in favor of repeal. As the bill stands now, it is a dishonor to our treaty.

[J. Keir G. Fraser, minister Second Presbyterian Church, Charleston, S. C.]

It is difficult for me to understand how there can be a doubt in the mind of anyone that that part of the Panama Canal bill which exempts American coastwise ships from the payment of tolls is in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. Congress ought to repeal the act, or, at least, submit to arbitration.

[Rt. Rev. L. J. Coppin, D. D., presiding bishop second Episcopal district, Philadelphia, Pa.]

After careful study of the question concerning the appeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill, I am firmly of the opinion that the repeal will be wise and just, and is the way to save the United States from very unnecessary humiliation, to say the least.

[Frederick Burgess, bishop of Long Island.]

I am heartily in favor of the arbitration movement, and believe that our country will be justified in submitting this whole question to arbitration as soon as practicable.

[Harmon H. McQuilkin, pastor First Presbyterian Church, San Jose, Cal.]

In common with multitudes of my fellow countrymen, I deeply deplore the patent injustice of the coastwise exemption feature in the Panama Canal bill, and sincerely trust that our Nation may be rescued from the humiliation of its consequences by a speedy repeal of the unjust discriminative provision.

[John Scarborough, bishop of New Jersey.]

I hope the Government will keep good faith with promises made, without any reference to loss or gain. National honor must be maintained at any cost.

[Junius B. Remensnyder, D. D., LL. D., president of Commission on Practicability of the Federal Council of Churches and president of the general synod of the Lutheran Church in the United States.]

Our country stands doubly pledged by its original declaration of equal terms to all nations and, by its agreement, to submit such differences to The Hague arbitration court, not to take the decision violently in its own hands. It is an amazing fact that when our journals of highest tone, practically without exception, and our foremost citizens of character and influence in the world of religion, letters, and business voice their strongest protest against a course of such moral reaction.

[Geo. W. Sandt, D. D., editor The Lutheran.]

Quote me as being in favor of the only proper ethical position which this country can take if it is to maintain its correct position and self-respect among nations. There are some things worth more than dollars, and this is one of them.

[Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, bishop of Missouri, St. Louis.]

The Cuba page of our country's international doings is one of fair, unsoiled altruism. I should be sorry to think that the canal page should be one of studied egoism.

[Rev. Earl Cranston, resident bishop Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C.]

My sympathies are strongly with the movement for the repeal of the provision of the canal bill exempting our own ships from charges for use of the canal. Our national honor is at stake. We are in danger of reversing our record on a most important point—open and square dealing with all nations on all international questions. After paying twenty millions for islands already won in war, and returning other millions of the Chinese indemnity unasked, we can not afford to send to arbitration even, much less to persist in the violation of the plain agreement of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Rev. Walter L. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn.]

I am glad to learn that there is a movement on foot seeking the repeal of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. I regard the provision as unwise and unjust. It is a species of class legislation, to which I am opposed always. This is the age of fair play, and I do not believe the people of the United States will stand for the aforesaid provision.

My first thought, when the act of exemption was adopted by Congress, was that it was only fair, because the United States had borne the expense of building the canal. But when I learned that it was contrary to the treaty, I saw at once that we could not honorably insist upon it. It would be far better to repeal the bill; but if that be not done, then of course the case should be submitted to arbitration. That we Americans, who have done so much for the cause of peace in general, should reject the principle of arbitration because it might bear heavily upon our own pockets would be intolerable.

[Rev. William Burt, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Buffalo.]

I most heartily favor the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. We should offer the world an example of equality for all and of a generosity that will promote peace and harmony among the nations. The present arrangement, if continued, will be a constant source of irritation. If we would command the respect and admiration of the civilized world, we must open the canal for all on equal terms.

[Bishop Benjamin Tucker Tanner, Philadelphia.]

America is too strong to ever take an advantage, howsoever well it may be authorized.

[Rev. W. Moore Scott, Savannah, Ga.]

I should very much regret to see the United States take any step in this or any other matter which would be in the least open to criticism or at all disturb the close relation between us and England. We might be within our strict legal rights in this matter, and yet courtesy, policy, and our best interests be seriously offended thereby. I trust that we shall move in this vital matter with great care and unselfishness.

[Rev. Willard Brown Thorp, San Diego, Cal.]

I am in hearty sympathy with the efforts that are being made to secure the repeal of the unfortunate action of Congress exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from Panama Canal tolls. Our standing and influence among the nations of the world would be immeasurably injured if that apparent violation of treaty obligations should be permitted to stand.

[Right Rev. Arthur C. A. Hall, bishop of Vermont, Burlington.]

I most earnestly trust that either by a repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama Canal bill or by a submission of the matter to arbitration Congress will free our country from the disgrace, which I fear we must otherwise accept, of dishonesty in international dealings.

[Right Rev. Frederick F. Reese, bishop of Georgia, Savannah.]

I cordially approve the effort to secure the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from the payment of tolls: First, because I believe it to be a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty; and, second, because I believe it to be an indirect form of subsidy to a special interest.

[Right Rev. Samuel Cook Edsall, D. D., bishop of Minnesota, Minneapolis.]

It is clear to my mind that Congress should repeal the provision exempting coastwise trade of the United States. Our country can not afford to be placed in the position of insisting on a matter of doubtful legality or of not submitting it to arbitration.

[Right Rev. John N. McCormick, bishop of Western Michigan, Grand Rapids.]

In regard to the repeal by Congress of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill, I beg to say that I am in favor of such repeal and hope that it may be passed. It appears to me that this would be at once the most honorable and the most expedient course to pursue.

[Right Rev. G. Mott Williams, bishop of Marquette, Mich.]

As I understand it, America has proclaimed to the world that by completing the Panama Canal she was aiming to do the world an unselfish service. Quite independently of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, therefore, we were estopped from a selfish use of the canal. The treaty, of course, ought to govern, and the discrimination in behalf of our coastwise shipping ought to be repealed. There is no other honest course.

[Right Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, bishop of Tennessee, Memphis.]

I sincerely hope that the exemption will be repealed, because it is in every way unworthy of us as true Americans. This exemption in favor of our own coastwise trade is an exhibition of an ungenerous and selfish spirit, which is just as vulgar in a nation as it is in an individual; it is a species of jingoism—"might makes right"—that would put a cheap, commercial stain upon our great canal enterprise, an enterprise the conduct of which ought to go down in history as a noble and splendid contribution by a great people not to their own aggrandizement, but to the closer intercourse and the friendlier relationship of all the nations of the world.

[Rev. Le Roy G. Henderson, Americus, Ga.]

Any movement that makes for the cause of true arbitration, as you point out in your letter, meets with my heartiest approval.

[Right Rev. Arthur L. Williams, bishop of Nebraska, Omaha.]

I am for world-wide competition, a free canal, and against coastwise exemption.

[Rev. I. S. McElroy, Columbus, Ga.]

If the coastwise exemption is in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty beyond any reasonable doubt, then it should be repealed, for nations no less than individuals should keep faith with each other. If there be room for a reasonable doubt, then the question should be submitted for arbitration, not to The Hague, but to a board selected by the two governments interested.

[Rev. Eugene Russell Hendrix, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Kansas City, Mo.]

I must express the hope that the Congress of the United States will so modify its action in exemption the coastwise trade of the United States from tolls in passing through the Panama Canal as to save us from humiliation in the event of an adverse decision at The Hague conference, should the matter be submitted to arbitration, which we can not refuse. The immense cost of the canal does not leave us in position to ignore the considerable revenue which our coastwise trade should pay, while our refusal to submit to arbitration the questions involved in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty puts our Nation, the special friend and advocate of arbitration, at a grave disadvantage in every way before the other nations of the earth. A treaty, "the solemn oath of a nation," can not be set aside for personal advantage save to our immense discredit as a Christian Nation.

[Right Rev. Cortlandt Whitehead, bishop of Pittsburgh.]

Any citizen of the United States who has a patriotic pride in his country and wishes to continue it must repudiate with emphasis the action of Congress in the matter of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill. In every possible way I desire to express and emphasize the sentiment that the United States should speedily repudiate and rescind the action taken by Congress and should proclaim to the world hearty appreciation of what is due from a generous and high-minded people.

[Rev. J. H. Jones, A. M., D. D., presiding bishop Ninth Episcopal District African Methodist Episcopal Church, comprising the States of Tennessee and Alabama, Wilberforce, Ohio.]

As an American I feel keenly the desire to encourage our own steamship trade, but far above that feeling is our national honor, by which honor we are bound to live. No nation can afford to disrespect its contracts and be false to its promises. To do so is to stand discredited, dishonored as hypocrites. Above all things the Nation must be fundamentally honest and must maintain itself in righteousness. I therefore humbly and sincerely beg our Government to repeal the Panama Canal coastwise exemption bill and bring to a close the contention between our Government and Great Britain without arbitration and with honor and dignity to ourselves.

[Rev. Joseph Silverman, Temple Emanu-El, New York.]

The only logical action for all concerned to take is to submit the differences to arbitration.

[Rev. C. T. Dole, First Congregational Society, Jamaica Plain, Mass.]

I wish to be counted among those who are earnestly petitioning Congress to reverse what we all know was hasty action in passing the Panama Canal Act. This measure was never supported by any popular demand; it has put a stain of dishonor upon our conduct, touching our sister nation of Great Britain, and it threatens, unless repealed, to lay a burden of expense upon all our people in favor of a class already privileged.

[Right Rev. Chauncey B. Brewster, bishop of Connecticut, Hartford.]

The stronger the ground for the claim that the provision contravenes our solemn contract (and to me that ground seems very strong), the more imperative reason is there for repealing the provision in order to save this country from dishonor and disgrace. I count it a privilege, so far as in me lies, to further this movement, and I earnestly hope that Congress will take the action which under the circumstances is reasonable and honorable and repeal the provision referred to.

[Rev. J. W. Bachman, Chattanooga, Tenn.]

The United States is rich enough to lose, but it can not afford to break its word.

[Rev. F. T. McFaden, Richmond, Va.]

I do not see how our Government can make any discrimination in tolls or conditions in favor of the coastwise or any other trade of this country in the use of the Panama Canal. To do so, in view of all our former actions, and especially the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, would be to stultify ourselves in the estimation of all the Governments of the world.

IV. OPINIONS OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

[Duncan MacKinnon, San Diego, Cal.]

If we are to retain our self-respect and national honor, Congress must repeal the provision of the Panama bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[C. W. Mickens, Adrian, Mich.]

The submission to arbitration of the proposed difficulty in question would be a proper solution.

[C. H. Young, Lebanon, Ohio.]

I am in favor of repealing the Panama Canal bill exempting coastwise trade of the United States.

[F. T. Appleby, president Lafayette College, Lafayette, Ala.]

I feel that the clause should be repealed, that our splendid standing before all the nations of the world may not in any way be weakened.

[E. O. Holland, Louisville, Ky.]

The question of "Panama tolls" was discussed at a meeting of a number of the leading business and professional men of this city on last Saturday, December 28, 1912. After a careful analysis of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, it was the unanimous conviction of this group of men that Congress owes it to the American people to repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill which exempts the coastwise trade of the United States.

The honor of a country should be as sacred as the honor of an individual. Therefore a contract solemnly entered into by the accredited representatives of our country should be held inviolate.

[S. D. Largent, superintendent board of education, Great Falls, Mont.]

I believe that this Nation should stand strictly for the spirit as well as the letter of every treaty entered into with any other nation.

I am not in sympathy with the coastwise exemption of tolls. I see no good reason for it, and I do not believe that it is right.

[William O. Riddell, superintendent Board of Education, Des Moines.]

It is my individual opinion that whoever uses the Panama Canal should pay toll at the same rate that every other user pays; that there should be no discrimination whatever in tolls or conditions in favor of coastwise trade or any other special interest.

[H. M. Comins, superintendent Ripon public schools, Ripon, Wis.]

I incline to the "Independent" rather than the "Outlook" view in the matter of our coastwise shipping in connection with our Panama Canal. It seems to me we can hardly refuse to arbitrate the question, and in that event the decision must be adverse to the United States.

[Francis A. Soper, superintendent department of education, Baltimore, Md.]

I am decidedly opposed to the exemption of the coastwise trade of the United States as contained in the Panama Canal bill.

[G. J. Graham, superintendent of schools, Xenia, Ohio.]

I most assuredly feel that our Government has made a very grave mistake in the Panama Canal bill, in making an exception of the coastwise trade of the United States, as it is a direct violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[R. O. Stoops, superintendent of city schools, Joliet, Ill.]

I heartily favor the proposed repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill.

[J. N. Adee, superintendent Johnstown public schools, Johnstown, Pa.]

I sincerely believe it will be better for our Nation's future and world-wide peace for us to observe the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which treats the vessels of all countries alike in respect to tolls on the Panama Canal.

[N. Winton Palmer, superintendent public schools, Penn Yan, N. Y.]

It is my candid opinion that the provision of the so-called Panama Canal bill exempting coastwise trade of the United States should be repealed.

[Henry P. Emerson, superintendent department of public instruction, Buffalo, N. Y.]

I am in favor of the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States on the ground that it is a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[H. O. Sluss, superintendent of public schools, Covington, Ky.]

I have not had the time to look into the various phases of the proposed repeal of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. However, the objections seem to me valid.

[F. H. Beede, superintendent of schools, New Haven, Conn.]

I favor the repeal of the bill.

[J. A. C. Chandler, superintendent public schools, Richmond, Va.]

I favor a repeal of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States on the grounds that it should not be said that the United States of America in any way violated the contract that it had made with Great Britain.

[Richard E. Clement, superintendent of public schools, Elizabeth, N. J.]

If given an opportunity I should certainly vote for the repeal of the law relative to tolls to be charged for the use of the Panama Canal, and the enactment of such law as would enable every American citizen to hold his head high and look the whole world straight in the face.

[William H. Maxwell, superintendent of schools, New York City.]

I regard the action of Congress in exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from tolls and conditions to which the ships of other nations are subjected as a violation of the treaty into which we entered with England.

I earnestly hope that Congress will repeal the obnoxious provision.

[R. E. Laramy, superintendent Phoenixville school district, Phoenixville, Pa.]

I feel personally that in this matter of exemption from tolls the moral tone of our Nation is in danger. This is of more importance than shekels.

[J. H. Van Sickle, superintendent of schools, Springfield, Mass.]

By all means the coastwise exemption in the Panama Canal bill should be repealed.

[H. P. Lewis, superintendent of public schools, Worcester, Mass.]

I have made no serious study of the subject, but I am inclined to the belief that our contract in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty requires us to place all vessels passing through the Panama Canal upon an equality.

I think that the maintenance of the national honor is of far greater importance than the securing of some financial advantage.

[J. A. Whiteford, superintendent of schools, school district of St. Joseph, Mo.]

Replying to yours in reference to repeal of coastwise exemption in Panama bill, will say that from what I know of the situation I should be pleased to learn that this clause of the bill has been set aside by Congress. Its repeal would do much toward relieving an embarrassing situation.

[S. C. Hutchinson, superintendent of schools, Montpelier, Vt.]

I regret extremely the action of Congress in exempting the coastwise trade of the United States in the Panama bill. I am correspondingly glad that a movement is on foot to bring about its repeal.

[R. F. Hight, superintendent public schools, Lafayette, Ind.]

I am in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill.

[Jonathan Fairbanks, city superintendent of schools, Springfield, Mo.]

In response to your circular just received, I will say that in consequence of our treaty we should tax our coastwise ships passing through the canal same as foreign ships. Show no favors to any—our vessels as well as foreign.

While we built the canal, and the territory through which it passes is ours also, yet it would be well to make our ships pay the same as others. Then our relations with foreign countries would be much strengthened or much more harmonious. I trust that the present canal bill will be repealed.

[G. A. Stuart, superintendent school department, Rockland, Me.]

I think that if we wish to be regarded as honorable in our international dealings and live up to treaty obligations we can do no less than repeal the provision mentioned.

V. OPINIONS OF OTHER PROMINENT MEN.

[A. Barton Hepburn, New York.]

I am clearly of the opinion that the recent act of Congress exempting the coastwise trade of the United States from the payment of tolls is an infringement of our treaty obligations.

[William Lyon Phelps, professor of English literature, Yale University, New Haven.]

I believe that Congress should repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, because I think such a clause is really a contravention of our plain contract made in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[E. R. L. Gould.]

Sticking to a bargain freely made characterizes an honorable man. National honor demands similar conduct from the Government.

[Oscar S. Straus.]

I would deem it advisable if the Senate could be prevailed upon to amend the Panama act by eliminating that section which frees from toll our coastwise shipping, and I think every effort should be made to bring about that result. Failing in that, I know of no valid reason why we should not, if requested by Great Britain, arbitrate that clause of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty above referred to.

[George McLean Harper, Princeton, N. J.]

I hope Congress will repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States, because it is plainly a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. No amount of word juggling can make it appear otherwise.

[Andrew F. West, Princeton University.]

The coastwise exemption provisions in the Panama Canal bill are bad from the standpoint of our national honor and also bad from the business point of view. If our coastwise trade through the canal needs special consideration in view of international competition, this should not be given in the form of lower tolls, against one well-understood pledge to the world of equal tolls, but by some form of compensating allowance made by the United States.

I hope the coastwise-exemption provision will be repealed promptly. If this can not be secured, it would be disgraceful not to submit the matter to arbitration.

[William Morton Payne, Chicago.]

I can hardly find words to express my abhorrence of the legislation which exempts any American shipping from the payment of canal tolls.

[George Burnham, jr., Philadelphia.]

For a totally unnecessary subsidy to a particular industry, granted in a moment of sentimental enthusiasm, we are going to barter away our honor and our standing among the nations.

[A. C. Stratford, president Board of Trade, Jersey City.]

The United States Government should arbitrate the matter of Panama Canal tolls. I can not see any other way honorably out of the controversy.

[David Davis, attorney at law, Cincinnati.]

I take this opportunity to protest against Congress of the United States interfering with the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and as earnestly request that Congress repeal the exemption act.

I voice the sentiment that the people of Ohio are in favor of adhering to our solemn contract, and if there can be any difference that such difference be submitted to the highest and most useful court in the world—The Hague.

[H. C. Phillips, secretary Lake Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration, Mohonk Lake, Ulster County, N. Y.]

It certainly seems to me that the United States can not afford to refuse to arbitrate the construction of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with reference to the recent Panama Canal act.

[A. B. Farquhar, York, Pa.]

Let the American flag be planted on Panama as a symbol of justice and righteousness in dealing with other nations, and not in the protection of partiality to petty interests at home and international shame. The word "all" in the treaty means all.

[Henry Van Dyke, Princeton, N. J.]

It is already evident that the coastwise exemption clause in the Panama Canal bill comes in a questionable shape and is likely to lead to misunderstanding with Great Britain and with other friendly nations. Why create a necessity for arbitration? The simplest way out of the impending difficulty would seem to be the repeal of the confusing clause.

[Paul Fuller, New York City.]

I see no justification for such an exemption.

[J. Bishop Putnam.]

Every American citizen with the slightest regard for the dignity of his country can have but one opinion as to the course that we should take in connection with this matter, and the thought that we could honorably refuse to arbitrate a question of this kind is humiliating.

[Charles Francis Adams.]

In regard to the proposed repeal of the "coastwise exemption" in the Panama bill, I have merely this to say: "A man's self-respect is worth something, and what is true of the individual is true of the community."

[Robert Erskine Ely, director, League for Political Education.]

The American people ought not to permit any doubt as to whether or not they propose to live up to their treaty obligations.

[William Jay Schieffelin.]

The reputation for fair dealing which our country has earned in the past will deservedly suffer unless we are true to the agreement that there shall be no discrimination in the Panama Canal tolls.

[Robert C. Ogden.]

In my judgment, there is only one honorable course for Congress to pursue concerning the provision in the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States and that is promptly to repeal it.

[Seth Low.]

If the United States and Great Britain fail to adjust their differences of opinion on the subject of Panama Canal tolls, I am very earnestly of opinion that the difference between the two countries on the interpretation of the treaty should be arbitrated.

My own personal opinion is that the game is not worth the candle, and I am sorry that this discrimination has been made.

[Alton B. Parker.]

Believing our country should faithfully fulfill, in both letter and spirit, every treaty obligation, I am necessarily heartily anxious that the provisions of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States should be repealed.

[Daniel C. French.]

It gives me pleasure to express myself as heartily in favor of the repeal by Congress of the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise traffic of the United States from payment of tolls. The United States can not afford to run the risk of an accusation of unfairness or breach of faith in regard to this point.

[Alfred E. Marling, New York.]

I hope Congress will repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Cleveland H. Dodge, New York.]

I sincerely trust that the effort to bring about the repeal may be successful.

[Charles De Kay, New York.]

Regarding repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama Canal bill by Congress, I hope Congress will see this matter from a higher outlook and correct what I believe to be a strategic and diplomatic mistake.

[John Burroughs, West Park, N. Y.]

I think that to fail to keep faith with Great Britain in the matter of the Panama Canal treaty or to refuse to submit the question in dispute to arbitration, would be a stigma upon our honor as a Nation.

[William Roscoe Thayer, Cambridge, Mass.]

In the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the United States solemnly agreed to do a certain thing and it is bound, like every honest man, to keep its pledge.

[Brooks Adams, Boston, Mass.]

I consider the Panama Canal bill a breach of faith and in the last degree disgraceful to the country.

[James Schouler, Intervale, N. H.]

I favor a repeal by Congress of the United States coastwise-trade exemption.

[John Luther Long.]

Concerning the national iniquity compounded in the coastwise-exemption clause of the Panama Canal bill, I am very glad to raise my voice against it.

[Edward S. Martin, New York.]

I would like to see the coastwise trade clause of the canal bill repealed.

If that can not be done, I should like to see it arbitrated.

[James Ford Rhodes, Boston, Mass.]

My first bias was favorable to the bill as passed by Congress. But a careful historical examination of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 and of the present Hay-Pauncefote treaty, ratified by the Senate on December 16, 1901, has convinced me beyond any question that the words "free and open to the vessels of commerce * * * of all nations" mean all merchant vessels, including vessels in our coastwise trade. I think that if the bill had not been passed at the close of a long and exhausting session the undesirable coastwise provision would not have been included. The wise thing for Congress now to do is to repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States.

[Montgomery Schuyler, New Rochelle, N. Y.]

Regarding the question of the exemption from tolls provision as primarily one of national honor, it is necessary for me to say that I am warmly in sympathy with repeal. The adverse arguments seem to me properly describable as "pettifogging."

[H. D. Sedgwick, New York City.]

American good faith is wounded by the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting our coastwise trade from tolls; that provision should be repealed.

[Robert E. Telford, Abbeville, S. C.]

My sentiments are very strongly in favor of the proposed repeal for the sake of our national honor and in justice to all concerned.

[Basil L. Gildersleeve, Baltimore, Md.]

A strict constructionist in all matters that pertain to personal and national honors, I consider any evasion of our treaty obligations a disgrace to the country.

[Andrew D. White, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.]

I have steadily been and remain a supporter of the idea of submitting the Panama Canal matter to arbitration at The Hague.

[Henry U. Johnson, ex-Member of Congress, Richmond, Ind.]

The coastwise provision of the Panama Canal act should be promptly repealed by Congress. Every consideration of national honor demands that this shall be done. It is also an expedient step to take, and will prove to be a profitable one in the long run.

[John G. Milburn, New York.]

I beg to say that I feel very strongly that the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States should be repealed by Congress.

[W. D. Howells.]

As to the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama bill, I have only to say that I like a nation that keeps its word, even though it loses by its good faith, just as I like a man that sweareth to his hurt and changeth not. I am not concerned so much for our shame before the world as for our shame before ourselves if we break the promise we made in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

[Everett P. Wheeler, New York.]

I am very clear that that clause in the bill ought to be repealed.

[George Foster Peabody.]

I beg to say that I am very heartily in sympathy with the proposition that this exemption should be repealed.

It seems to me a case where the public sentiment should be aroused to express its faith in the doctrine that "righteousness exalteth a nation."

[Frank T. Bayley, Denver, Col.]

I earnestly hope for the repeal by Congress of the coastwise exemption feature of the canal bill. I believe its retention will cost us heavily in moral prestige and national influence.

[Edward A. Reed, Holyoke, Mass.]

I am heartily in favor of the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama Canal bill, simply because it is a breach of good faith.

[Selden P. Spencer, St. Louis, Mo.]

For the United States, accepting as it does the principle of international arbitration, to be reluctant to admit the application of that principle to an honest and important difference of opinion between it and Great Britain in regard to the provisions of a treaty between them (to say nothing of the express provision of the separate treaty which we have with Great Britain, by which each undertakes to submit to arbitration disputed questions arising out of treaties between the two nations) is to invite the suspicion of the civilized world as to the integrity and honesty of the United States, thus hesitant, and speaking for peace with the voice of Jacob but in action extending the fraudulent hands of Esau.

[Samuel B. Capen, Boston.]

If there is any necessity to subsidize our shipping which uses the canal, we ought to do it directly and in the open, and not jeopardize our honor and our leadership in the peace movement at the same time. I trust that before the present Congress adjourns legislation may be enacted so that there shall be no discrimination in tolls or conditions among all nations.

[A. W. Hazen, Middletown, Conn.]

I am in hearty sympathy with the movement to further the repeal of the coastwise exemption in the Panama Canal bill. It has been a matter of deep regret to me that the Nation was so dishonored by its Congress as in the passing of that section of the bill.

[Charles L. Hutchinson, Chicago.]

I sincerely hope that Congress may repeal the provision of the Panama Canal bill exempting the coastwise trade of the United States. It was, in my opinion, a mistake ever to exempt the coastwise trade, and I hope that Congress may rectify the error before called upon to arbitrate the question.

[Charles Matteson, Providence, R. I.]

I am heartily in sympathy with the movement to obtain a recession by Congress of this exemption, believing as I do that all vessels passing through the canal should be treated alike and that all should pay tolls. If this can not be accomplished, I believe that the interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty should be referred to The Hague Tribunal.

[Fred S. Ball, Montgomery, Ala.]

In my judgment the matter in controversy should be adjusted, and it seems clear from the language of the treaty that the act of Congress is without justification.

[J. H. Moores, Lansing, Mich.]

If the agreement in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is that "there shall be no discrimination in tolls or conditions as among all nations," then I say let our coast-line shipping be on the same footing as that of all other nations. Let us keep our contract.

[Samuel T. Dutton, American Peace Society, New York.]

The United States can well afford to subsidize its coastwise ships if necessary, but can not afford to get a reputation for sharp practice or loose dealings with other nations.

[From a letter to a citizen who requested his eminence's opinion on the Panama tolls question.]

CARDINAL'S RESIDENCE,
408 NORTH CHARLES STREET,
Baltimore, Md., January 18, 1913.

* * * * * * *

I am most anxious that in this all-important matter the honor and prestige of our country be preserved. This I feel can be reached if the matter is given serious consideration and is carefully debated in both branches of Congress. Furthermore, this would result in a just settlement of the matter without having to have recourse to arbitration, for we most certainly can not refuse arbitration once it is proposed without placing ourselves in a most humiliating position before the world, and if arbitration is accepted it would undoubtedly result in our defeat. Hence I feel that the matter should be settled in Congress.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. CARDINAL GIBBONS,
Archbishop of Baltimore.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if there is no desire by anyone else to be heard, I move that general debate be now closed.

During the reading of the bill:

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE], chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill. Where is the full report of these cases which are mentioned in the bill?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. The evidence that accompanies each case can be found with the secretary of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, if that is what the gentleman means by the words "full report."

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is what I mean. How many cases are presented here to-day in this bill?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I read the number some time ago. There are 468.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman think that the committee has carefully investigated all of these cases?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. As fully as was possible for us to do so, and as I stated before, the committee has been crippled since the December vacation, inasmuch as there are three or four vacancies on the committee, and inasmuch as several Members who received unpleasant news on election day have not been present. It is possible that some of these matters have crept through where it would otherwise have been prevented.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have frequently called for these full reports here on cases and have never been accorded the courtesy of the production of them. The first bill that was presented to the House at this session has been returned from the Senate and a conference has been held. I make note of two or three entries in that conference report. At the time when this bill passed the House I strenuously opposed several cases included in it. Now, I note to-day the case of Phoebe Cosgriff. The Senate fully exposed her record and refused to pass her bill, as is shown by the conference report. This woman for many years, as this report will show, had been drawing a pension on the pretense that her husband was dead. She has personated herself as the wife of James Cosgriff and secured pension as his widow, claiming he died in December, 1882. This House recently increased her pension by special act. The report I hold in my hand exposes this fraud. The soldier, James Cosgriff, is living and is in the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans.

The dates that she gave of her husband's entry, his death, and his service are false, and the man to-day, as shown by this report, is in an old soldiers' home, alive. I don't suppose the imposter wife ever saw him. He was selected from a list of soldiers supposed to be dead, for pension purpose. The report says:

It is clearly evident that claimant was never the wife or widow of this soldier and has no status on account of the service rendered by him.

As long as the people of my district keep me in this House I expect to continue protesting against pension graft. This committee is not as careful as it should be. Such claims as this should never reach this House. In that same conference report is stricken another case; and while I protested against the passage of the bill, the evidence in the case was not accessible to me then. The full report was not here, but I have the facts to-day in this report. I read from the report:

Case of Sarah J. Kelley (H. R. 14851). In this case the House report is rather meager. From a reading of the House report it would appear that this claimant is entitled to pension through the regular channels, as the Pension Bureau, and that no necessity exists for the consideration of her case by Congress. As a matter of fact, however, it is shown that the claimant has been guilty of open and notorious adulterous cohabitation since soldier's death, and that beginning in 1882, shortly after his death, she has kept houses of ill-fame for many years in New York City, in Newark, Trenton, and Atlantic City, N. J., and Scranton, Pa. It is on this account that her applications for pension at the bureau have been denied.

Mr. Chairman, the Pension Bureau had on file this woman's record, and I contend the committee investigating this pension should have known the facts and presented them to the House. The Pension Bureau rejected her, and this House should not put on the pension roll such characters. I do not believe that a woman who has dishonored the name of her soldier husband, as this applicant has done, should be pensioned and have more pension than those who saw service as war widows. The country will not stand for women of this class receiving more pension by special acts than pure wives of soldiers receive.

Forty-eight years have rolled over our heads since the last gun was fired at Appromattox. To-day there are 497,263 survivors of the Civil War on the pension roll. This does not include widows and children of soldiers. There are 860,294 pensioners on the roll of 1912. There were 660,000 soldiers who saw service in the Confederate Army. Think of it, Mr. Chairman, 200,000 more people drawing pensions than enlisted in that army of the South of four years' duration.

I desire to call especial attention to the fact that there are now on the pension roll 321,932 children of soldiers and widows of soldiers. Where and when will this thing end, if the children of soldiers must now be cared for? Pensions of all wars in the year 1866, two years after the Civil War, amounted to $15,857,714.88; in the year 1886, 20 years later, $67,336,159.51; in the year 1913, about $185,000,000. During last Congress this House passed 9,000 special bills increasing amounts of individual pensions and placing on pension list ineligibles. By this special pension method pensions were increased for favored ones to $30, $50, $75, and $100 per month. The present Congress has not passed one-half so many, although the three previous terms had increased them by thousands. By a hard contest the original Sherwood bill which was slated to pass this Congress was defeated. It gave $30 per month without regard to age or length of service. That bill would have increased the pension roll some $75,000,000. It has been estimated that in the year 1911 there were paid in pensions $159,000,000 or $1.73 per capita. At this per capita Georgia paid in the year 1911, $4,513,779.33. Georgia received in return pension money only $543,353.41, thereby paying an excess of $3,970,426.92. Compare Georgia's burden to Ohio's pension harvest for the year 1911. Ohio paid $8,247,110.33 and received from the fund $15,638,286.83; therefore you can see that Ohio receives for her citizens $7,391,167.50 more than she paid into the pension fund.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MURRAY). The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] has expired.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? There is no objection.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The Committee on Pensions has finally decided to cut down the number of special pensions, and I insert part of the resolution under leave to print. I also insert the general pension act. The special pensions passed by the thousands every term are increases over and above the general law, including deserters, bounty jumpers, and negroes who are not entitled to pension under the general law.

Resolution of committee.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that hereafter, on account of the liberal provisions of the Sherwood bill passed by this Congress, we should only report favorably private bills for increases for those who are beneficiaries under the said law, or any other general law, where the evidence shows that the applicant needs the assistance of an attendant, and only in cases where it is shown that the applicant has little or no income.

ACT OF 1912.

This act grants pensions according to the length of service to persons who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and were honorably discharged, who have reached certain ages, at rates as indicated in the following table:

Length of service.

Age.	90 days.	6 months.	1 year.	1½ years.	2 years.	2½ years.	3 years.
62.....	$13.00	$13.50	$14.00	$14.50	$15.00	$15.50	$16.00
66.....	15.00	15.50	16.00	16.50	17.00	18.00	19.00
70.....	18.00	19.00	20.00	21.50	23.00	24.00	25.00
75.....	21.00	22.50	24.00	27.00	30.00	30.00	30.00

It also grants pensions at the maximum rate, $30 per month, without regard to age or length of service, to persons who served in the military or naval service during the Civil War and received honorable discharges, and who were wounded in battle or in line of duty and are now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line duty resulting in their disabilities are now unable to perform manual labor.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the presence of an error in the bill and ask that the following amendment be inserted in the description of the soldier's service.

The CHAIRMAN. At what place does the gentleman suggest that?

Mr. TAGGART. On line 19, page 67. The service as described in the original bill is in the First Battery Kansas Light Artillery. That is as it was described in the original bill introduced, which is correct. In this bill it reads "Third Battery Kansas Light Artillery."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] moves to amend, at line 19, page 67, by striking out the word "Third" and substituting the word "First." The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 19, page 67, by striking out the word "Third" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "First."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee I move that, in line 15, page 69, in the name of Julia A. Kendall the initial "A" be stricken out and the initial "J" inserted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHERLEY). The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 69, line 15, by striking out the initial "A" and inserting in lieu thereof the initial "J."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill, with amendments, be reported favorably and laid aside for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] moves that the bill, with the amendments, be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN R. FUGILL.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 3967, Private Calendar No. 314.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3967) granting an increase of pension to John R. Fugill.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John R. Fugill, late of Company E, Second Regiment New York Mounted Volunteer Riflemen, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be read a second time for amendment.

The bill was read the second time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] moves that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

MARY MACARTHUR.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 27806, Private Calendar No. 315, granting a pension to Mary MacArthur.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be read for amendment.

There was no objection.

The bill was read for amendment, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary MacArthur, widow of Arthur MacArthur, late lieutenant general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $2,500 per year.

The following committee amendments were read and agreed to:

Amend, line 8, by striking out the figures "$2,500" and inserting the figures "$100."

Amend, line 8, by striking out the word "year" and inserting the word "month."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I will state that this bill was introduced and referred to our committee, asking for $2,500 a year. The committee reduced the amount to $100 per month, or $1,200 a year. This was done in accordance with the action of the committee in similar cases heretofore.

The House passed a bill granting $100 a month to Gen. Bragg's widow, and Gen. MacArthur was equally as distinguished a soldier. If there is any objection to this bill, I will ask its author, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], to further explain its provisions. If there is no objection, I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why is it that you give the widow of a lieutenant general $100 per month and decline to give the widow of a major general more than $30 a month?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that that is so. I do not think it has ever been done by our committee. To what case does the gentleman refer?

Mr. ANTHONY. To the case of the widow of Gen. Wint. That bill, however, was not before your committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. This bill provides that the widow of Gen. MacArthur shall receive $100 per month. The committee has, as a general rule, recommended that amount to widows of those who were generals during the Civil War, but not to such as were made generals since the war.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

INJURIES TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 23451) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property. This is a House bill with Senate amendments. I ask that the Senate amendments be reported. The bill has already passed the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that the Senate amendments be reported. If there be no objection that will be done.

The first Senate amendment was read.

Mr. POU. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to have all the Senate amendments reported?

Mr. POU. I ask unanimous consent that all the Senate amendments be reported, and that they all be concurred in.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection they will all be reported.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. POU. I move that all the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POU. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POU. I move that the committee do now rise and report these sundry bills to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass, and that the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 23451 be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report the same with various amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass; also that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill H. R. 23451 with Senate amendments, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

R. 27874) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported from the Committee of the Whole with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not necessary to read the amendments.

Mr. MANN. It is not customary to read the amendments unless somebody demands a separate vote on some amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is true. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The next business was the bill (S. 2666) granting an increase of pension to William P. Clark.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 28379) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The next business was the bill (S. 7160) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, before making a request for the reading of the engrossed bill, I ask if I can make an inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] touching the action of the committee on these matters?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the gentleman can propound the inquiry. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The question I want to ask the gentleman at this juncture, purely for the information of the House, is as to what action the Committee on Invalid Pensions has taken indicative of the future policy of the committee in regard to these special pension bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the committee has ever since the Sherwood bill passed—realizing that it is a liberal bill—have felt that we should not amend that bill by the passing of special bills, except in cases where the applicant is shown to be so afflicted as to need an attendant, or in cases where the applicant is helpless, poor, and needy. At the last meeting of the committee we passed a resolution to that effect. With the permission of the House, I will ask to have that resolution read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that hereafter, on account of the liberal provisions of the Sherwood bill passed by this Congress, we should only report favorably private bills for increases for those who are beneficiaries under the said law, or any other general law, where the evidence shows that the applicant needs the assistance of an attendant, and only in cases where it is shown that the applicant has little or no income.

We further believe that hereafter where any bill is reported for any applicant shown to have any income, the amount of pension recommended should be reduced below what would otherwise be reasonable by the amount of such income.

And further resolved, That where an applicant has heretofore obtained a pension by special bill, a second special bill should not be passed, unless it is clearly shown by the evidence that he has grown much worse in physical condition than when the former bill was enacted.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 23451) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duty, and other claims for damages for the loss of private property, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported Senate joint resolution 145 to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1913, which was read, and with accompanying report (No. 1383) was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate joint resolution 145.

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1913.

Resolved, etc., That $23,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from the 28th of February to the 10th of March, 1913, both inclusive. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property and fixing fares by public conveyance, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period and fixing fares to be charged for the use of the same. Such regulations shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia; and in such other manner as the commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with the same; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine not to exceed $100 in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days. And the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby likewise appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the construction, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comfort stations and information booths during the period aforesaid.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that it is my purpose to ask the House to consider this resolution some time to-morrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HOWARD, for one week, on account of illness.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 28180).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, with Mr. MOON of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] if he is prepared to take up the amendments pending, or whether he would prefer to have them go over for a time. I am prepared to offer them now.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think we may as well go ahead with the reading of the bill for a while.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers, Ga.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 443, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $40,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida if the $40,000 carried in this item is all that has been recommended by the Board of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers for this project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is the entire amount recommended by the chief and by the board.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have in my hand the document to which the paragraph refers, numbered 443, of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress. Of course the gentleman from Florida is familiar with that document, and he will remember that that contained a resurvey of all these three rivers by Maj. Kingman and others engaged in the work and familiar with it, in which a recommendation was made to inaugurate a different project from that which has been carried on for some years. The gentleman remembers that document and the report of Maj. Kingman, does he not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the recommendation of Maj. Kingman was not approved by the Board of Engineers, and after it was reviewed by the board of review at the instance of those who were interested in the proposed change in the project, it was adversely acted upon by them and reported to the Chief of Engineers and not approved. That is true. That happened in October, 1912. Does the gentleman consider that the $40,000 is all that is necessary to maintain the three rivers in accordance with the project that has been carried for the past several years?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That would depend on how rapidly we may desire to go ahead with the work. Of course, if we propose to move more rapidly than we have been moving for some years past, it would require more money. The trouble with our committee, so far as the appropriation is concerned, is that the engineers have only recommended that amount of expenditure each year.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman means the Board of Engineers and not the local engineers?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; the board in its recent report went over the whole situation, coming practically to the same conclusion as in the original report, namely, that the work be prosecuted with a view to obtaining eventually 4 feet of water instead of 3. It had stated the same thing before, but seemed to be a little more definite in the last report.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the report of Maj. Kingman?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is the report of the board.

Mr. BARTLETT. If that is the report of the board, then this recommendation of the Chief of Engineers or the board does not carry out the suggestion made along that line by Maj. Kingman, for which this committee appropriated $40,000 to carry out the suggestions of the report as contained in these papers which I hold in my hand.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That was a project recommended upon a survey ordered by Congress itself.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; in 1909.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And the parties interested. Members of Congress from that State, thinking the report did not go far enough and that it might be reexamined with profit, came to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and asked for a committee resolution requesting the reexamination of the report, which was granted, and a reexamination made with about the same result except, as I said, the recommendation is a little stronger perhaps in favor of the 4-foot project than the other was.

Mr. BARTLETT. The $40,000 would not aid in obtaining the 4-foot project.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The engineers seem to think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In this report of the Board of Engineers containing their recommendations, the board says—the gentleman will find it on page 3 of the report, the latter part, second paragraph: "The annual expenditure of $40,000 proposed by the board"——

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not the same report as that from which the gentleman is reading.

Mr. SPARKMAN (reading)—

As being justified is sufficient to keep these rivers clear of snags and the worse obstructions and perhaps to increase the depth somewhat over the most obstructive shoals. This will provide for light-draft navigation at a cost fairly commensurate with the commerce involved; and such navigation is all that practically could be obtained except at prohibitive expense. The board therefore adhers to its former recommendation that such an annual appropriation be made for these streams, to be expended in securing and maintaining such depth as is practicable within the proposed limit of 4 feet.

By the use of the words "within the proposed limit of 4 feet" they perhaps make the language a little bit stronger than it was before.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the present project for which money has been spent has not been for 4 feet but for 3 feet.

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BARTLETT. No.

Mr. SPARKMAN. They go on in the report the gentleman has in his hand, the report adopted in the bill of 1912, and suggest that an expenditure of $40,000 per year be made for the maintenance of this depth of 3 feet with the ultimate purpose of obtaining a greater depth.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now I want to say to the gentleman and the committee that the action of the Board of Engineers upon this last hearing we had in October has not been accessible to me, and I have not been able to procure it in order to present what they say in reference to it. It had not been printed on Tuesday last, when I called at the office of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, I have it here, what might be called the original print of it. We have not formally printed it yet. Would the gentleman like to have it?

Mr. BARTLETT. If it is not too long to put in the RECORD—some of it at least—I would desire to have that done. I have not been able to see it for the reason it had not been printed on last Tuesday.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, the gentleman will find it practically the same recommendation that was made by the board and chief engineer on the project which we adopted.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to state I applied for it several times, and last Tuesday I went to the Chief Engineer's office and read it in manuscript, but it had not then been sent to the printer and had not been printed where it was accessible so as to be used. Would the gentleman be willing to have this put in the RECORD, or certain portions of it?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is quite lengthy.

Mr. BARTLETT. I simply want to put in the RECORD the first three pages.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman include that in his remarks?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report of the Chief of Engineers transmitting a report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors on the Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers, Ga., being Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 10, be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to print the matter mentioned in the RECORD as part of his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, United States. Document No. 10, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, December 23, 1912.

Hon. S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: (1) Acknowledging receipt of letter dated July 19, 1912, from the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, transmitting resolution of the committee, dated July 10, 1912, relative to a reconsideration of the reports on examination and survey of Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers, Ga., printed in House Document No. 443, Sixty-second Congress, second session, there are transmitted herewith copies of reports dated October 11, 1912, by Col. Dan C. Kingman, Corps of Engineers, and December 16, 1912, by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, in response thereto.

(2) I concur in the opinion expressed by the board that a change in the previous recommendation is not warranted or advisable at the present time.

Very respectfully,
W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BOARD OF ENGINEERS FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1912.

From: The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors.
To: The Chief of Engineers, United States Army.
Subject: Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers, Ga.

1. The board has the honor to submit its report in response to the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, That the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors created under section 3 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, be requested to reconsider report on preliminary examination and survey of Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers, Ga., printed in House Document No. 443, Sixty-second Congress, second session."

2. To assist in determining present conditions and any changes, physical or commercial, that have taken place since the date of the report referred to in the resolution the board requested and received a report covering these matters from the district officer, which is forwarded herewith. In addition to information thus secured, a hearing was given in the office of the board October 21, 1912, which was attended by Hon. W. G. BRANTLEY, M. C., Hon. D. M. HUGHES, M. C., the district officer, and a delegation of citizens from the principal towns on the rivers. Much interest in the subject was displayed, and a recommendation was urged for a definite project of larger scope than the existing one.

3. The present project was authorized by the river and harbor act of July 25, 1912, which adopted the plan of improvement recommended by the Chief of Engineers in the House document under consideration. This project, as stated in the annual report for 1912, provides for maintenance of 3-foot depth during ordinary summer low water up to Milledgeville and Macon, and to the gradual increase of channel depths, so far as practicable, without sacrificing the maintenance work. There seems to be some misapprehension as to the method of improvement that may be followed in securing the increased depths referred to. This has been interpreted by some to require a progressive deepening at each shoal in order to secure first a slight increase of depth throughout the entire length under improvement and then successive enlargements of the depths so obtained, thus involving frequent operations and largely increased cost for providing the ultimate depth at any locality. The board understands, however, that the project imposes no such limitation, but is intended to permit the radical treatment of any shoal in one operation so as to obtain such increased depth within the 4-foot limit as may be considered practicable and most advantageous whenever funds are available in excess of what is necessary for purposes of maintenance.

4. The district officer states that a depth of 3 feet is not sufficient to enable commerce to be carried 300 or 400 miles; that a boat can not carry enough freight to pay expenses; that the work done thus far has rather tended to permit light-draft boats to act as feeders to the railroads and has not yet led to the development of a through service.

5. In years past traffic was carried on many shallow streams for long distances because there were no other means of transportation. Since the advent of railroads the tendency has been to do what the district officer cites in this case—use light-draft navigation for short distances to connect with railroads and not compete with them on long hauls. The same argument would apply with a 4-foot depth as with a 3-foot depth, only to a less degree. When a depth of 4 feet is available, the demand is for 5 or 6 feet, usually the latter, it being claimed that the increase is necessary to bring about the desired results. What is now urged has been tried elsewhere with disappointing results. No instance is known where a stream having the characteristics of these rivers has been improved by open-channel methods such as are now proposed by the district officer so as to provide a continuous 4-foot navigation, and it is not believed that such a depth would be secured with the estimated expenditure. Moreover, experience elsewhere indicates that these streams should not be expected to develop a large and important commerce on a depth of 4 feet, even if such depth were feasible within reasonable limits of cost.

6. The board fully appreciates the great resources of the section of country through which these streams flow, as was ably brought out at the hearing, and it realizes that a commodious and continuously navigable waterway would be of great value to the community.

7. It is faced, however, with certain physical data relative to slope, discharge, and character of bottom and banks that must be given consideration, and when this is done it leads to the conclusion that it is not advisable to undertake to develop within specified lines a project depth of 4 feet on these streams, as it believes the cost, even if such project were feasible, would be out of reasonable proportion to the amount of commerce that would be benefited. The annual expenditure of $40,000 proposed by the board as being justified is sufficient to keep these rivers clear of snags and the worst obstructions and perhaps to increase the depth somewhat over the most obstructive shoals. This will provide for light-draft navigation at a cost fairly commensurate with the commerce involved, and such navigation is practically all that could be obtained except at prohibitive expense. The board therefore adheres to its former recommendation that such an annual appropriation be made for these streams, to be expended in securing and maintaining such depth as is practicable within the proposed limit of 4 feet.

For the board:

WM. T. ROSSELL,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers,
Senior Member of the Board.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is one more question I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida, if he will indulge me for a moment. That is, from the funds on hand from the unexpended balance of the last appropriation and the appropriation made in this bill of $40,000 there will be then for the purposes of this maintenance——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. There will be on hand, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, for the maintenance of this project, $62,000. Am I correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not recall the figures, but there is a balance on hand——

Mr. BARTLETT. It was $22,377.33; and so with the present appropriation——

Mr. SPARKMAN. According to the last report there will be $102,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. That would be ample for all the present needs?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should think so; certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Coosa River, Georgia and Alabama: Completing construction of lock and dam at Mayos Bar, near Rome, Ga., $30,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance between Rome, Ga., and Dam No. 4, Alabama, $25,000; and completing construction of lock in Dam No. 4 and the construction of Dam No. 5, in the State of Alabama, $81,000; in all, $136,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] tell us whether this dam construction is for purposes of navigation or is it for purposes of water power?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is a navigation proposition.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. It has nothing to do with water power; but this improvement was made for a dam, and the report was made by the engineer before the question of water power was taken up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving St. Lucie Inlet, Fla., in accordance with the smaller project recommended by the Chief of Engineers in the report submitted in House Document No. 675, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $100,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice there are about 25 items coming up from the State of Florida for rivers or streams which, I presume, are needing improvement. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if any of these streams are intended for purposes of drainage or to connect with the drainage system of the Everglades?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The State of Florida is taking care of the expense of the drainage system?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, Florida is a waterways State and has a great many rivers, and I am very glad the committee has taken care of those rivers, and particularly of the inlet which we are considering at this time, but the improvement of none of these rivers contemplates any connection with the existing Florida State drainage canal system?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving St. Johns River, Fla.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance from Jacksonville to the ocean, $550,000; completing improvement and for maintenance from Jacksonville to Palatka, $19,600; completing improvement from Palatka to Lake Harney, $42,200; in all, $611,800.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Of what depth is this project—26 feet?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The one from Jacksonville to the ocean?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Thirty feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the commerce of Jacksonville increasing constantly?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is increasing quite rapidly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not true an inland waterway is complete now from Jacksonville via St. Augustine and all the way down to Key West, a distance of 500 miles?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Practically so; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A small boat can traverse the entire distance inland without being in danger of storms outside?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Practically so, as I understand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is only one railroad traversing the east coast of Florida?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Only one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And all the commerce, from Tampa to Key West, is bound to go over that road?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; so far as railroad transportation is concerned. Tampa is, however, on the west side of Florida, while this railroad is on the east side.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And there is no railway competition from Jacksonville south on the east coast of Florida?

Mr. SPARKMAN. There is none south; no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a continuous inland waterway that has been recently opened up between St. Augustine and Jacksonville, thus connecting with Key West, which, if improved, might furnish a means of transporting commerce?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is an improved waterway belonging to private parties for a part of the distance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With capital put in there from the outside, some of it being foreign capital?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say further that there is a survey pending, I believe, for the entire distance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell me whether the city of Jacksonville extends on both sides of the St. Johns River?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The city, I believe, is entirely on one side. There is a small town on the south or east side.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Ferryboats run across, do they?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Ferryboats run across from one city to the other, do they not?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the two sides of the city of Jacksonville represent but one authority? There is but one municipality?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I could not say as to that. Perhaps the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, the St. Johns River does bisect the city of Jacksonville?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I would not say that. It may be that the municipality of Jacksonville extends its jurisdiction to the other side, but I could not say positively, as I am not familiar with the limits of the city.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the mayor have jurisdiction on the other side?

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the city limits extend there, I fancy the jurisdiction of the mayor would extend there also; but I am not sure that the city limits extend to the south side.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman understands what I am after.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, Ala.: Completing improvement from Mobile to Sanders Shoals on the Mulberry Fork and to Nichols Shoals on the Locust Fork of Black Warrior River by the construction of locks and dams, including the 63-foot dam at Lock No. 17, authorized by act of Congress approved August 22, 1911, $1,338,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this 63-foot dam is to be constructed for water-power purposes?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TAYLOR] may answer that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, that improvement that is under discussion now is the one that we thrashed out so thoroughly and in which we took such a prominent and active and useful part in 1911, when we adopted the project for the 63-foot channel. It does not now contemplate water power because it was thrown out in that act. It covers only navigation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The committee brings it in purely as a matter of navigation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Yes; purely as a matter of navigation, except this, that under the act the engineers were required so to erect the dam that power would in time be furnished for future disposal if the Government saw proper to develop it in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Pascagoula, Miss.: For maintenance of improvement of channel at the mouths of Pascagoula and Dog Rivers, and for continuing improvements and extending said channel through Mississippi Sound and Horn Island Pass to the Gulf of Mexico in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 682, Sixty-second Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $110,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a great deal of comment has been indulged in in this House from time to time about Raccoon Creek, and representatives of that section have been called upon to explain the commerce there, which they can very readily do. I would like to know something about the commerce on Dog River. Here is an appropriation of $110,000 to improve the harbor at Pascagoula, Miss., and also to fix up the mouth of the Dog River. If this is a matter of commerce and navigation, of course I have no objection to it. But I should like to know just what warrant there is for making an appropriation of $110,000 for this purpose at this time. Is it urgent, as we are told in the report, all of these paragraphs are?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, Dog River is really a part of the harbor at Pascagoula. It simply marks the northern limits of it. But I yield to my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who represents the Pascagoula section.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was inquiring what there is of commerce on the Dog River, present or prospective.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Well, the commerce on the Dog River, or that part of it that together with Pascagoula River form the harbor at Pascagoula, last year was six and one-half million dollars. The commerce on the Leaf and Chickasawhay Rivers, which run into and form the Pascagoula River, was about $1,000,000 last year. On the Dog River proper, excepting that part embodied in this project, there is no commerce except in logs, but they approximate it at about a million dollars. This proposition here is a new project which the gentleman may be attacking——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not attacking it. I am asking questions for information.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I am very glad to hear that. Have I given the gentleman the information he desires?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to know about it because the appropriation is fixed at $110,000, and it is reported as being urgent. Raccoon Creek, which is the subject of critical comment, gets in this bill $13,000. The tonnage on Raccoon Creek was in excess of 58,000 last year. I wanted to know what the commerce of the Dog River was.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What would happen if Raccoon Creek and Dog River came into close proximity? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am afraid Dog River would get the bulk of the appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want to say to the gentleman, if he will permit, that this is an urgent project. It was recommended by the Army Board of Engineers some time ago. It is to increase the depth of Pascagoula Harbor, which includes part of the Dog River, from 17 feet, its present depth, to a depth of 22 feet. The original estimate of the Army Board of Engineers for a 17-foot depth at Pascagoula Harbor was for approximately the amount that the 22-foot depth is going to cost.

In this connection I might say that the Army Board of Engineers and this Rivers and Harbors Committee have placed a condition upon this project that the people of this locality shall not only furnish public wharves at Moss Point and at Pascagoula that will cost approximately $50,000, but they are to put up $100,000 in addition thereto, notwithstanding the fact that the estimated cost of the project is only $383,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to say that it is a great tribute to his ability as a Member of Congress and as a Representative of this district that he can take out of this bill $110,000 for Dog River when we can get only $13,000 for Raccoon Creek. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this $110,000 is not for Dog River, as I have stated. It is for the harbor at Pascagoula, that goes up Dog River only a part of the way. It is for the improvement of that great harbor that we hope in the course of time to rival the magnificent harbor in the gentleman's city of Philadelphia.

Mr. DAVIDSON. This is for only a part of the Dog. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Removing the water hyacinth, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas: For the removal of the water hyacinth from the navigable waters in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, so far as it is or may become an obstruction to navigation, $15,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman make it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will make it. I was perfectly willing to reserve it in order to have the item explained. If the chairman of the committee does not care to explain the item, I will make the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to make the point of order, I hope he will make it now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will reserve it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall be very glad to reserve it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the point, in order that the gentleman may explain the item.

Mr. SPARKMAN. This is an item that has been carried in this bill for several years—I do not remember just how long. Some years ago it was ascertained that the water hyacinth in many of the navigable rivers of Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas had become a serious obstruction to navigation in those streams, and in one of the river and harbor bills—perhaps in that of 1902—Congress began the appropriations for the removal of this obstruction, and we have continued to carry them in the bills from that time until now. I think every bill since then has had an item for that purpose in it. I will say, further, for the benefit of the gentleman, that while great headway has been made in relieving the rivers from this pest, there is a great deal yet to be done. In fact, I do not know that we will ever see the time when the water hyacinth will disappear entirely from these southern streams. Perhaps some more effective method of destruction will be found, but at present I can see no end to the necessity for these appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I contend that there is no law warranting this appropriation. The gentleman states that it has grown up as a matter of custom, and has been carried in this bill for years. It can not be regarded as the continuation of a work in the course of construction, on which many rulings have been made in this House. I cite for the benefit of the Chair that paragraph of the Manual to be found in section 820. It has been held frequently by chairmen since then that by public works or objects already in progress, under the Holman rule, are meant tangible matters like buildings, roads, and so forth, and not the duties of officials in executive departments, or the continuance of a work indefinite as to completion and intangible in nature, like the gauging of streams.

I think the Chair is familiar with a variety of rulings that have confirmed this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman say as to the proposition that the general law authorizes appropriations to remove obstructions to navigation?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is opposed to this on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On that ground and on the other ground that it is not a continuation of a public work.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the rivers and harbors bill is not considered to be a general appropriation bill, and that legislation, as a matter of fact, is in order upon it. Of course, the Chair is familiar with that fact. The engineers have certified that vegetation is an obstruction to navigation, and in providing for it we are providing for the removal of obstructions to navigation, which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. I call the attention of the Chair to this decision, that "the river and harbor bill is not one of the general appropriation bills and is not subject to their restrictions as to legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken, and the Chair overrules it. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bayou Teche, La.: Completing improvement and for maintenance, $40,000.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, to be introduced as an additional paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following:
"Improving Bayou Terrebonne, La.: The proviso in the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, for improving Bayou Terrebonne, La., be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: 'Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any land required for the purpose of this improvement.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Brazos River, Tex.: Continuing improvement from Old Washington to Waco by the construction of locks and dams heretofore authorized and commencing the construction of two additional locks and dams, $250,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance by open-channel work from Velasco to Old Washington, $25,000; in all, $275,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the sum appropriated for the improvement of the Brazos River is expected to be used within the next year?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; that is the expectation. In fact, I think that if the engineers were asked about it they would say that they could expend more money this year.

Mr. FOSTER. Have not they got more money there now than they can take care of in the building of the dam?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No. Last June there were $237,000 on hand, but I fancy some of that has been expended since then.

Mr. BURGESS. I will say to the gentleman that this is the estimate made by the Board of Engineers of the amount that is necessary and required before the ensuing year has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the $25,000 for maintenance by open-channel work?

Mr. BURGESS. That is the open-channel work carried in all river and harbor bills, removal of snags, and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER. Improving the mouth of the Brazos River?

Mr. BURGESS. That is the maintenance of the harbor.
Mr. FOSTER. How much commerce is there there now?
Mr. BURGESS. There is not much now.
Mr. FOSTER. Is there likely to be much when they get through?
Mr. BURGESS. I think so, undoubtedly.
Mr. FOSTER. How much commerce passes over it in a year?
Mr. BURGESS. Very little passes over it, for the want of the completion of the locks and dams.
Mr. EDWARDS. It is in such shape that commerce can not now pass over it.
Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think it ever will?
Mr. EDWARDS. Oh, yes; there are great opportunities there.
Mr. BURGESS. Undoubtedly.
Mr. FOSTER. Is this a better proposition than Trinity River in Texas in reference to navigation?
Mr. SPARKMAN. Probably the gentleman from Texas would not like to answer that question.
Mr. FOSTER. Then I will withdraw the question. But I would say that if it was not better than Trinity River it would not amount to much and would be money thrown away.
Mr. SPARKMAN. I think the two rivers are on a par as to importance.
Mr. FOSTER. Then I would not think much of any of it.
Mr. SPARKMAN. I differ with the gentleman about that. I know there has been some criticism as to these rivers and the scheme of improvement; especially is it true with regard to Trinity River. I have never concurred in those criticisms. I have studied the situation and have been somewhat impressed with the possibilities of developing a large commerce on each stream.

I should be very much deceived if the future does not bear out that opinion of mine. Both of those rivers flow through a very fertile section of country. They extend up into the interior quite a distance. I can not see myself why, when the lock and dam system is completed——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to get the opinion of the gentleman from Florida whether the Brazos River, in Texas, has about the same commercial importance as the Trinity River, in Texas. I think he stated a moment ago that that was his opinion. I want to get it now, so that it will be understood that that is the case.
Mr. SPARKMAN. Is that the question?
Mr. FOSTER. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.
Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. SPARKMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon an answer?
Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that they are of about the same commercial importance.
Mr. SPARKMAN. I think so. That is my judgment.
Mr. FOSTER. I do not believe there is anyone in the House who would seriously contend that all of the money that we have expended on the Trinity River has been of any very great practical benefit to commerce, and if that is also true of the Brazos River, then what we are expending on these two rivers is so much money thrown away.
Mr. EDWARDS. But does the gentleman take into consideration the fact that the Trinity, like the Brazos, has not yet been completed; that the improvements have not gone far enough to develop whether a commerce can be developed there?
Mr. FOSTER. I would state that the Trinity River has been under improvement for a great many years. I think it was stated at one time that we are in the process of drilling wells down there to pump water so as to make the Trinity River navigable. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I am trying to get some information about those rivers down there for which Congress is asked to appropriate money each year. If one is not of very much more importance than the other, then neither is of very great importance.
Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think that lack of water in a river is a detriment to its improvement?
Mr. FOSTER. Of course I do not, but there ought to be some chance for improvement.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think I can say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], having made some investigation of this matter—and I think this will be supported by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS]—there is no commerce of any consequence upon either the Brazos or the Trinity River. Each is about 500 miles long, and the project contemplates that in certain seasons of the year there will be a possible depth of 4 feet of water.
Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the gentleman if that is at a certain season when they have more rain than at another season that they will have a channel of 4 feet?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At certain seasons of the year they have more water than at other seasons of the year.
Mr. FOSTER. And it is during the flood season that they have a 4-foot channel?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think there is something in that.
Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that the project depth of the Trinity River is 6 feet.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And of the Brazos 4?
Mr. SPARKMAN. I believe that is correct.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to repeat what I have said on one or two occasions, that I think the Member of Congress who works as assiduously for his district and for the people he represents as do some of the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is entitled to very great praise on the part of those whom he represents, and I know of no man in Congress who has done so much for his people and is so much entitled to their thanks as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS]. In the matter of the Trinity and Brazos Rivers, it does not appear that we are making these improvements, running up into millions of dollars as the projects read, solely for the purposes of navigation. It does appear that we are building locks and dams to create water as we go along. We are creating pools, as it were, and thus establishing the basis for that ultimate commerce and navigation which is expected in the course of time. The projects indicate that up to the present time those who have been employed in making improvements on these streams have been engaged very largely in digging out the logs that obstruct the boats, in cutting the branches of overhanging trees, in removing snags (and that is a very large and important part of the work), and I have no objection to it, because it helps to irrigate the country, and perhaps it is important in the way of sanitation and assists in the reclaiming of the very fertile lands that border these streams. The only point I am making is this, that if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS] and the other members of the committee are to receive large appropriations which their constituents demand that they shall get for the purpose of removing snags and cutting down the limbs of trees that hang over the streams that interfere with the bateaux that come and go, then when the question of commerce and navigation is really under consideration they ought to give cheerful thought to the need of commerce where it exists.

Now, I am not going to oppose the paragraph. You will see this is a very large appropriation; in the instance of the Brazos it is $275,000 for the next year, a sum which will be used not only for the removal of the snags but to pay the storage of some materials that are needed for the construction of locks and dams when the time shall come for the construction of locks and dams. Of course, we have everything on the ground and are prepared to proceed with this work of construction. I am not opposing that, but I am drawing the attention of these influential gentlemen upon this highly influential committee to the fact that there are real live commercial projects in the country that are being held back and that commerce itself is being delayed, and that the railroad companies are continuing their monopoly upon transportation while these gentlemen are spending money in accordance with the wishes of their constituents upon these minor streams.
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.
Mr. HUMPRHEYS of Mississippi. The Trinity River, for instance, and the Brazos both have as much commerce upon them now as the Panama Canal, have they not?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes; because the Panama Canal is not open.
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Exactly, and for the same reason these rivers are not open.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] for the tribute he paid me for looking after the interests of my people, but I think he overdraws the picture. The Brazos and Trinity Rivers were on the books of the Rivers and Harbors Committee when I became a member of the committee 10 years ago and I have been struggling along to bring them somewhere near completion. They are not yet anywhere near completion, and at the rate we are going it will be 15 years before they are completed. The facts about both of those rivers are these: They both extend north from the Gulf into the heart of as good a country as the United States possesses. Thousands of bales of cotton are raised on both sides of both rivers and so are other products. The railroads traverse that country. But we are in the worst state in Texas of any State in the Union on the question of rates, and the improvement of both of these rivers will do more than anything this Congress can do to relieve that situation. Now the Trinity River before I came to Congress was on the books. There was talk made and it was believed by a great many people that there was not water enough in section 1—that is, the Dallas section—to make a canalization of the river. When I came on the committee I found a serious contention about that matter. Mr. BURTON was in doubt about it. I said, "Well, we are pursuing the policy of improving rivers generally from the mouth up, and I think that is right," but I suggested with reference to the Trinity River that we ought to make an exception of that matter as we have with the improvement of the Ohio. We have spent more on the improvement of the Ohio River 23 miles below Pittsburgh than in all the 800 other miles of that river. Why? Because there is where commerce originates; there is where commerce is to be benefited; and so with the Trinity River, reaching 500 miles through a rich territory to Dallas, a great distributing center of agricultural machinery and everything of that sort. It is the greatest distributing center of agricultural machinery in the world, I will say in passing, but the freight rates are enormous, and to develop that river down to the sea will bring an immense benefit to all this country.

Mr. BURTON finally agreed to begin to improve the Trinity River in section 1. Now we have not quite got section 1 improved, but we have got enough improved to forever shut the mouths of those who talked about "wells for water." There is water enough and to spare to canalize the river. That has been demonstrated by what work has been accomplished; and I tell you now that if we go on in this work it will be one of the best investments that the River and Harbor Committee makes. I am disposed to repel the compliment the gentleman paid me; I am disposed to say I do not believe Texas has got enough money to improve these rivers; I believe other rivers have gotten more than my rivers have. There are other rivers in the country; the Brazos is not the only river, the Trinity is not the only river, but we have to do the best we can and that is what I have tried to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it was rather unkind for the gentleman from Illinois to compare the Brazos with the Trinity.

The Trinity River enjoys the unique distinction as the stream with regard to which the Army engineers reported that it would aid largely in making it navigable if a large number of artesian wells were sunk near the head of the stream. Now, no such report has been made as that of the noble Brazos, though it has been suggested, and there is no doubt but that there is much sound sense in the suggestion, that it would be infinitely cheaper to macadamize the Brazos than to canalize it, which is the term, I believe, used by the gentleman from Texas. He encourages us, however, to believe that we may some day be able to complete the work now contemplated on this stream, innocent as yet of any navigation whatever or of any seeming disposition on the part of the people in the locality to use it. He says, however, that it will require 15 years at the present rate of progress to canalize the Brazos, and, taking the gentleman's own figures, $4,130,000 must be spent in addition to the one or two million of dollars which we have already placed on this noble stream or sunk in its infrequent pools before we have reached a point where the Brazos might have water enough in the channels between the numerous locks to float a flatboat, provided anyone desired so to do.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman seems to be so thoroughly familiar with this stream——

Mr. MONDELL. Everybody knows about the Brazos.

Mr. EDWARDS (continuing). But I would like to know something of these artesian wells to which he has referred, that have been sunk.

Mr. MONDELL. I was told yesterday the committee always followed the report of the engineers, and I want to ask the gentleman if they have followed the report and recommendation of the engineers in that matter of artesian wells for watering the noble Trinity.

Mr. EDWARDS. We considered that, as we frequently consider the gentleman from Wyoming, as somewhat of a joke on rivers and harbors matters, and did not follow it out.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, if the Army engineers are given to joking in regard to these matters, that explains many of the jokes perpetrated on the American people in appropriations like this, for the purpose of digging out snags, cutting down the overhanging cypress, felling the weeping willow that hangs over the bank, and making an earnest endeavor by the expenditure of large sums of money to bring the water from the numerous pools at intervals along in the streams, trickling across the dry stretches that intervene.

This is a noble work. It is worthy of a great committee. More than all, it is monumental of the energy and of the influence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS], a member of this committee. How unfortunate it will be for the Brazos and for the Trinity should the time ever come that those noble highways of commerce will fail to have a representative upon this committee.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. EDWARDS. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] recognizes that ex-Chairman BURTON, of Ohio, is an excellent authority on waterways, does he not?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the gentleman not know that this item went on the bill when Mr. BURTON was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, and has been voted under Republican administrations since then?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it went on while Mr. BURTON was chairman, because the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS] has just informed us they began to do business on the Brazos away yonder before BURTON came here. But I do know that even so great a man——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming has just received an extension of five minutes. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming, to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to one question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He does not think the business of the Brazos and Trinity originated with Mr. BURTON without the assistance of the present Representative?

Mr. MONDELL. No one would suggest that, because that would take all the credit from the gentleman who represents the district. Mr. BURTON is an honorable man and a conscientious gentleman, but, like all that have had to do with rivers and harbors appropriations, he has felt the compelling force of the aggregations of influences in and out of Congress under which a river and harbor bill is finally put together.

Mr. BURGESS. What I said was, that the present improvement of the Trinity River was under Mr. BURTON's administration when he was chairman of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the present improvement, the gentleman tells us——

Mr. BURGESS. And he agreed to it——

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). Went on while Mr. BURTON was there, and Mr. BURTON often confessed, and for the good of his soul, on the floor of this House that he did not approve all the items in the bill.

Mr. BURGESS. I never heard him confess that.

Mr. MONDELL. The Brazos and the Trinity are perhaps the most illuminating examples of how gentlemen, members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, may find a necessity, a compelling demand, for the expenditure of public money in the pulling of stumps, in the cutting down of overhanging trees, in the removal of dry and sun-baked sandbars, which occur along what are, in times of flood, the channels of so-called streams. Of course no one expects that up to the crack of doom there will ever be business enough go down the Trinity and the Brazos to in any way repay any portion of the moneys which have been expended on them.

But while that is true, and while that is known to be true by all who have ever investigated the matter, I am again reminded that no such trivial and inconsequential things as facts can in any way influence any item in this carefully prepared, properly proportioned, and perfectly buttressed piece of legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDWARDS. Facts apply only to irrigation and pasturage propositions in Wyoming. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. No one ever suggests the impropriety of spending millions of the people's money for the purpose of keeping some gentleman's constituents employed and happy but that some one rises up and suggests that we ought not to use money secured not by taxation but by sale of lands for the purpose of building works the cost of which is returned by the people who are ultimately to purchase and own them; and if the gentlemen can not see the difference between the two propositions, I am sorry for them. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

[Mr. BEALL of Texas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] prefaced his remarks with the statement that it was very apparent that the gentleman from Wyoming could not be expected to support appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Of course, the gentleman from Texas I do not expect will keep track of my legislative activities or keep himself informed in regard to matters I have supported. I have served here nearly eight terms. During that time I have voted for every river and harbor bill save one that has passed either on a roll call or by viva voce vote, if I was here. I have often done so, however, with much mental reservation. I have done so because I believe in legitimate river and harbor work, and not because I was enamored of every item in the bills. I shall vote for this bill, but with regret as to many items.

During the time I have been a member of this House we have appropriated $452,384,782.11 for river and harbor improvement. The good State of Texas has participated in these appropriations to the extent of $24,302,529.60. One harbor alone in that imperial Commonwealth has had from the Treasury, of the money collected from the people, over $10,000,000. I have voted for all the bills carrying these appropriations; yet the gentleman from Texas suggests that the gentleman from Wyoming can be depended upon to oppose river and harbor appropriations.

Because I do believe in river and harbor appropriations, because I am in favor of liberal river and harbor appropriations, because those people whom I have the honor to represent favor river and harbor appropriations, I shall expect to support river and harbor bills in the future as in the past; and yet every man who has served in this House who took the trouble to inquire knows that many appropriations for rivers and harbors in the past have had no justification whatever from any standpoint; that millions of dollars of the public money have been wasted; that many improvements have been undertaken where there was neither present nor prospective commerce. There has been an improvement in this regard in the past few years. It is not so long ago that the river and harbor bill smelled so strong, its stench so rose to heaven, that for a time there was a question as to whether the people of the country generally would not be inclined to disregard the demands that were made for appropriations of this character, except for the great seaports of the Nation. Then came something of a reform. Gentlemen all know when it came and how it came. A man was placed at the head of the committee who had knowledge and courage, and, so far as it was possible for him to do it, aided by his colleagues, he brought about a better condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, we must make some headway. I dislike very much to object to these extensions.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust I may have as much time as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] had.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like very much to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that I can get the time later, but I prefer to have it now.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We must get through.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida object?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall not object now, but I give notice at this time that I am going to try to induce the Chairman to hold each gentleman down to the subject matter when he moves to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, better conditions came. Many items that had long been carried by sufferance and toleration were stricken from the bill, and many others that should have been stricken from the bill were not so stricken. I shall not say that either the Brazos or the Trinity River should have been permanently eliminated. I do not claim that detail of information for which the genial gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] gives me credit, but one does not have to be well informed upon this subject to know these streams. They have been discussed so much and their extraordinary character is so widely known that one who does not know about them is ignorant indeed.

The Constitution gives the Federal Government control over rivers and harbors, and the people of the United States long since embarked upon the policy of improving our great harbors and our great rivers. I am now and always have been and always expect to be in harmony with that work. I stand ready to vote at any time all the money that may be needed for the purpose of making available to the commerce of our country and the world the great rivers and harbors of the Nation; that is a national work. I go further than that. I do not object to that policy which we have inaugurated, entered upon, and pursued—though the gentlemen who are supporting this bill largely refuse to acknowledge it—of spending the money of the people for purely local purposes, for local transportation, with a view to affording water transportation for small communities; and while I doubt constitutional authority for that, we long since adopted the policy, and far be it from me to say that we shall absolutely discontinue it.

But while we are possibly justified in doing that for the benefit of local communities, I do think that this committee ought to see to it that when such expenditures are made they are so made that there is some hope that at some time there will be sufficient commerce to in some small way repay the enormous expenditure. My opinion is—and it is my opinion only, and it is no better than the opinion of any other gentleman here—that there never will come a time when there will be commerce enough on the Brazos or the Trinity Rivers to warrant the enormous expenditure heretofore made and contemplated for the future. This is a great country. In other localities of the country there are streams the improvement of which would afford local opportunities for transportation. They are largely overlooked because, perchance, we began our improvements on these streams, and, perchance, the gentlemen who happened to represent those particular districts are active, forceful, making a specialty, a profession, if you please, of securing river and harbor improvements.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] talked about the high freight rates, the monopoly under which they are suffering. Mr. Chairman, I have always given the great State of Texas credit for being, of all the Commonwealths of the Union, the one which had more completely than any other solved the problem of reducing its great railway corporations to a condition of proper service of the people at reasonable rates.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. Out in the country in which I live we have some streams which might be dredged to 4 feet. Why, we have streams that have 4 feet of water without any dredging, and we might ask the Federal Government to make them navigable. We are dependent on the railroads. We must protect ourselves against high rates, and yet we do not expect that the Federal Government shall furnish us with transportation from one end of our Commonwealth to the other, and least of all would we base a request or demand for such assistance on the plea that we have not the courage or the ability to control our own railway corporations.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman understands that the shipment of cotton referred to by the gentleman from Texas is on through bills of lading from Texas points either to European points or from Texas points to the East; does the gentleman think that the railway commission of Texas has the right to fix those rates or regulate them?

Mr. MONDELL. We have an Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; but the gentleman criticizes the State of Texas for its failure to regulate these railroads. Does the gentleman believe, under the Constitution, that the State of Texas has the power?

Mr. MONDELL. That is only one small feature of this proposition; in fact, there is little commerce of any kind——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But that is one feature of the criticism made by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). Over the swelling bosom of the Brazos.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is that the only answer the gentleman has to my question?

Mr. MONDELL. What?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The one the gentleman has just made to the question, that the State of Texas was a proper subject of the criticism aimed at it because the railroad commission of Texas failed to regulate interstate rates.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not criticized the State of Texas; I have defended the State of Texas against the gentleman who preceded me. I believe Texas and its people can and will and measurably do protect themselves in all these matters; and it amazes me greatly that the gentleman from Texas was pleading for the expenditure of Federal money to canalize streams that ought to be macadamized [laughter], on the theory that Texas can not protect herself from her railroads——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Read"!]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Trinity River, Tex.: Continuing improvement with a view to obtaining a depth of 6 feet between the mouth and Dallas by the construction of locks and dams heretofore authorized and commencing the construction of two additional locks and dams, $255,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance by open-channel work, $15,000; in all, $270,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have always been in favor of improving every portion of the United States. I believe that every Member of this House ought to be broad enough to legislate for the entire country and be broad minded and patriotic enough to be pleased with the development of every portion of this great country. This is the first time during the four years that I have been a Member of this House that I have said a word on the river and harbor bill. But it does seem to me, in view of the colloquy between the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and these gentlemen from Texas, that it is appropriate at this time to call the attention of the gentlemen from Texas to the fact that it does appear to us of the West that their magnanimity and patriotism hardly reaches out as broadly over this country of ours as it should. When we of the West, representing the new States struggling for development, with a representation of only about 5 per cent of the membership on the floor of this House; when we are outrageously hindered and wrongfully retarded in our development by the action of this Government in withdrawing and hermetically sealing up hundreds of millions of acres of public land that ought to be open to settlement, thereby driving hundreds of thousands of our best people to Canada for homes; when Canada is pursuing a sane and common-sense public-land policy and is tremendously prosperous; and when we of the West, who can never get a dollar or any direct benefit from all these hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated out of the Treasury for alleged rivers and harbors, come before this House, as we did this morning, and ask that we be allowed merely to use, not one dollar out of the Government Treasury, but to use some of our own money toward improving the struggling municipalities established by the Government upon several of the reclamation projects, to help people get homes out there, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] leads the fight against us, and the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the deputy whip on this side, as I understand, stationed himself and others at the door and warned the Democratic Members as they came in to vote against this measure, it does seem to me that it comes with ill grace when we always loyally support your measures that you should be so exceedingly hostile and almost vicious in your opposition to our efforts to secure an absolutely honest and sorely needed development in the Western States. I feel that when we assist you gentlemen of all the coast States, but especially of the South, as loyally as we do, and when we are asking nothing from Uncle Sam but merely to be allowed temporarily to use a small part of our own money and then return it back into the Treasury after we have used it for this development purpose, it does look to me as though the public spirit of some of the Members of this House does not reach very far into the interior of the country. The patriotic spirit of national development does not seem with some of you gentlemen to reach even as far north as Mason and Dixon's line, and with others it appears never to reach beyond the Missouri River. There is no portion of this grand Republic that is nearer to us of the West than you people of the South, and especially the inhabitants of Texas. We are proud of your splendid empire State. But your actions to-day certainly warrant me in calling your attention in a friendly way to your utter lack of what we believe to be fair treatment to the people we represent on the floor of this House. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ouachita River, Ark. and La.: Continuing improvement by the construction of Lock and Dam No. 3, $175,000; for maintenance of improvement by open-channel work up to Camden, $25,000, and from Camden to Arkadelphia, $2,500; in all, $202,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors if there has been any adverse reports on this project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I could not state just now that there never had been any adverse reports, but certainly not on this particular project, or it it would not be in here.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Arkansas River, Ark.: For maintenance of improvement, including works at Pine Bluff and the operation of dredging plant, $48,000.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 17, page 29, by adding the words "and Oklahoma," and after the word "Arkansas" and before the colon, so that the paragraph will read, "Improving the Arkansas River, Ark. and Okla."

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope that amendment will not prevail. I am not certain that we authorized any project for that, but if there is a project for the river above there it can be taken care of under this item. I may say I believe there is a project above there. In fact, I was so informed from the office of the Chief of Engineers, as I recall, but there may be some doubt. The point I make is that it is either unnecessary, or else it ought not to be done. If there is a project covering that stretch of the river the amendment is unnecessary, because the engineers will take care of the work. In other words, they will spend a portion of this appropriation for the purpose desired by the gentleman. If there is no project for it, then it ought not to be done until there is one.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman what harm could result from the words being added, if he has no objections to it?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, a great deal of harm can result from it if there is no project for it. We had this matter before the committee, and it was thought best to leave it for the present where it is.

The way to reach it, if there is any doubt, is to order a survey in the bill so as to remove all doubt.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will ask the gentleman from Florida if it is a fact that the Chief of Engineers in Part I of his report, on page 783, at the bottom, does not say that by the act of February 27, 1911, the project to improve the Arkansas River, as far as Fort Smith, and improve the Arkansas River to Tulsa, Okla., have not been consolidated and merged into one project?

If the gentleman had left that word "Arkansas" out, I would not have objected. As it is, the word "Arkansas" without "Oklahoma" excludes that part of the project between Fort Smith and Tulsa, Okla.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if the project, on which we are now at work, does not cover an extent of 461 miles, and does not extend into the State of Oklahoma? Is not that the project that is recognized in the books, on which we are at work?

Mr. DAVENPORT. The project is recognized, but your words are definitive, and——

Mr. LAWRENCE. I understand that, but going under the report of the engineers the improvement covers an extent of 461 miles and does cover a part of the river in Oklahoma.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not so understand there is anything of the kind in the engineer's report. He says there are 375 miles in Arkansas and 340 miles in Oklahoma, according to his report here, and there are 157 miles of the part that is in Oklahoma that are navigable.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The project we have, Mr. Chairman, seems to go up as high as navigation. The act of 1902 merged those two into one, which makes the general existing project in substance: "The improvement of the river from its mouth to the head of navigation by snagging operations, by dredging operations, and by contraction work, holding the improved channel by revetment when necessary."

Now, if the head of navigation carries it to the point to which the gentleman's amendment would carry it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would ask the Chairman not to take out of my time the time used by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, did the Chair state my time had expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; according to the record kept by the timekeeper, the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I want it to be understood that I would not have presented my amendment if the gentleman had not inserted the word "Arkansas." That is the ground upon which I rely in support of my amendment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I want to say again that if the project extends to the head of navigation, as the engineers say it does, there is certainly no necessity for the amendment unless it is proposed to carry the work beyond that point, and in that event it ought not to be done. I understand the gentleman does not want to go beyond the project.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I hope the committee will not insist upon a vote before I have presented the arguments which I desire to present in support of the amendment.

We claim that we are entitled to such phraseology in the drafting of this amendment as will secure the improvement of that portion of the Arkansas River in Oklahoma which needs improvement. All the reports that have been made in recent years provide for certain improvements in that part of the Arkansas River. The act of February 27, 1911, merged the two projects that have heretofore been prosecuted on the Arkansas River into one.

Now, if the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, thinks that a provision properly drawn and placed in the bill will take charge of the entire work to the head of navigation, he could have accomplished that object by leaving out the word "Arkansas." But my contention is that that word in the paragraph as it now stands defines the scope of the work and limits it to the improvement of the Arkansas River within the State of Arkansas only.

I contend that by that language you confine it exclusively to that part of the Arkansas River that flows through the State of Arkansas. If I had not thought so, I would not have offered this amendment. But we believe we should have the desired improvements there, inasmuch as our country is rapidly developing along that part of the Arkansas River.

Now, in order to show what the engineers thought of it when they filed their report with the Speaker of the House on the 25th day of June, 1909, I want to read a part of their report. On page 7 of their report the engineers say:

With the projects and estimates just outlined this board practically agrees. Although some reduction might perhaps be made in the estimated cost of the slack-water improvement, it would not be a radical one, and for all practical purposes the cost given may be taken as approximately correct. In the opinion of the board the only way in which a radical and permanent improvement of the Arkansas River can be obtained is by constructing locks and dams from Muskogee to Little Rock and providing open-channel navigation from Little Rock to the mouth by means of dredging done in connection with extensive bank revetment. Such an improvement, however, is exceedingly expensive and would require many years to complete, even with liberal and continuous appropriations. For this reason, while the project is entirely feasible, in the opinion of the board it is not at this time desirable. Although recognizing that the construction of locks and dams offers the only means of obtaining permanent improvement between Muskogee and Little Rock, the board is of opinion that by means of hydraulic dredging it is feasible to obtain a considerably improved channel between these points as well as from Little Rock to the mouth, one that will prolong the period of navigation and possibly extend such period to include, generally, times of ordinary low water. This method of improvement has proved quite successful on the Mississippi and other rivers, and the physical characteristics of the Arkansas River are such as to lead the board to believe that equally favorable results may be obtained by adopting a similar method for its improvement.

Now, the board, going further, on page 8 of this report to Congress, says:

The country in the valley of the river, especially between Fort Smith and Muskogee, contains much coal and asphalt. Over 400,000 acres of coal and asphalt lands have been segregated and reserved from allotment. This coal has been practically untouched, except where the mines have easy access to a railroad. Such mines have been profitably producing a high-grade bituminous coal. Much of the land containing these deposits lies right on the bank of the river, and if water transportation were provided, the mining of the coal would undoubtedly develop into a very large industry, possibly sufficient in itself to justify the improvement. In addition to the coal there are valuable growths of timber and increasingly productive agricultural lands, which are being gradually extended as the timber is cleared. The chief agricultural product is cotton, and although most of this would undoubtedly move by rail, a great deal of it could certainly be more conveniently hauled by water. Even that moved by rail would necessarily benefit from the reduced freight rates which would result from water competition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is what the engineers say.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman advise the committee whether any work has been done in the portion of the Arkansas River in Oklahoma during the last season from the appropriation made a year ago?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I understand no work has been done. There has been very little work done for several years.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The language in the bill of last year was identical, in the title of the paragraph, with the language contained in this bill, and the substitution of the word "Oklahoma" could not possibly affect the project, it seems to me.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That may possibly be true, that the language used in this bill is identical with the language used in the last bill, but the gentleman certainly does not think the language of the present bill would permit the improvement to be extended clear to the head of navigation in Oklahoma.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I certainly do.

Mr. DAVENPORT. This is a matter of vital importance to the people of Oklahoma, as much so as any project to the people of any State in the Union; and I join hands with every man who has an honest project and who is endeavoring to reduce freight rates for the people in his section. We are paralleled for the entire distance the Arkansas River is navigable in Oklahoma by a railroad on each side of the Arkansas River, from Fort Smith to the head of navigation, at Tulsa, Okla.; and since that has been so we have had trouble in getting recommendations from the local corps of engineers for the improvement of that part of the river which runs through Oklahoma, although they have gone this far all the time, they have recommended improvements in the way of removing snags and dredging, and we are not now asking an amendment to this bill to increase the appropriation above what is now in it. We are simply asking to be placed where we can be recognized as a part of the project of improving the Arkansas River, and not be excluded, as, in my judgment, the language of the bill now does exclude us. I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

I should like to go into details as to the advantages which would accrue to the people, but I have not the time. I do urge that the bill ought to be in such language that that part of the Arkansas River in Oklahoma will get some benefit of the improvement as the engineers insist should be done, if nothing more than snagging and dredging the stream. I trust that the members of this committee on this floor will be willing to give us that benefit. The words used certainly do not diminish the right to improve that part of the Arkansas River in Arkansas, and they do make it clear that it is intended to include the entire project and improve the Arkansas River from its mouth to the head of navigation, in the State of Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVENPORT), there were—ayes 27, noes 22.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph as amended. I do this for the purpose of keeping the promise I made last evening to call attention to the fact that this bill does contain items in regard to which there are adverse reports of the Board of Engineers, or at least of the local engineers. For instance, take the Winyah Bay improvement, which was passed a short time ago. There is a very strong report against it. There is a proposition there to dredge out a thousand acres to form a basin, in order to form an anchorage and provide terminals—I suppose for some railroad—and while it may be said that the committee have not provided for that particular improvement, I have no doubt that the appropriation of $120,000 herein made will be so expended as to make this other improvement inevitable in the future, and that some engineer will later be found who will make a favorable report.

I also call attention to Fishing Creek, N. C., in regard to which there is an adverse report. I call attention to Alligator Creek, and other items if I had the time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Wyoming is not discussing his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I could call attention to many other items in regard to which there is no favorable recommendation, at least by the men on the ground, who know the most about them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that the gentleman from Wyoming is not discussing his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well; I will discuss my amendment. It relates to the Arkansas River, one of the branches of which is the Ouachita. The Ouachita is a noble stream, on which we have already expended $1,800,000. Besides the dam improvement, the work done has consisted chiefly of the removal of snags, stumps, and overhanging trees.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will inform the gentleman that the Ouachita empties into the Red River, and not into the Arkansas.

Mr. MONDELL. Then these "snags, stumps, logs, wrecks, leaning and sliding trees" go into the Red and not into the Arkansas. This money is being spent for the removal of these obstructions which I have mentioned. This is the condition of this noble stream: There is a gravel bar about 20 miles above Trinity, where there is an available depth at low water of from 15 to 40 inches. The maximum draft that can be carried at mean low water is 3½ feet to Harrisonburg, La., 1¼ feet to Monroe, La., and 8 inches to Camden, Ark.

This is one of the noble highways of commerce for which we are spending large sums of the people's money. It would not be so bad if these expenditures would actually provide transportation. If I felt sure they would, without regard to their local character, I would gladly support every item in the bill, but I think a perusal of the reports on many items will prove to the satisfaction of any reasonable person that many of these streams can never be permanently improved; that it will be a never-ending work of placing in wing dams and having them washed out, pulling out snags, cutting down overhanging trees, dredging sand bars, and after the entire population of the vicinity has engaged for years in this work for the alleged improvement of commerce there will be no commerce to be carried and no opportunity to carry it, because it will be impossible to maintain conditions under which commerce could be carried successfully or profitably.

These funds are to be expended in many instances, in my opinion, on works that can never be of permanent value, and the only good purpose they serve is to distribute the Federal cash in the community and to keep some of our colleagues' constituents at work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to strike out the paragraph as amended.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving mouth of Brazos River, Tex.: For maintenance, $25,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I notice the bill carries no appropriation or authorization for work upon either the upper or lower Cumberland River. I want to ask if in the gentleman's opinion and in the opinion of the committee the amount of money heretofore appropriated and now subject to the use of the local engineer is considered entirely sufficient to carry on the work on Locks B, C, and D in the lower Cumberland River without delay?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; that together with the amount carried in the sundry civil bill, which, I think, is $200,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have observed in the report of the Chief of Engineers that while he makes no specific recommendation that additional funds will be necessary during the ensuing fiscal year, he does make a suggestion that if Congress would make a contract or authorization for the completion of these three locks and dams in their entirety, the work could probably be carried on much more economically and advantageously. Has the committee considered that phase of the suggestion made by the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. SPARKMAN. We did consider that phase of it. I have not any doubt myself but that a great many of the works could be more economically carried on and prosecuted if larger sums of money were appropriated. But, as the gentleman understands, this is a big country; we have many projects to take care of, and it would be impracticable to take care of all of them at once. In other words, the committee thought it would be impracticable to carry out the suggestions of the engineer in regard to this entire contract. The authorizations are not necessary in some instances, because we are having annual bills, and hence it is not so necessary with annual bills to provide authorizations in a river and harbor bill as when the bills only came along once in two or three years. We are now morally certain that in a year, or perhaps a little more, additional amounts will be furnished in river and harbor bills, the bills now being annual instead of triennial.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say that, of course, the statement made by the gentleman from Florida must be entirely satisfactory, in so far as the necessity for any additional appropriation or authorization is concerned for the ensuing fiscal year, but I do regret that this bill does not carry either for the lower or the upper Cumberland River something by the way of authorization or appropriation.

That great river, according to a recent investigation, carries annually a commerce of more than 600,000 tons, valued at approximately $16,000,000. When you consider the amount of commerce carried, when you consider the section of the country through which it flows, when you consider the resources at the head of the river and all along the Cumberland Valley, and the fact that a portion of it is not contiguous to a railroad, I do not hesitate to say that there is not a project of river improvement in the bill that is more meritorious than the improvement of the Cumberland River. For some years my colleague, Judge HULL, has been earnestly and energetically trying to secure the restoration of the scheme of improvement for the upper Cumberland River which was in existence before he became a Member of Congress. The district which I have the honor to represent, and particularly the city of Nashville, where I live, is also directly interested in the improvement of the upper as well as the lower section of the river, and I have been rendering him all the assistance in my power.

Only recently facts have been submitted to the Board of Engineers which have caused them to come to the conclusion that an injustice has been done to the upper Cumberland River by recent reports as to the amount of commerce carried. In saying this I intend no reflection on Maj. Burgess, our local engineer. He is admittedly one of the most capable and efficient engineers in the service and is exceedingly fair, and is certainly disposed to do his duty not only by the Government but also by the people of our section, but he must depend for the facts stated in his report upon others, and in some way these mistakes have occurred and incorrect information has been furnished him without the least fault on his part.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on account of the facts shown by these investigations the Board of Engineers has called for detailed estimates and plans with a view to determining whether or not the upper Cumberland River shall be restored to its former plan of improvement. These facts were called for so recently that they have not been received in time for the consideration of the board and this committee, but they will be received in ample time for consideration by the committee in the preparation of its next bill, and I merely call attention to this fact for the purpose of expressing the hope to the distinguished chairman and his most capable committee that when they come to prepare their next bill they will prove liberal to the lower and upper Cumberland River, in view of the fact that this bill carries nothing for either section. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio: For maintenance, $25,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 31, line 2, after the figures "$25,000," by adding the following as a separate paragraph:

"Improving Saline River, Ill., $50,000."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what attention was given to the improvements of this river by the committee in its recent investigations. Last session of Congress the bill carried a provision for the purpose of making a survey thereof. During the interim between the last session and this session I tried very hard to find out what the War Department was doing with reference to making a bona fide survey of this river. I was unable to learn through the engineer that any real effort had been made for the purpose of investigating the feasibility of improving this river for the benefit of navigation.

I want to say to the committee that this river passes through one of the richest countries that ever fell from the plastic hand of nature. It is walled by the foothills of the Ozarks, hills laden with iron ore, zinc, lead, silver, and fluorspar. It taps at Equality a coal field the like of which has never before been known to man, the richest in the world. [Applause.] I dare say, Mr. Chairman, if this committee, through the engineering force of the War Department, would take the pains to make an investigation, it would find that a few thousand dollars expended in its improvement would give Illinois an opportunity to feed the furnaces of the South with the finest coal and coke in the world.

I do not know whether there is a disposition on the part of the War Department to make that character of investigation which I sought during the last session of Congress. It is idle to talk about an investigation unless it be bona fide and for the purpose of determining the feasibility of improvement; and I say, Mr. Chairman, I am not asking for the investigation of this river for the purpose of any notoriety for my district, but for the relief of the people, who are among the most industrious and deserving of any in the world. [Applause.]

I desire to say that if this river were improved it would give a competing line with railroads, which now charge a greater rate for a short haul than they do for a long haul. It would give an opportunity to bring to the people that character of relief which is so necessary in these unjust discriminating times.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail, because there is no project for the work which is proposed in the amendment. We ordered a survey in the last river and harbor bill for that river, but no report has been as yet received by Congress. Whether it will be a favorable one I do not know.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the committee if he is willing to allow that survey to be made bona fide?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, if I understand what the gentleman means, I would say yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the gentleman willing, then, to allow the continuance of this survey by a provision in this bill?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, no; it will be unnecessary, because in due time the survey will undoubtedly be made, if it is not already made, and we will receive the report in Congress from the engineers.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, I am not able up to this good hour to learn whether there ever was an engineer who set foot nearer the banks of that river than the city of Washington.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, that may be true, but I can assure the gentleman that in my opinion the engineers will make that survey expeditiously. I do not think they will unduly delay it, indeed I have no idea they will. The gentleman must remember that a large number was ordered in the last river and harbor bill——

Mr. FOWLER. That is true.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Which became a law July of last year. The engineers have not had time to make them all, in fact they have made very few up to this time, but they are constantly reporting them to this House, many of them adversely, some of them favorably. I have no doubt in a very short time the gentleman's survey will be here, whether favorably reported or unfavorably of course we can not say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Conneaut, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $200,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 31, line 4, after the figures $200,000, by adding the following as a separate paragraph: "Improving levee and harbor at Shawneetown, Ill., $15,000."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that does not seem to apply at that portion of the bill, but seems to apply, if at all, on page 36 of the bill. Rivers relating to Illinois are on page 36.

Mr. FOWLER. This is on page 31, that is true, but we have reached the point indicated in the bill for this amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Page 31 relates to rivers in Ohio; rivers in Illinois are on page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that to be immaterial if the amendment is in order, and the Chair thinks it is.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, there is a pressing necessity for this appropriation. I received a communication from the people of Shawneetown requesting that a strong and successful effort be made for the purpose of getting enough money to secure their levee against the high water that is now in that section of the country. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, there is no more needed legislation in this country. It is one of the richest pieces of territory in the Ohio Valley. The people at that place have been almost destroyed heretofore by virtue of the breaking of the levee. At one time a few years ago the levee broke and came through the town with such force that it carried with it the business houses, the dwelling houses with the people therein, and many of them were drowned. Mr. Chairman, this is the oldest town in the State of Illinois, and it ought to be preserved. It is one of the best towns in that State. It has been the policy of Congress to appropriate money for the purpose of building and strengthening levees and repairing the same when breaches therein have been made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has been such a universal rain within the last 36 hours in the Ohio Valley that the Ohio River will undoubtedly receive such an impetus and force and accumulation of water that it will not only put this town in great jeopardy of loss of life and property, but some of the other towns along in my State, and I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the people of this town are extremely anxious that this appropriation should be made. I understand from the communication that they are working there day and night, without sleep, except like soldiers sleeping on their arms, for the purpose of preserving life and property. I trust, Mr. Chairman, in the wisdom of the Members of this Congress, for the good of the people of this town, that this appropriation will be made. It will do me no good personally. I will derive no benefit from it either directly or indirectly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for an extension of my time for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, during the high water of last winter there was a considerable damage done to the levee at that place which has not yet been repaired. If there is any provision anywhere in this bill for the purpose of making such repairs I have not been able to discover it, and for this reason, Mr. Chairman, I have seen fit to offer the amendment for the purpose which this amendment carries.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, and I beg all the gentlemen here, in their wisdom and in their magnanimity, to give to the people, who are in such great danger, as I have depicted, and more, this relief. My words are inadequate, my vocabulary too small, to properly describe the magnitude of the situation of danger at this place. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will support this amendment and give these people what I have asked, namely, the small sum of $15,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. There is no project for it and no recommendation before the engineers for it at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Toledo, Ohio: Completing improvement, $105,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if we could not go on for 15 minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think there will have to be discussion on this next item.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest that we pass over this item, and then go on.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask that this item be passed over, and that we return to it later.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman wants to pass over this item, and adjourn in 15 minutes, I will have no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum has been made. Is it withdrawn?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will withdraw it for 15 minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Saugatuck, and Kalamazoo River, Mich.: For maintenance, $3,000.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 22, strike out "$3,000" and insert: "$10,000, of which so much as may be necessary shall be allotted for revetment of the north bank of said river eastward from the east end of the said river connecting Lake Michigan."

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I approach this committee in the most respectful and conciliatory attitude. I have heard other gentlemen criticize this committee. I would not think of doing it. I have not a word to say about the Brazos, or the Trinity, or the Albemarle Canal, or the Ouachita, or the Arkansas, or anything else. All I am interested in just at this moment is Saugatuck, Mich. I appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I never was treated more courteously in my life than when I was there, and after presenting my case to the committee I went out under the impression that everybody except the chairman was for my amendment, and I thought it likely he would yield to his better impulses. But I discovered that appearances were deceptive. A good many members of the committee expressed themselves openly in favor of this improvement, and then Col. Taylor was called in, and after advising with him the committee concluded that they would postpone this improvement until after they could have a survey, which would take a year.

I have here a map, which I prepared myself, and I want to show the situation to you. This [indicating] is the Kalamazoo River. It flows northward parallel with Lake Michigan, and then doubles back upon itself and flows into Lake Michigan, or did until the construction of this cut which you see up here. That was constructed some four or five years ago. A lady by the name of Margaret Cook, who lives in Elgin, Ill.—and I hope I shall have the support of every Illinois Member for this improvement—contributed to the Government the land through which this cut is made. After the cut was constructed, it was found that by reason of the conflict between the current of the river and the waves of the lake, an erosion of the north bank of the river was caused which is washing away the land owned by Mrs. Cook and has compelled her to go to the expense of moving some of her buildings back. Not only that but it has washed part of the highway into the river. Mrs. Cook has already paid out more than $4,000 for the construction of a revetment there to protect her property, but the revetment must be extended to be effectual.

In the construction of this revetment she found it necessary to acquire an adjoining piece of ground, so that she has so far been obliged to pay out over $8,000 for the protection of that property.

Now, I am not permitted to ask this improvement primarily to protect a private owner, but I am insisting that the commerce at Saugatuck ought to be protected against the possibility of this lady's buildings being rolled into the river from time to time and having to be scooped out by the Government. [Laughter.] The highway has been carried into the river; the buildings have been almost carried into the river; and this lady has been compelled to squander large sums of money to protect her property, but I am told that I am not permitted to ask the Government to protect private owners from the effects of public improvements. I doubt that, but I have no time to discuss it now. After conference with the engineers' office, gentlemen of the committee assured me that they regarded this as a very meritorious case, but they said, "We think there ought to be a survey." Every man on the committee knows what is going on there.

The engineers' office knows what is going on. Everybody knows that this highway has been washed away and that this lady's buildings are in danger of being washed into the river, but still you want a survey and a report, which will postpone action a year. It appears that I am not permitted to ask action on account of the private interests involved here, but I am permitted to ask action on account of the public interests involved, and I ask you, gentlemen, not to insist upon a survey to find out something that you know all about now.

What is the use of it? It is like the celebrated case of the man who applied for an injunction concerning a cargo of ice, and long before the case was decided the ice melted. This whole property may be washed into the Kalamazoo River before you can get a survey and a report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] stated, he did come before our committee and presented very earnestly the proposition that he has presented here, but upon examination we found that there was no project for it; the engineers had not investigated it so as to be able to tell us what it was going to cost; and we know nothing about it except from hearsay. So, of course, the proper, the business-like thing to do was and is to have a survey and let the engineers tell us whether the work is advisable, whether it is in the interest of navigation, and what it is going to cost.

Now, we have inserted in the bill a provision for a survey, and if the bill passes and becomes a law the survey will be made in due time, and we will obtain a report upon which action may be taken, likely at the next session of Congress.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman how long that will be?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Congress will meet in December next. I should have said, perhaps, that we can act upon it at the next regular session.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman means by that that possibly nearly a year from now we might get action?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It does not take quite a year to get a report. It will not be quite a year until we shall have assembled here again in regular session, at which time I hope we will begin the preparation of another bill. But whether it is 2 months or 12 months or 14 months, Mr. Chairman, we can not afford to treat this project differently from what we treat others. We must treat them all alike.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wish you would.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman says he wishes we would. But if the gentleman will call to my attention any case where the present committee or any other Committee on Rivers and Harbors has in recent years unjustly discriminated, I will be obliged to him. We have not done so in any case.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have one minute in which to say a word to my friend.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] says there is no project. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and he knows that the project under which that cut was made calls for revetments on the banks of that river, and that work has not yet been finished.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. On the contrary, I know, as well as I can know anything from reading the reports and talking with the engineers, that there is no project whatever for this work. The only way to get one is to have the engineers pass upon it, as we have provided in this bill that they shall do. If the bill becomes a law, they will do it; and when we have that before us we will know whether we ought to make the improvement or not. I do not know what it is going to cost. The gentleman can not tell us what it is going to cost. No one else can tell us in advance of an investigation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, just a word in answer to the gentleman. He says I can not tell how much this will cost. I can tell him how much it will cost. I have submitted the figures to the gentleman's committee, to the effect that the 400 feet of revetment which this lady has already constructed cost her $4,000. I have submitted figures to the effect that 700 feet will be needed, and that it will cost somewhere near $7,000, possibly a little less. The Corps of Engineers have informed themselves fully and have been able to tell you how much it would cost and just how many feet of revetment are needed there. The Engineer's Office knows all about it. They have had reports from the Grand Rapids corps of engineers. They are fully informed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, only a few words more. If any engineer has stated to the River and Harbor Committee what that work would cost, I have no knowledge of it. But even if he had done so, his estimate would have been made outside of and independent of any action by Congress; and, as I said a moment ago, we are not accustomed to make such improvements or to authorize them until a report has been made by the engineers and a project recommended by them.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Why not break over your custom occasionally?

Mr. SPARKMAN. When you break over a custom like that you get on very dangerous ground.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Why not authorize improvements that are so obviously necessary?

Mr. SPARKMAN. We are importuned very often to do that very thing, to violate the rules under which we frame our river and harbor bills, but the House committee has not done it in recent years. Nor has this House done so in many years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan) there were—ayes 12, noes 21.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of no quorum.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, if we meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, Saturday, will it not be practicable to adjourn by half past 5 or 6 o'clock?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, if we can get through with this bill, as I hope we will be able to do.

Mr. MANN. Whether we get through with the bill or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 25, 1913, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. RIORDAN was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Henrietta Sherman, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill S. 3175, the immigration bill, and move the adoption of the report, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that until the report is read the gentleman is a little previous.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] calls up the conference report on the immigration bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Alabama whether, if the unanimous consent now asked for be given, he will, notwithstanding that, move the previous question?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, could not we, pending that, reach an agreement as to time?

Mr. BURNETT. If the previous question is adopted, there will be 20 minutes on a side, I understand.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the report should be read and the previous question be adopted, there would be 40 minutes' debate. I take it it will take a half an hour—I do not remember how long—to read the conference report.

The SPEAKER. It will take an hour.

Mr. MANN. Why not make an agreement to save that time and use it in debate instead of reading the report?

Mr. BURNETT. And then agree that the previous question may be considered as ordered?

Mr. MANN. By agreement——

Mr. BURNETT. Would this kind of an agreement satisfy the gentleman, that the debate on the previous question by unanimous consent instead of being confined to 40 minutes be for an hour? I would not want the 40 minutes' debate on the previous question and the hour besides.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us have an hour's debate.

Mr. BURNETT. If that agreement can be reached it will be perfectly satisfactory to us.

The SPEAKER. That will be done if anybody will ask for it and nobody objects to it.

Mr. MANN. Ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report and that we have one hour's debate, and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered——

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I ask that.

Mr. MANN. The time to be equally divided.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For the purpose of asking a modification of the request that is submitted by the gentleman from Illinois. I would have it an hour and fifteen minutes, in which case I will not make any objection, the time to be divided between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and myself, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama and one-half by myself.

Mr. BURNETT. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report and that there shall be an hour and fifteen minutes of debate, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, the time to be divided equally between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Speaker, that arrangement is entirely satisfactory to me if some agreement can be had with regard to time for this side. The peculiar situation here is that the gentlemen controlling the time are really upon the same side of the House. There are gentlemen over here who desire some time.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will receive time from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time does the gentleman from New York expect to get out of this 1 hour and 15 minutes?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Half of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time will the gentleman from New York concede to me?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I ought to have one-half of the time the gentleman takes to himself.

Mr. MANN. For use on this side of the House?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For use on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to control the time on their side?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman concedes 20 minutes to this side.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There seems to be so many on this side of the House who want to talk that I can not concede to the gentleman from Pennsylvania as much time as he wants.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I shall be compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. How much time will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], if any?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a tripartite arrangement——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until we get this question of time settled. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] is willing to concede 15 minutes of his time to this side of the House, to be controlled by me, I will not object.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to control 15 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is just it. There is no more reason why you should control time than some other Republicans should control time who are not in favor of it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not only the ranking member of the committee but is a Member on this side of the House. I think there can be no objection to giving him 15 minutes' time.

Mr. BURNETT. We have hardly had any requests for our time, and we will give the gentleman 10 minutes of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] 10 minutes of time?

Mr. BURNETT. Ten minutes of time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Then I will yield 10 minutes, inasmuch as the gentleman from Alabama is willing to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1378).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (S. 3175) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States" having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the text inserted by the House amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the word 'alien' wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native born or naturalized citizen of the United States, or who has not declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States in accordance with law; but this definition shall not be held to include Indians not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States. That the term 'United States' as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien shall leave the Canal Zone and attempt to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens. That the term 'seaman' as used in this act shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign part or place.

"That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the General Government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said Government.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port of customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle. The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. That the said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year, immediately preceding such entrance, in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, nor on account of otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States, nor on account of aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 23 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the tax imposed by this section upon any or all aliens seeking admission from foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That said tax, when levied upon aliens entering the Philippine Islands, shall be paid into the treasury of said islands, to be expended for the benefit of such islands: Provided further, That in the cases of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected, the head tax collected shall upon application be refunded to the alien: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to aliens arriving in Guam or Hawaii; but if any such alien, not having become a citizen of the United States, shall later arrive at any port or place of the United States on the North American Continent the provisions of this section shall apply.

"SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; stowaways, except that any such stowaway may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; all children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe; persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

"That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

"All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips, of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude: Provided further, That the provisions of this act relating to the payments for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation, and such determination by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case; but such determination shall not become final until a period of 30 days has elapsed. Within 3 days after such determination the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall cause to be published a brief statement reciting the substance of the application, the facts presented at the hearing and his determination thereon, in three daily newspapers of general circulation in three of the principal cities of the United States. At any time during said period of 30 days any person dissatisfied with the ruling may appeal to the district court of the United States of the district into which the labor is sought to be brought, which court, or the judge thereof in vacation, shall have jurisdiction to try de novo such question of necessity, and the decision in such court shall be final. Such appeals shall operate as a supersedeas: Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any alien exhibitor, or holder of a concession or privilege for any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States, under contract, such alien mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of his country, as may be necessary for installing or conducting his exhibit or for preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any such fair or exposition in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may prescribe both as to the admission and return of such persons: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign Governments nor to their suites, families, or guests: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That the importation into the United States of any alien for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import, or attempt to import, into the United States any alien for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, or shall hold or attempt to hold any alien for any such purpose in pursuance of such illegal importation, or shall keep, maintain, control, support, employ, or harbor in any house or other place, for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, any alien, in pursuance of such illegal importation, shall in every such case be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than 10 years and by a fine of not more than $5,000. Jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of the felonies hereinbefore set forth shall be in any district to or into which said alien is brought in pursuance of said importation by the person or persons accused, or in any district in which a violation of any of the foregoing provisions of this section occur. That any alien who shall, after he has been excluded and deported or arrested and deported in pursuance of the provisions of this act which relate to prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, attempt thereafter to return to or to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than two years. In all prosecutions under this section the testimony of a husband or wife shall be admissible and competent evidence against a wife or husband.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and for every violation of any of the provisions of this section the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor in his own name and for his own benefit, including any such aliens thus offered or promised employment as aforesaid, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the courts of the United States; or for every violation of the provisions hereof the person violating the same may be prosecuted in a criminal action for a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years; and under either the civil or the criminal procedure mentioned separate suits or prosecutions may be brought for each alien thus offered or promised employment as aforesaid.

"SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of section 5 of this act to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit any alien to come into the United States by promise of employment through advertisements printed, published, or distributed in any foreign country, whether such promise is true or false, and either the civil or the criminal penalty imposed by said section shall be applicable to such a case: Provided, That States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States may advertise, and by written or oral communication with prospective alien settlers make known, the inducements they offer for immigration thereof, respectively.

"SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person, association, society, company, partnership, corporation, or others engaged in the business of transporting aliens to the United States, including owners, masters, officers, and agents of vessels, directly or indirectly, by writing, printing, or oral representation, to solicit, invite, or encourage any alien to come into the United States, and anyone violating any provision hereof shall be subject to either the civil or the criminal prosecution prescribed by section 5 of this act; or if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any owner, master, officer, or agent of a vessel has brought or caused to be brought to a port of the United States any alien so solicited, invited, or encouraged to come by such owner, master, officer, or agent, such owner, master, officer, or agent shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located or in which any vessel of the line may be found the sum of $400 for each and every such violation; and no vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine imposed remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such questions upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine: Provided further, That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that the provisions of this section are persistently violated by or on behalf of any transportation company, it shall be the duty of said Secretary to deny to such company the privilege of landing alien immigrant passengers of any or all classes at United States ports for such a period as in his judgment may be necessary to insure an observance of such provisions: Provided further, That this section shall not be held to prevent transportation companies from issuing letters, circulars, or advertisements, confined strictly to stating the sailings of their vessels and terms and facilities of transportation therein.

"SEC. 8. That any person, including the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessel, who shall bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or shall attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or shall conceal or harbor, or attempt to conceal or harbor, or assist or abet another to conceal or harbor in any place, including any building, vessel, railway car, conveyance, or vehicle, any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector or not lawfully entitled to enter or to reside within the United States under the terms of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment for each and every alien so landed or brought in or attempted to be landed or brought in.

"SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States any alien afflicted with idiocy, insanity, imbecility, epilepsy, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said diseases or disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $200 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section. It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any mental or physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living, as contemplated in section 3 of this act, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was so afflicted at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such mental or physical defect might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $25 for each and every violation of this provision. It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien who is excluded by the provisions of section 3 of this act because unable to read or who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become a citizen of the United States by naturalization, as provided in section 3 of this act, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that these disabilities might have been detected by the exercise of reasonable precaution prior to the departure of such aliens from a foreign port such person shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $100 for each and every violation of this provision. And no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

"SEC. 10. That it shall be the mandatory and unqualified duty of every person, including owners, officers, and agents of vessels or transportation lines, other than those lines which may enter into a contract as provided in section 23 of this act, bringing an alien to any seaport or land border port of the United States, to prevent the landing of such alien in the United States at any time or place other than as designated by the immigration officers, and the failure of any such owner, officer, or agent to comply with the foregoing requirements shall be deemed a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine in each case of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; or, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor it is impracticable or inconvenient to prosecute the owner, master, officer, or agent of any such vessel, a pecuniary penalty of $1,000 shall be a lien upon the vessel whose owner, master, officer, or agent violates the provisions of this section, and such vessel shall be libeled therefor in the appropriate United State court.

"SEC. 11. That whenever he may deem such action necessary the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, detail immigrant inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. On such voyages said inspectors and matrons shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried. It shall be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe such passengers during the voyage, and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers under the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States. It shall further be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe violations of the provisions of such laws and the violation of such provisions of the 'passenger act' of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and report the same to the proper United States officials at ports of landing. Whenever the Secretary of Commerce and Labor so directs, a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, detailed to the Immigration Service, not lower in rank than a passed assistant surgeon, shall be received and carried on any vessel transporting immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. Such surgeon shall be permitted to investigate and examine the condition of all immigrant and emigrant passengers in relation to any provisions of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States and such provisions of the 'passenger act' of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and shall immediately report any violation of said laws to the master or commanding officer of the vessel, and shall also report said violations to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor within 24 hours after the arrival of the vessel at the port of entry in the United States. Such surgeon shall accompany the master or captain of the vessel in his visits to the sanitary officers of the ports of call during the voyage, and, should contagious or infectious diseases prevail at any port where passengers are received, he shall request all reasonable precautionary measures for the health of persons on board. Such surgeon on arrival at ports of the United States shall also, if requested by the examining board, furnish any information he may possess in regard to immigrants arriving on the vessel to which he has been detailed. While on duty such surgeons shall wear the prescribed uniform of their service and shall be provided with first-class accommodations on such vessel at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. For every violation of this section any person, including any transportation company, owning or operating the vessel in which such violation occurs shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the next United States port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each and every day during which such violation continues, the term 'violation' to include the refusal of any person having authority so to do to permit any such immigrant inspector, matron, or surgeon to be received on board such vessel, as provided in this section, and also the refusal of the master or commanding officer of any such vessel to permit the inspections and visits of any such surgeon, as provided in this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of all such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

"SEC. 13. That all aliens arriving by water at the ports of the United States shall be listed in convenient groups, the names of those coming from the same locality to be assembled so far as practicable, and no one list or manifest shall contain more than 30 names. To each alien or head of a family shall be given a ticket on which shall be written his name, a number or letter designating the list in which his name, etc., is contained, and his number on said list, for convenience of identification on arrival. Each list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer, or the first or second below him in command, taken before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, to the effect that he has caused the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith to make a physical and oral examination of each of said aliens, and that from the report of said surgeon and from his own investigation he believes that no one of said aliens is of any of the classes excluded from admission into the United States by section 3 of this act, and that also according to the best of his knowledge and belief, the information in said lists or manifests concerning each of said aliens named therein is correct and true in every respect. That the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith shall also sign each of said lists or manifests and make oath or affirmation in like manner before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, stating his professional experience and qualifications as a physician and surgeon, and that he has made a personal examination of each of the said aliens named therein, and that the said list or manifest, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is full, correct, and true in all particulars relative to the mental and physical condition of said aliens. If no surgeon sails with any vessel bringing aliens the mental and physical examinations and the verifications of the lists or manifests shall be made by some competent surgeon employed by the owners of the said vessels, and the manifests shall be verified by such surgeon before a United States consular officer.

"SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for the master or commanding officer of any vessel bringing aliens into or carrying aliens out of the United States to refuse or fail to deliver to the immigration officials the accurate and full manifests or statements or information regarding all aliens on board or taken on board such vessel required by this act, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that there has been such a refusal or failure, or that the lists delivered are not accurate and full, such master or commanding officer shall pay to the collector of customs at the port of arrival or departure the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom such accurate and full manifest or statement or information is not furnished, or concerning whom the manifest or statement or information is not prepared and sworn to as prescribed by this act. No vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

"SEC. 15. That upon the arrival at a port of the United States of any vessel bringing aliens it shall be the duty of the proper immigration officials to go or to send competent assistants to the vessel and there inspect all such aliens, or said immigration officials may order a temporary removal of such aliens for examination at a designated time and place, but such temporary removal shall not be considered a landing, nor shall it relieve the transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees of the vessel upon which said aliens are brought to any port of the United States from any of the obligations which, in case such aliens remain on board, would, under the provisions of this act, bind the said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees: Provided, That where removal is made to premises owned or controlled by the United States, said transportation lines, masters, agents, owners, or consignees, and each of them, shall, so long as detention there lasts, be relieved of responsibility for the safe-keeping of such aliens. Whenever a temporary removal of aliens is made the transportation lines which brought them and the masters, owners, agents, and consignees of the vessel upon which they arrive shall pay all expenses of such removal and all expenses arising during subsequent detention pending decision on the aliens' eligibility to enter the United States and until they are either allowed to land or returned to the care of the line or to the vessel which brought them, such expenses to include those of maintenance, medical treatment in hospital or elsewhere, burial in the event of death, and transfer to the vessel in the event of deportation, excepting only where they arise under the terms of any of the provisos of section 18 thereof; any refusal or failure to comply with the provisions hereof to be punished in the manner specified in section 18 of this act.

"SEC. 16. That the physical and mental examination of all arriving aliens shall be made by medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who shall have had at least two years' experience in the practice of their profession since receiving the degree of doctor of medicine, and who shall certify, for the information of the immigration officers and the boards of special inquiry hereinafter provided for, any and all physical and mental defects or diseases observed by said medical officers in any such alien; or, should medical officers of the United States Public Health Service be not available, civil surgeons of not less than four years' professional experience may be employed in such emergency for such service, upon such terms as may be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who have had especial training in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defect shall be detailed for duty or employed at all large ports of entry, and such medical officers shall be provided with suitable facilities for the detention and examination of all arriving aliens in whom insanity or mental defect is suspected, and the services of interpreters shall be provided for such examination. That the inspection, other than the physical and mental examination, of aliens, including those seeking admission or readmission to or the privilege of passing through or residing in the United States, and the examination of aliens arrested within the United States under this act, shall be conducted by immigrant inspectors, except as hereinafter provided in regard to boards of special inquiry. Immigrant inspectors are hereby authorized and empowered to board and search for aliens any vessel, railway car, conveyance, or vehicle in which they believe aliens are being brought into the United States. Said inspectors shall have power to administer oaths and to take and consider evidence touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, pass through, or reside in the United States, and, where such action may be necessary, to make a written record of such evidence; and any person to whom such an oath has been administered, under the provisions of this act, who shall knowingly or willfully give false evidence or swear to any false statement in any way affecting or in relation to the right of any alien to admission, or readmission to, or to pass through, or to reside in the United States shall be deemed guilty of perjury and be punished as provided by section 125 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.' Any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge shall also have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses before said inspectors and the production of books, papers, and documents touching the right of any alien to enter, reenter, reside in, or pass through the United States, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States; and any district court within the jurisdiction of which investigations are being conducted by an immigrant inspector may, in the event of neglect or refusal to respond to a subpœna issued by any commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge or refusal to testify before said immigrant inspector, issue an order requiring such person to appear before said immigrant inspector, produce books, papers, and documents if demanded, and testify; and any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punished by the court as a contempt thereof. That any person, including employees, officials, or agents of transportation companies, who shall assault, resist, prevent, impede, or interfere with any immigration official or employee in the performance of his duty under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years, or by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $2,000; and any person who shall use any deadly or dangerous weapon in resisting any immigration official or employee in the performance of his duty shall be deemed guilty of a felony and shall on conviction thereof be punished by imprisonment for not less than 1 nor more than 10 years. Every alien who may not appear to the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival to be clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to land shall be detained for examination in relation thereto by a board of special inquiry. In the event of rejection by the board of special inquiry, in all cases where an appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is permitted by this act, the alien shall be so informed and shall have the right to be represented by counsel or other advisor on such appeal. The decision of an immigrant inspector, if favorable to the admission of any alien, shall be subject to challenge by any other immigrant inspector, and such challenge shall operate to take the alien whose right to land is so challenged before a board of special inquiry for its investigation.

"SEC. 17. That boards of special inquiry shall be appointed by the commissioner of immigration or inspector in charge at the various ports of arrival as may be necessary for the prompt determination of all cases of immigrants detained at such ports under the provisions of the law. Each board shall consist of three members, who shall be selected from such of the immigrant officials in the service as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall from time to time designate as qualified to serve on such boards. When in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the maintenance of a permanent board of special inquiry for service at any sea or land border port is not warranted, regularly constituted boards may be detailed from other stations for temporary service at such port, or, if that be impracticable, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall authorize the creation of boards of special inquiry by the immigration officials in charge at such ports, and shall determine what Government officials or other persons shall be eligible for service on such boards. Such boards shall have authority to determine whether an alien who has been duly held shall be allowed to land or shall be deported. All hearings before such boards shall be separate and apart from the public. Such boards shall keep a complete permanent record of their proceedings and of all such testimony as may be produced before them; and the decision of any two members of a board shall prevail, but either the alien or any dissenting member of the said board may appeal through the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival and the Commissioner General of Immigration to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the taking of such appeal shall operate to stay any action in regard to the final disposal of any alien whose case is so appealed until the receipt by the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival of such decision, which shall be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced before the board of special inquiry. In every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States, under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of a board of special inquiry if adverse to the admission of such alien shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That the decision of a board of special inquiry, based upon the certificate of the examining medical officer, shall be final as to the rejection of aliens affected with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, or with any mental or physical disability which would bring such aliens within any of the classes excluded from admission to the United States under section 3 of this act.

"SEC. 18. That all aliens brought to this country in violation of law shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back, in accommodations of the same class in which they arrived, to the country whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them. The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came. That it shall be unlawful for any master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel to refuse to receive back on board thereof, or on board of any other vessel owned or operated by the same interests, such aliens; or to fail to detain them thereon; or to refuse or fail to return them in the manner aforesaid to the foreign port from which they came; or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land; or to make any charge for the return of any such alien; or to take any security from him for the payment of such charge; or to take any consideration to be returned in case the alien is landed; or knowingly to bring to the United States at any time within one year from the date of deportation any alien rejected or arrested and deported under any provision of this act, unless prior to reembarkation the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has consented that such alien shall reapply for admission, as required by section 3 hereof; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee has violated any of the foregoing provisions such master, purser, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located, or in which any vessel of the line may be found, the sum of $300 for each and every violation of any provision of this section; and no vessel shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit with the collector of customs of a sum sufficient to cover such fine. If the vessel by which any alien ordered deported came has left the United States and it is impracticable for any reason to deport the alien within a reasonable time by another vessel owned by the same interests, the cost of deportation may be paid by the Government and recovered by civil suit from any agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel: Provided further, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may suspend, upon conditions to be prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, the deportation of any alien found to have come in violation of any provision of this act if, in his judgment, the testimony of such alien is necessary on behalf of the United States Government in the prosecution of offenders against any provision of this act; and the cost of maintenance of any person so detained resulting from such suspension of deportation, and a witness fee in the sum of $1 per day for each day such person is so detained, may be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, or such alien may be released under bond, in the penalty of not less than $500, with security approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required as a witness and for deportation. No alien certified, as provided in section 16 of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis in any form, or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States, unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided further, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service to the effect that the health or safety of an insane alien would be unduly imperiled by immediate deportation, such alien may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, be held for treatment until such time as such alien may, in the opinion of such medical officer, be safely deported: Provided further, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service to the effect that a rejected alien is helpless from sickness, mental or physical disability, or infancy, if such alien is accompanied by another alien whose protection or guardianship is required by such rejected alien, such accompanying alien may also be excluded, and the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel in which such alien and accompanying alien are brought shall be required to return said alien and accompanying alien in the same manner as vessels are required to return other rejected aliens.

"SEC. 19. That any alien, at any time within three years after entry, who shall enter the United States in violation of law; any alien who within three years after entry becomes a public charge from causes existing prior to the landing; except as hereinafter provided, any alien who is hereafter sentenced to imprisonment for a term of one year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude, committed within three years after the entry of the alien to the United States; any alien who shall be found an inmate of or connected with the management of a house of prostitution or practicing prostitution after such alien shall have entered the United States, or who shall receive, share in, or derive benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute; any alien who is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists, protects, or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute; any alien who shall import or attempt to import any person for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; any alien who, after being excluded and deported or arrested and deported as a prostitute, or as a procurer, or as having been connected with the business of prostitution or importation for prostitution or other immoral purposes in any of the ways hereinbefore specified shall return to and enter the United States; any alien convicted and imprisoned for a violation of any of the provisions of section 4 hereof; any alien, at any time within three years after entry, who shall enter the United States by water at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or by land at any place other than one designated as a port of entry for aliens by the Commissioner General of Immigration, or at any time not designated by immigration officials, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and deported: Provided, That the provision of this section respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude shall not apply to one who has been pardoned, nor shall such deportation be made or directed if the court sentencing such alien for such crime shall, at the time of imposing judgment or passing sentence, make a recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that such alien shall not be deported in pursuance of this act; nor shall any alien convicted as aforesaid be deported until after the termination of his imprisonment: Provided further, That the provisions of this section, with the exceptions hereinbefore noted, shall be applicable to the classes of aliens therein mentioned irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States. In every case where any person is ordered deported from the United States under the provisions of this act or of any law or treaty now existing, the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be final.

"SEC. 20. That the deportation of aliens provided for in this act shall, at the option of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be to the country whence they came or to the foreign port at which such aliens embarked for the United States; or, if such embarkation was for foreign contiguous territory, to the foreign port at which they embarked for such territory; or, if such aliens entered foreign contiguous territory from the United States and later entered the United States, or if such aliens are held by the country from which they entered the United States not to be subjects or citizens of such country, and such country refuses to permit their reentry or imposes any condition upon permitting reentry, then to the country of which such aliens are subjects or citizens, or to the country in which they resided prior to entering the country from which they entered the United States. If effected at any time within five years after the entry of the alien, such deportation, including one-half of the entire cost of removal to the port of deportation, shall be at the expense of the contractor, procurer, or other person by whom the alien was unlawfully induced to enter the United States, or, if that can not be done, then the cost of removal to the port of deportation shall be at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, and the deportation from such port shall be at the expense of the owner or owners of such vessels or transportation line by which such aliens respectively came, or, if that is not practicable, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. If such deportation is effected later than five years after the entry of the alien, or if the deportation is made by reason of causes arising subsequent to entry, the cost thereof shall be payable from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. A failure or refusal on the part of the masters, agents, owners, or consignees of vessels to comply with the order of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to take on board, guard safely, and transport to the destination specified any alien ordered to be deported under the provisions of this act shall be punished by the imposition of the penalties prescribed in section 18 of this act: Provided, That when in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the mental or physical condition of such alien is such as to require personal care and attendance, he may employ a suitable person for that purpose, who shall accompany such alien to his or her final destination, and the expense incident to such service shall be defrayed in like manner. Pending the final disposal of the case of any alien so taken into custody he may be released under a bond in the penalty of not less than $500 with security approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, conditioned that such alien shall be produced when required for a hearing or hearings in regard to the charge upon which he has been taken into custody, and for deportation if he shall be found to be unlawfully within the United States.

"SEC. 21. That any alien liable to be excluded because likely to become a public charge or because of physical disability other than tuberculosis in any form or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease may, if otherwise admissible, nevertheless be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the giving of a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by said Secretary, in such amount and containing such conditions as he may prescribe, to the United States and to all States, Territories, counties, towns, municipalities, and districts thereof, holding the United States and all States, Territories, counties, towns, municipalities, and districts thereof harmless against such alien becoming a public charge. The admission of such alien shall be a consideration for the giving of such bond or undertaking. Suit may be brought thereon in the name and by the proper law officers either of the United States Government or of any State, Territory, District, county, town, or municipality in which such alien becomes a public charge.

"SEC. 22. That wherever an alien shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country, and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, if said wife or any of said children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, such wife or children shall be held, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe, until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be either admitted or deported until such facts have been ascertained; and if it shall be determined that the disorder is easily curable and the husband or father or other responsible person is willing to bear the expense of the treatment, they may be accorded treatment in hospital until cured and then be admitted, or if it shall be determined that they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons, they may, if otherwise admissible, thereupon be admitted.

"SEC. 23. That the Commissioner General of Immigration shall perform all his duties under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Under such direction he shall have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder; he shall establish such rules and regulations, prescribe such forms of bond, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contract for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid, and to remove to their native country, at any time within three years after entry, at the expense of the appropriations for the enforcement of this act, such as fall into distress or need public aid from causes arising subsequent to their entry and are desirous of being so removed; he shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy persons in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the said purpose; it shall be the duty of the Commissioner General of Immigration to detail officers of the Immigration Service from time to time as may be necessary, in his judgment, to secure information as to the number of aliens detained in the penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions (public and private) of the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and other territory of the United States and to inform the officers of such institutions of the provisions of law in relation to the deportation of aliens who have become public charges. He may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers, and also surgeons of the United States Public Health Service employed under this act for service in foreign countries. The duties of commissioners of immigration and other immigration officials in charge of districts, ports, or stations shall be of an administrative character, to be prescribed in detail by regulations prepared under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That for the purpose of making effective the provisions of this section relating to the protection of aliens from fraud and loss, and also the provisions of section 30 of this act, relating to the distribution of aliens, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall establish and maintain immigrant stations at such interior places as may be necessary, and, in the discretion of the said Secretary, aliens in transit from ports of landing to such interior stations shall be accompanied by immigrant inspectors.

"SEC. 24. That immigrant inspectors and other immigration officers, clerks, and employees shall hereafter be appointed and their compensation fixed and raised or decreased from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner General of Immigration and in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January 16, 1883: Provided, That said Secretary, in the enforcement of that portion of this act which excludes contract laborers, may employ, without reference to the provisions of the said civil-service act, or to the various acts relative to the compilation of the official register, such persons as he may deem advisable and from time to time fix, raise, or decrease their compensation. He may draw annually from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act $50,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the salaries and expenses of persons so employed and for expenses incident to such employment; and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall pass to the credit of the proper disbursing officer expenditures from said sum without itemized account whenever the Secretary of Commerce and Labor certifies that an itemized account would not be for the best interests of the Government: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter the mode of appointing commissioners of immigration at the several ports of the United States as provided by the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 18, 1894, or the official status of such commissioners heretofore appointed.

"SEC. 25. That the district courts of the United States are hereby invested with full and concurrent jurisdiction of all causes, civil and criminal, arising under any of the provisions of this act. That it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such writ when brought by the United States under this act. Such prosecutions or suits may be instituted at any place in the United States at which the violation may occur or at which the person charged with such violation may be found. That no suit or proceeding for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be settled, compromised, or discontinued without the consent of the court in which it is pending, entered of record, with the reasons therefor.

"SEC. 26. That all exclusive privileges of exchanging money, transporting passengers or baggage, or keeping eating houses, and all other like privileges in connection with any United States immigrant station, shall be disposed of after public competition, subject to such conditions and limitations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may prescribe, and all receipts accruing from the disposal of such exclusive privileges shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. No intoxicating liquors shall be sold at any such immigrant station.

"SEC. 27. That for the preservation of the peace and in order that arrests may be made for crimes under the laws of the States and Territories of the United States where the various immigrant stations are located, the officers in charge of such stations, as occasion may require, shall admit therein the proper State and municipal officers charged with the enforcement of such laws, and for the purpose of this section the jurisdiction of such officers and of the local courts shall extend over such stations.

"SEC. 28. That any person who knowingly aids or assists any anarchist or any person who believes in or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or who disbelieves in or is opposed to organized government or all forms of law, or who advocates the assassination of public officials, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, to enter the United States, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such anarchist or person aforesaid to enter therein shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"SEC. 29. That the President of the United States is authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, an international conference, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon, or to send special commissioners to any foreign country, for the purpose of regulating by international agreement, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, the immigration of aliens to the United States; of providing for the mental, moral, and physical examination of such aliens by American consuls or other officers of the United States Government at the ports of embarkation, or elsewhere; of securing the assistance of foreign Governments in their own territories to prevent the evasion of the laws of the United States governing immigration to the United States; of entering into such international agreements as may be proper to prevent the immigration of aliens who, under the laws of the United States, are or may be excluded from entering the United States, and of regulating any matters pertaining to such immigration.

"SEC. 30. That there shall be maintained a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall provide such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and said division shall gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the publications among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States and to such other persons as may desire the same. When any State or Territory appoints and maintains an agent or agents to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States, such agents shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein. While on duty at any immigrant station such agents shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted.

"SEC. 31. That any person, including the owner, agent, consignee, or master of any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, who shall knowingly sign on the ship's articles, or bring to the United States as one of the crew of such vessel, any alien, with intent to permit such alien to land in the United States in violation of the laws and treaties of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens, or who shall falsely and knowingly represent to the immigration authorities at the port of arrival that any such alien is a bona fide member of the crew, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $5,000, for which sum the said vessel shall be liable and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"SEC. 32. That no alien excluded from admission into the United States by any law or treaty of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens, and employed on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, shall be permitted to land in the United States, except temporarily for medical treatment, or pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor providing for the ultimate removal or deportation of such alien from the United States, and the negligent failure of the owner, agent, consignee, or master of such vessel to detain on board any such alien after notice in writing by the immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival, and to deport such alien, if required by such immigration officer or by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall render such owner, agent, consignee, or master liable to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, for which sum the said vessel shall be liable, and may be seized and proceeded against by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the offense.

"SEC. 33. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of the preceding section to pay off or discharge any alien employed on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, unless duly admitted pursuant to the laws and treaties of the United States regulating the immigration of aliens: Provided, That in case any such alien intends to reship on board any other vessel bound to any foreign port or place he shall be allowed to land for the purpose of so reshipping, and may be paid off, discharged, and permitted to remove his effects, anything in such laws or treaties or in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, provided due notice of such proposed action first be given to the principal immigration officer in charge at the port of arrival.

"SEC. 34. That any alien seaman who shall desert his vessel in a port of the United States or who shall land therein contrary to the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be unlawfully in the United States and shall, at any time within three years thereafter, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and brought before a board of special inquiry for examination as to his qualifications for admission to the United States, and if not admitted said alien seaman shall be deported at the expense of the appropriation for this act as provided in section 20 of this act.

"SEC. 35. That it shall be unlawful for any vessel carrying passengers between a port of the United States and a port of a foreign country, upon arrival in the United States, to have on board employed thereon any alien afflicted with idiocy, imbecility, insanity, epilepsy, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, if it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, from an examination made by a medical officer of the United States Public Health Service, and is so certified by such officer, that any such alien was so afflicted at the time he was shipped or engaged and taken on board such vessel and that the existence of such affliction might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time; and for every such alien so afflicted on board any such vessel at the time of arrival the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $25; and no vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine and while it remains unpaid: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine: Provided further, That such fine may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be mitigated or remitted.

"SEC. 36. That upon arrival of any vessel in the United States from any foreign port or place it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, consignee, or master thereof to deliver to the principal immigration officer in charge of the port of arrival lists containing the names of all aliens employed on such vessel, stating the positions they respectively hold in the ship's company, when and where they were respectively shipped or engaged, and specifying those to be paid off and discharged in the port of arrival; or lists containing so much of such information as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall by regulation prescribe; and after the arrival of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to report to such immigration officer, in writing, as soon as discovered, all cases in which any such alien has deserted the vessel, giving a description of such alien, together with any information likely to lead to his apprehension; and before the departure of any such vessel it shall be the duty of such owner, agent, consignee, or master to deliver to such immigration officer a further list containing the names of all alien employees who were not employed thereon at the time of the arrival, but who will leave port thereon at the time of her departure, and also the names of those, if any, who have been paid off and discharged, and of those, if any, who have deserted or landed or been duly admitted; and in case of the failure of such owner, agent, consignee, or master so to deliver either of the said lists of such aliens arriving and departing, respectively, or so to report such cases of desertion, or landing, such owner, agent, consignee, or master shall, if required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $10 for each alien concerning whom correct lists are not delivered or a true report is not made as above required; and no such vessel shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine and, in the event such fine is imposed, while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such question upon deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

"SEC. 37. The word 'person' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the plural and the singular, as the case may be, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any director, officer, agent, or employee of any corporation, company, or association acting within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case be deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, or association, as well as that of the person acting for or in behalf of such corporation, company, or association.

"SEC. 38. That this act, except as otherwise provided in section 3, shall take effect and be enforced from and after July 1, 1913. The act of March 26, 1910, amending the act of February 20, 1907, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; the act of February 20, 1907, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof; the act of March 3, 1903, to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof; and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed on and after the taking effect of this act: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, nor to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, or the act approved August 2, 1882, entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea,' and amendments thereto: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any prosecution, suit, action, or proceedings brought, or any act, thing, or matter, civil or criminal, done or existing at the time of the taking effect of this act, except as mentioned in the last proviso of section 19 hereof; but as to all such prosecutions, suits, actions, proceedings, acts, things, or matters, the laws or parts of laws repealed or amended by this act are hereby continued in force and effect."

JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. C. LODGE,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
LE ROY PERCY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate bill (S. 3175) regulating the immigration of aliens, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

The Senate having disagreed to the entire House amendment, which in its turn had stricken out the entire Senate bill, the whole subject of immigration came before the conference committee.

The bill as it passed the House contained no features except the illiteracy test. The Senate bill contemplated many changes in the law and an illiteracy test substantially similar to that proposed in the House, the principal difference being that the Senate included "writing" in its test and differed somewhat from the House as to the admissibility of illiterate relatives of qualified immigrants. On all substantial matters of difference between the Senate and the House touching the illiteracy test the Senate receded.

The changes made in conference since the last conference report was accepted by the House on January 17 are as follows:

First. In section 1 the definition of the word "alien" has been somewhat changed by exempting from its scope persons who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States.

Second. The clause relating to penal certificates and certificates of character has been stricken from the bill. This clause was formerly in section 3.

Third. In section 3 an appeal is provided from the decisions of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor touching the necessity of importing skilled contract labor.

Fourth. In section 7 a mistake has been corrected with regard to the penalty imposed for soliciting immigration.

Fifth. In section 9 the reading is slightly changed so as to make it clear that certain excepted illiterates may lawfully be brought to the United States.

The principal changes in existing law proposed by the Senate and agreed to by the managers on the part of the House, as set forth in the conference report of January 16, 1913, and retained in this conference report, are as follows:

First. An increase of the head tax from $4 to $5 per alien.

Second. The exclusion of aliens not eligible for naturalization.

Third. Making it permissible for the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to decide beforehand as to the necessity of importing such skilled contract labor as is now admissible under the existing contract-labor law.

Fourth. Providing more severe penalties for transportation lines which violate the law against advertising for immigrants and which bring to the United States aliens who are ineligible to enter.

Fifth. Providing for matrons, inspectors, and surgeons on immigrant ships at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Sixth. Providing machinery for compelling the attendance and testimony of witnesses before the immigration authorities when required.

Seventh. Providing for the deportation of aliens who become criminals within three years subsequent to entry.

Eighth. Providing for interior immigrant stations.

Ninth. Providing against the illegal entry of seamen and stowaways.

Tenth. Permitting aliens to be represented by counsel in the case of appeals from the decisions of boards of special inquiry.

Eleventh. Providing experts in insanity at large ports of entry.

Twelfth. A definition of the meaning of the word "alien" where it appears in the bill.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized for 37½ minutes, and out of that he yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] 10 minutes.

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I am exceedingly gratified that this bill is to pass the House and will shortly pass the body at the other end of the Capitol and become a law of this Nation.

Opponents of this bill have never attempted to argue or contend that the 250,000 immigrants to be excluded by the provisions of this bill are capable of self-government. They could not have taken that position without having been driven from it upon the floor of the House. They shield their opposition to this bill behind the statement that they want more labor in this country to develop its natural resources. My friend from New York, Mr. GOLDFOGLE, who is one of those occupying that position, was asked if the importation of large numbers of cheap laborers from the poorly paid labor district of the south and east of Europe would not depress the labor market of the United States. He unfolded a new doctrine of political economy before the House by saying that the importation of cheap laborers into this labor market would not reduce the price of labor here.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I said nothing of the kind. That is altogether a misstatement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York must not interrupt the gentleman from Texas without his consent.

Mr. DIES. My friend from New York, Mr. GOLDFOGLE, in the discussion heretofore seemed to feel that I was not properly in sympathy with his constituents. I assure the gentleman that there is no constituency in this country for whose misfortunes my heart goes out in more tender commiseration. I believe I am a better friend of the constituents of the gentleman from New York, who represents the East Side of that crowded city, than he is himself. I would close the ports to the ignorant, illiterate masses who come to dump themselves into his district, an unlettered, struggling, pitiable people who are already oppressed sufficiently.

Mr. Speaker, there is another phase of this question. We talk about wanting to be relieved from the high cost of living. This illiterate quarter of a million people who come from the south and east of Europe do not go to the farms to till the untilled acres, to build homes, and grow food with which to feed the people. They go into the crowded cities, like the East Side of New York, and while I admit that they do not demand very much in the shape of food from the markets, still what little they get to live on adds to the high cost of living in this country.

Moreover, if that question were not involved, I should still be in favor of this bill, because I am not one of those who believe that all the resources and opportunities of this country should be developed in a decade, a half century, or a century. I would leave some railroads to be built, some mines to be worked, some natural resources of this country to be developed by your children and your children's children in the generations yet unborn. I think no more cruel thing could be done by the American people in their mad race to make money than to develop all of the resources of this country in this age and generation, and leave this country as barren of opportunities as are the countries in the south and east of Europe from which these people come. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] to use some of his time now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] has 37½ minutes minus 10 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I interrupted the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], not because I desired to intrude upon him at all but simply because I wanted to satisfy myself by questions properly directed to him with regard to his point of view concerning the pending legislation.

He magnified the fact that he had accepted the point of view of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with regard to certain features of the pending conference report.

And when I asked him whether the Secretary of Commerce and Labor had communicated any views, officially or unofficially, in regard to the main proposition contained in his conference report, he evaded the question with the skill he usually shows when he does not desire to meet squarely a question propounded to him.

Mr. Speaker, I shall continue to vote against this conference report because the main proposition in it is the adoption or rejection of the illiteracy test of immigrants coming to this country. I do not believe now, I never have believed, and I do not think I shall ever believe in any kind of test that requires a person coming into this country shall show an inspector of immigration that he is able to read. I think it is a false test; I think it is un-American; I think it is undemocratic; and because of this main proposition contained in the report, skillfully concealed by the recodification of the laws and the reenactment of certain provisions of existing law about which there is no difference of opinion between Members of this Congress, I believe the illiteracy test is the main proposition, and therefore I shall withhold my assent to this conference report.

Now, in the second paragraph of the statement of the managers on the part of the House you will find the keynote to my opposition:

> The Senate having disagreed to the entire House amendment, which in its turn had stricken out the entire Senate bill, the whole subject of immigration came before the conference committee.

There is the fact, Mr. Speaker, frankly admitted in the second paragraph in the statement of the managers on the part of the House. The whole subject of immigration was opened up and these men, three on the part of the House and three on the part of another legislative Chamber, these six men sat down and revised and codified the entire immigration laws of this Nation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of a committee which must necessarily leave here before the vote can be had on this bill. I simply want to say that if it were possible for me to be here when the roll is called I should vote to concur in this conference report, as I have voted for the bill at every stage. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the time is at hand when it is absolutely necessary, if we would maintain the high standard of citizenship in this Republic, that there should be some further restrictions on immigration, and I believe that this bill provides for such restrictions in accordance with the report of the Immigration Commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the agitation against immigration has existed for long over a generation. From 1854 to 1860 the hurricane of protests against immigration from Ireland and somewhat from Germany might be compared then with the gentle breeze of protest against immigration now. [Applause.] I can not, of course, in a minute discuss this question. I am but little over a century old from the other side when some of my forbears came to this country with accommodations inferior to steerage accommodations now, but I am ready to welcome any man that is willing to live in the sweat of his face, of the Caucasian race, who comes here to cast his lot with us. I had rather have one man of that kind who can not read or write, ready to work, than a whole hundred men who can read and write who will not work. [Applause.] I shall vote against this conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, my objection to the bill is to the illiteracy test. Let us see how that will work out in the Territory of Hawaii. There the working population in the sugar plantations is composed of Chinese and Japanese almost exclusively. The Japanese laborers outnumber all others there by many thousands. Within recent years the Hawaiian planters have gone to Europe to induce white labor to come to those islands. They brought many shiploads of Spaniards and Portuguese and paid them one-third more in salary than they were paying the Japanese and Chinese. They are largely illiterates who can not read or write. They work in the cane fields. The educated white men are not willing to do that kind of work.

Yet this bill will prevent the Hawaiian planters from building up a Caucasian civilization in these islands and will compel them to continue Japanese labor in the sugar fields.

I apprehend that there is not a Member on the floor who desires to orientalize these islands, and yet under the terms of this bill Caucasian labor will be excluded and planters will be compelled again to resort to the local cheap labor of Japan.

There is another provision of the bill which excludes all those immigrants who can not become citizens under our naturalization laws. That provision will affect all Asiatics, so that the sugar producers of Hawaii will not be able to bring Caucasians from Europe or orientals from Asia to work their plantations. It is a remarkable condition of affairs. And yet this bill creates that very condition.

Mr. Speaker, it is a strange fact that the most insistent advocates of this measure come from those sections of the Union where there is the most illiteracy and the least immigration. In that section of the Union from which I come we need hundreds of miles of electric railroads to bring the products of our orchards and vineyards to the seaboard. The educated native American will not do the rough, hard work of digging trenches, ballasting roadways, and laying rails. The men who do that class of work are, for the most part, illiterates. Our experience has been that they are frugal and hard-working Greeks and Italians. These immigrants readily embrace the opportunity to educate themselves, and their children become progressive, cultured, patriotic American citizens. I believe that the adoption of an illiteracy test will not keep out undesirable immigrants, but it will keep out thousands of "hewers of wood and drawers of water" whose labor would add materially to the prosperity of our country.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the archbishop of St. Louis, and ask to have it read in my time.

[During the reading of the letter the time of the gentleman from Missouri expired, and he was granted sufficient time to have the reading of the letter completed.]

The Clerk read as follows:

ARCHBISHOP'S HOUSE,
St. Louis, January 15, 1913.

Congressman L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: * * * I am quite opposed to the literacy test; it is not the people who do not read that compose the criminal class—they do not furnish murderers for our Presidents, anarchists for our cities, nor Socialists for our universities. Furthermore, in Missouri our poor but honest immigrant farmer is graudally building up a decent country life, a practically new life and better life in our western country. I am surprised that any western Representatives would be in favor of this test.

The real test for the immigrant should be character, and character can exist without the accident of literary knowledge. The man who will live decently, and who has a working knowledge of the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule, who is physically and mentally sound, is an acquisition really worth having. The man who knows how to read but is not mentally honest is, in his coming, a menace rather than a blessing. * * *

I remain, with excellent good wishes,
Sincerely, yours,

JOHN J. GLENNON,
Archbishop of St. Louis.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by the inclusion of the telegram which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 24, 1913.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Southwestern Railroad and farmers are much interested that immigration bill shall contain exception as to illiterate Mexican laborers. This class of laborers is largely employed in the track work for railroads and furnishes cheap labor, especially for cotton growers. They are capable men, and their exclusion would seriously handicap these interests. Please give this matter consideration, and if consistent, act in favor of said exception.

LEE W. HAGERMAN.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is to be hoped that Members of the House will not deceive themselves with regard to the character of this bill. This is not the House bill, nor is it anything like it. Our own committee, headed by the gentleman from Alabama, as able and honorable a Member as sits in this House, after a most careful and exhaustive consideration, which extended over a year, decided to report a modest bill, with only the literacy test as a change in our immigration laws. That bill passed this House and was sent to the Senate. Instead of a single provision upon a single subject, we have returned to us an elaborate code of 38 sections, 58 pages in length, which, in my judgment, contains many objectionable features. It is said we must give up the well-considered judgment of the committee and of the House or there will be no legislation. I am opposed to submitting to that sort of coercion, and I think it would be vastly better that no legislation should be enacted than that the present substitute bill should become a law.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, our present law is sufficient for our present needs. Vigorously enforced it will be amply protective under existing conditions. Under our present laws we exclude all idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous or had two or more attacks of insanity, paupers and persons likely to become a public charge, professional beggars, persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, persons mentally or physically defective, persons convicted of or who admit committing a crime, polygamists, anarchists, prostitutes or those coming for the purpose of prostitution or any other immoral purpose, procurers, contract laborers, those previously deported within one year, those whose passage is paid for by another for gain or as wages, all children of 16 years unaccompanied by one or both of their parents. This list does not embrace all of the excluded classes, but it gives a fair idea of our present law. Our exclusionary list was not made up by theorists. It is the result of more than a century of experience. It is intended to keep from our shores the undesirable classes, and does so fairly well. Administration improvement and a stricter enforcement of the law is possible and should be secured. But it may well be doubted if it will be wise or safe to go much farther. Indeed, it is frankly admitted by some of the advocates of the present measure that we have gone as far as we can to sift and select the desirable and to protect ourselves from the undesirable immigrant. The present bill is not so much to protect immigration as to restrict. It is intended not to better its character but to stop it as far as possible.

A NATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

We are a nation of immigrants. Our forebears were all foreigners. In our earlier years colonizing companies induced a large immigration. In spite of the discomforts, the dangers, and the sufferings of those early voyages; in spite of shipwreck, smallpox, scurvy, and ship fever, between 1607 and 1660 about 80,000 persons were landed in America. During the century following immigrants came not only from the British Isles but from France, Spain, Holland, Germany, and Switzerland. And when our westward migration began America became a melting pot of races. The earlier colonists settled in communities—the Dutch in New York, the Germans and Quakers in Pennsylvania, the Puritans in Massachusetts—but when their sons and daughters moved west across the Alleghenies into the great valley of the Mississippi these races were commingled, their racial characteristics were soon lost, and the American citizen was created.

Methinks—

Said Tocqueville—

I see the destiny of America embodied in the first Puritan who landed on these shores, just as the human race was represented by the first man.

But proud as we are of the influence of Puritan characteristics—his religious independence, his indomitable courage, his unconquerable energy—in our national type, it can not now be claimed that the Puritan was an exemplar of American citizenship. It was by a fusion of the characteristics of all these immigrants that the American type was created. In this laboratory of American democracy American liberty was evolved, American ideals were formed, and American types created.

OUR IMMIGRATION HISTORY.

Up to 1810 the annual immigration was about 6,000. It fell to almost nothing on account of our war with England, but as soon as peace was restored it increased in 1817 to 20,000. In 1840 it was 84,000. It rose rapidly, until in 1854 it amounted to 427,000. Then, under the influence of business depression and the threatened Civil War, it fell in 1861 to 91,000. In 1873 it had again risen to nearly half a million. Business depression again checked it until under better conditions it rose in 1882 to more than three-quarters of a million. In 1893 and the years following it decreased, but since 1897 it has materially increased. The variation from year to year is considerable, but the average immigration as compared with population has been singularly uniform. In 1860 foreigners amounted to 15 per cent of our population; in 1870, 14.4 per cent; 1880, 13.3 per cent; 1890, 14.8 per cent; 1900, 13.6 per cent; 1910, about 15 per cent.

As an argument for restriction it is argued that the older immigration was of a high character and therefore advantageous, while the newer immigration is of a lower grade and should be repressed.

A short excursion into our history may be useful in determining the truth of this assertion and the value of this argument.

Prof. Commons estimated that one-half of all the immigrants of the colonial period landed as indentured servants. To pay for their passage money, which was exorbitant, they were sold, usually at auction, after their arrival into servitude. The shipowners derived enormous profit from this traffic in human flesh, while the suffering of the immigrants was terrible. On an average, adult men and women had to serve from 3 to 6 years, and children from 10 to 15 years. In case no buyers came to the ships the passengers were sold to agents, who chained them together and peddled them through the towns and villages. As late as 1819 there was a sale of immigrants in Philadelphia.

In the same year the annual report of the Society for the Prevention of Pauperism in the City of New York spoke thus of the immigrant of that day:

> They are frequently found destitute in our streets; they seek employment at our doors; they are found in our almshouses and in our hospitals; they are found in our * * * State prisons; and we lament to say they are too often led by want and by habit to form a phalanx of plunder and depredations.

In 1845 the delegates to the Native American National Convention published an address in which they discussed the immigration of that day as "of an ignorant and immoral character. The almshouses of Europe are emptied upon our coasts."

The rise of the Know-Nothing Party, whose principal article of faith was opposition to foreigners, constitutes an interesting chapter in our history. In 1856 it held a national convention which adopted a platform containing the following plank:

> Americans must rule America, and to this end native-born citizens should be selected for all State, Federal, and municipal offices of the Government employment in preference to all others.

It nominated Millard Fillmore for President. Nearly 1,000,000 votes were cast for him, and one State—Maryland—gave him its electoral vote. But the party was short lived. As Horace Greeley predicted, it lasted through one campaign only.

Benjamin Franklin opposed the coming of the Germans to Pennsylvania. Referring to them he said:

> Those who come hither are generally the most stupid of their own nation, and as ignorance is often attended with great credulity when knavery would mislead it, it is almost impossible to remove any prejudice they may entertain.

As early as 1789, for the avowed purpose of discouraging immigration, the period of naturalization was extended from 5 to 14 years. During the same session of Congress the odious alien and sedition laws were passed, which conferred upon the President the power to exclude at his will any foreigner found upon American territory. Our only consolation in contemplating this dishonorable chapter of our history lies in the fact that as soon as the sober judgment and sense of justice of the people could find expression these laws were repealed.

It will be seen from this review that the same objections that are being urged against our immigration to-day have been urged throughout our history. The past immigrant is always a good immigrant and the present immigrant is always a bad immigrant, no matter where he may come from. The same objections that are now being made against the Italians, the Greeks, and the Jews were made in former years against the Irish, the Swedes, and the Germans. As those objections were unfounded it is not a violent presumption that these are. It is certainly true that the average immigrant who comes here is among the most enterprising, thrifty, and courageous of the community from which he came, instead of being the "most stupid" as Franklin asserted. It requires energy, prudence, and foresight to conduct the inquiries, to arrange passage, to accumulate the necessary means, and to find a way across the Atlantic. The accomplishment of this no inconsiderable endeavor is in itself an earnest of those characteristics which make for useful citizenship.

UNFOUNDED PREJUDICE.

Strange indeed it is what prejudice may do in blinding men's minds to all the lessons of the past. We must keep out the Jews, the Greeks, and the Italians, say these objectors. And yet if you take from the past the contributions these people have made to civilization, you would blot out Christianity, you would blot out literature, art, poetry, eloquence, science, philosophy, government, and law. Nevertheless it is urged that it is dangerous to allow these people to come to our shores. I was told but the other day by the principal of one of the high schools that his honor students of foreign extraction outnumber those of the native born proportionately more than two to one.

The best orator in one of our State universities last year was a Jew. The most promising pupil in one of our largest art schools is an Italian. The leading students in one of our best technical schools are two Greeks. An acute foreigner, giving his observation of American traits, says:

> It is in fact astonishing to look at the classes in the New York schools down on the east side where there is not a child of American parentage, and yet not one who will admit he is an Italian, Russian, or Armenian. All these small people declare themselves passionately to be "American," with American patriotism and American pride.

It may not be an unhappy circumstance that we are thus able to infuse some of this passionate American patriotism into our national life which seems to have grown cold and captiously critical of everything American.

It may not be an idle thought that Providence in leading the Nation gave us first the sturdy energy, the practical industry, and the deliberate determination of the people from Great Britain, Germany, Norway, and Sweden; and that now it is adding to perfect the commingling of racial characteristics the poetry, the artistic temperament, and the passionate devotion of the southern countries.

From the first we have pursued a liberal policy, and we can not but believe it has given us a better and a higher type of manhood and womanhood. It has brought to us a greater national strength, a more rapid progress, a fuller development, a larger liberty, and a more perfect democracy. There is nothing in our experience during all the years of our history that would warrant the conclusion that it would have been better for us in the past, or that it would be better for us in the future, to adopt a restrictive policy.

IMMIGRATION AND CRIME.

It is argued in this debate that immigration ought to be checked because it increases crime and lawlessness. It is strange how persistent is the delusion that foreigners are naturally and inherently lawless and criminal. The charge has been made throughout our history whenever the antiforeign spirit was stirred that immigration was the mother of crime. As a matter of fact, there has never been any reliable evidence to show that the foreigner was any more lawless than the native born.

In truth the big criminals, the men who have stolen millions, have not been foreigners. The organized plunderers who have brought disgrace upon our Nation and our age have not been foreigners. The bankers and trustees and guardians who have stolen the property of widows and orphans have not been foreigners. The sharper, the swindler, the "gold-brick" crook, and the "blue-sky" fraud, the gambler, the pickpocket, the bank and train robber—these have not been foreigners.

It should be remembered that the periods of the largest immigration show the least proportion of crime, and the periods when immigration is least are the periods showing the greatest percentage of crime. According to a census report published in 1904, foreign-born persons between 15 and 19 years of age committed to prisons were nearly 1 per cent less in proportion than native born. Of the total number of white males 21 years of age and upward 26 per cent were foreign born and 74 per cent were native born; but the proportion of foreign-born major offenders was but 21.7 per cent, while the native whites was 78.3 per cent. In New York State, which has the largest foreign population, the native born were 61.7 per cent and the foreign born were 38.3 per cent; but of those in prison 68 per cent were native born and only 32 per cent were foreign born. The native white population of the country increased from 71.8 per cent in 1890 to 76.3 per cent in 1904. During the same period the percentage of foreign criminals decreased from 28.3 per cent to 23.7 per cent.

These statistics are sufficient to show that the charge that the foreigner is inherently bad and criminal is untrue, and what is of great significance, that our foreign population is not becoming more lawless as the years go on, but, on the contrary, less so. These statistics also show that the immigrant who is now coming is not a dangerous and criminal type. The immigrant of to-day is not a beggar or a tramp. He is a worker. He is industrious and willing to work and to work hard; and he does so as soon as he comes and as long as he stays. That type of man is rarely a criminal.

THE LABOR PROBLEM.

It is argued that immigration reduces wages and the demand for labor. This also is an old objection. The same argument was made when we had but 5,000,000 population. It was repeated when we had 25,000,000, and again when we had 50,000,000; and now when we approach 100,000,000 it is again urged. But the demand for labor was never so great as now and never before were wages so high. Notwithstanding the "floods" of foreigners and the "hordes" of immigrants that our friends say have been coming to drive out our home labor and reduce wages, every American laborer is holding his job and many are striking for more wages. It is a significant fact that the demand for labor has been greatest and the wages highest when immigration has been largest. This does not prove that immigration increases wages, but it does prove that the fears of those who believe that labor is in danger from immigration are groundless. Under our present laws the laborer comes when he is needed and there is a job for him, and he goes when he is not needed. The immigrant when he first comes does the hard, undesirable, although absolutely necessary, work. He digs the ditches; he cleans the streets; he does the lowest grade of manual labor. After a few years he is promoted to an easier job and better wages and the newer immigrant takes his place. It is manifest that if you shut out the immigrant you shut out this supply for the lower grades of labor. Somebody must do this work at the bottom of the scale. It is good work, it is honorable work, but it is not the most desired nor the best paid. But it must be done by somebody. We have a great and growing country. We shall continue to dig ditches, to canalize rivers, to tunnel our mountains, to grade our railroads, to clean streets, to build bridges, to fell forests, and to clear and cultivate our lands.

We have but begun to develop our resources. We have as yet but scratched the surface of our soil. We have under contemplation great works where more labor than can now be supplied will be needed. The demand for this rough labor exceeds the supply. Railroads can not find men enough to make contemplated improvements and extensions. Public works of great importance and magnitude have to be deferred on account of lack of labor. It is said that 200,000 farm hands could be immediately placed. One hundred thousand domestic servants could find work in New York City alone. We are entering upon great river improvements, and the "good roads" work will require a new supply of laborers. There is no danger the labor market will be oversupplied.

The Canadian Parliament appropriates over $1,000,000 yearly to encourage immigration. Canada pays a premium of $5 for every laborer who will come. She sends agents to distribute literature to every European nation. She grants money to the Salvation Army to induce recruits to come over. She aids poor and homeless children to come to her shores. Australia is doing everything in her power to encourage immigration. Argentina is doing the same. These countries are our competitors in the production of food products in the markets of the world. Is what is a good policy for them bad for us?

But it is suggested that our population is already large. It is true that our numbers are large, but so is our area and so is our productive capacity. Large as are our numbers our population is but 31 to the square mile. In Germany it is over 300. In Belgium it is over 600. As has been shown in this debate, if the United States was as thickly populated as Belgium we would support a population of 2,342,000,000 people. We could move all the population of the United States into the State of Texas, and then Texas would not be so densely populated as Belgium to-day.

It is a remarkable fact that this bill allows the entrance freely of the nonproducing classes—lawyers, doctors, preachers, teachers—those whom we do not need, because these professions are already overcrowded, and it keeps out the producing classes, whose labor and productive energy the Nation needs most. Our policy in the past has been that any good, strong, honest man who was willing to come here, earn an honest living, and make a home was welcome. That policy has approved itself in our success as a Nation, in our growth and development, and in the character of our citizenship. It will not be wise to abandon this policy now.

Since what date has numbers in our population ceased to be considered an advantage and a thing to be desired? What State or city or town is endeavoring to discourage increase in its population? Are any of the gentlemen who deplore the condition of an overcrowded Nation willing to apply exclusionary laws to their own State or city? Are they willing to say their city is so overcrowded that further increase is not desired? It is the proudest boast of an American citizen that his city grows. His happiest hour is when he recites by decades its percentage of increase, and can thus show that it stands high among the cities of the Nation. It would be a most singular anomaly if it could be made to appear that that which was good for a State or city was bad for a nation.

THE LITERACY TEST.

It is proposed in this bill to exclude anyone who desires to come to this country unless he or she can stand a literacy test. No one has attempted to justify this as a test of character. It is supported merely because it is desired to make our exclusionary laws as drastic as possible, and the application of this test will decrease the number of immigrants. All of us favor the strongest laws and the strictest enforcement against the entrance to our ports of the criminal, the vicious, the immoral, and the diseased. But these laws we have already. The literacy test will not keep out the undesirable and admit the desirable immigrant. It will exclude the unfortunate who have lived in countries where education was the privilege of the few and not the right of the many. But it will not keep out the Mafia, the Camorra, the Black Hander, the anarchist, the nihilist, the dynamiter—for all these can read. From the unfortunate, poor man who with difficulty secures money enough to pay his passage, who loves liberty enough to come, who has energy enough to break away from home ties, who brings here but two strong arms, an open mind, and an honest heart—from such as these this country has nothing to fear, even if he can not read.

When a bill providing a literacy test passed a preceding Congress, President Cleveland vetoed it on the ground that such a test was not a true, a fair, or a just test of character or citizenship. And he was justified in so doing. The uneducated European who comes here is so from lack of opportunity, rather than from inclination. The free school for everybody is not there prevalent. By the application of this test it is his misfortune and not his fault we will punish. Want of education is deplorable, but it is not criminal. It involves no moral turpitude. It is a misfortune and not a crime. We have all known honorable men, and virtuous, lovable women, faithful wives, and devoted mothers, who would have been classed as "undesirable citizens" under the application of this law. A Senator said during the debate on this bill that under its provisions his own mother would have been excluded. The mother of Abraham Lincoln would have been barred.

This act can not be defended on the ground of patriotism. It opposes our whole past history, which opened the doors of liberty to those who fled from oppression and tyranny. It can not be defended on the ground of humanity, for it shuts the door of opportunity and of hope to the unfortunate and the poor. To the unfortunate, our brothers in blood, it says: "Smug and secure in this land of promise and comfort, I am determined to keep it all for myself. It is true there is plenty of room for you, indeed there is actual need for you, but I am afraid you may get something I may want. Back, then, to the land from whence you and I both came. Your mistake is that you did not start soon enough."

Lowell in his Commemoration Ode wrote of our country:

> She that lifts up the manhood of the poor,
> She of the open soul and open door,
> With room about her hearth for all mankind.

It is well he penned those patriotic lines before this act was passed. For if it shall become a law we can no longer boast the "open soul and open door."

When our country was in danger, when it was calling for volunteers to save its very existence, it did not suggest a literacy test for enlistment. It welcomed every helping hand and every loyal heart to save the Nation. Our foreign-born population vied with the native born in service and sacrifice. Indeed, it has been shown that the proportion of foreigners in the ranks was much greater than their proportion of our population.

One of the distinguished advocates of this bill said he favored it because it would check immigration. He admits we are a nation of immigrants and that immigration has greatly stimulated our growth and been the cause of our greatness. But he says that now there is an attempt to abolish constitutions and let the "momentary will of the people" prevail, and under these circumstances he thinks it necessary to restrict immigration. This belief and fear implies both lack of capacity and want of inclination on the part of the immigrant to learn and love American institutions. Against that belief and fear I am pleased to put the opinion of James Bryce, who in his American Commonwealth, speaking of the younger foreigners who have learned English, imbibed the sentiments, and assimilated the ideas of the country, says:

> They are more American than the American in their desire to put on the character of their new country.

It is not the foreigner who is attacking our institutions and proposing to abolish constitutions. It is our native born. And when the struggle to save American liberty and constitutional government shall come, the foreigner will be found foremost in defending that which he sacrificed so much to secure.

It has always been our proud boast that we have here established a free land, in which there has always been a welcome for every man struggling for liberty, for religious freedom, for a chance in life, for a home, for education for his children, for an opportunity to carve out for himself a career of dignity as an American citizen. To take the step now contemplated is to belie all this, is to shatter these ideals, is to destroy this hope. For we are most truly American when we are most generous to others, when we are most considerate of the unfortunate, when we most earnestly strive to make our country foremost in the cause of justice, of humanity, and of righteousness.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, when the previous conference report was before this House I objected to certain provisions in it relating to certificates of character. Those provisions have been eliminated, and I shall now vote to agree to the conference report, although if it were open for amendment I would like to see some amendments made respecting immigrants charged with crime.

But I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose chiefly of making this observation: Last week when this conference report was before the House, containing this provision with respect to certificates of character—a provision that was so un-American, so vicious, so indefensible, that in another body not one voice was raised to champion it when it was rejected by that body—it was agreed to here by a vote of 149 to 70, and out of those 149 votes, Mr. Speaker, 102 were Democrats.

The Democratic majority in this House has therefore made a record here that they must face in the future of favoring legislation compelling immigrants coming to this country to produce certificates of character whenever the country from which they come issues such certificates. In other words, the Democrats in this House have taken the position that in addition to the excluded classes named in the bill foreign Governments should have the right to determine who else should be excluded. Putting it another way, they declare that no Russian Hebrew shall be admitted to our shores if Russia objects, and no citizen or subject of any other country, fleeing to us from religious or political persecution, shall be admitted here if that other country objects.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of sincere congratulation that this vicious provision has been eliminated, but if this Democratic House had had its way it still would have been in the bill, and the country must thank the Republican Senate alone for its elimination.

From a partisan standpoint I might rejoice over this situation in which the Democratic majority in this House have placed themselves, but I am much more interested in securing legislation that is wise and just than I am in securing party advantage, and I am calling attention to this matter now in this way solely in the hope that in the future our Democratic friends will not be so ready to follow leadership blindly without regard to the merits of the questions involved. If they shall fail to heed this lesson in the future, then they can be sure that this will not be the only instance of their making a record of which they should be thoroughly ashamed.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take my share of the responsibility with those 142 Democrats. I had as much part as anyone in putting that provision into the conference report. I still believe that it was wise. But discretion is the better part of valor, Mr. Speaker, and I joined in the glad throng which ran away.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, there has been but about three full minutes of discussion of the points that should be discussed in the consideration of a measure so vital in its bearing on the country's future, and the three minutes were devoted by the chairman of the committee the last time the bill was before the House to the consideration of the economic aspects of this important legislation. The question of restricted immigration is in no sense a new question. As far back as May 9, 1753, Benjamin Franklin, in a letter to a friend, protested against the large number of Germans coming here, in the following terms:

> Those who come hither are generally the most stupid of their own nation, and as ignorance is often attended with great credulity, when knavery would mislead it * * * it is almost impossible to remove any prejudice they may entertain * * *. Not being used to liberty, they know not how to make modest use of it * * *. I remember when they modestly declined intermeddling with our elections; but now they come in droves and carry all before them, except in one or two counties.
> Few of their children know English. They import only books from Germany, and of the six printing houses in the Province two are entirely German, two half German, half English, and but two are entirely English.
> They have one German newspaper and one half German. Advertisements intended to be general are now printed in Dutch and English. The signs in our streets (Philadelphia) have inscriptions in both languages, and some places only in German. They begin, of late, to make all their bonds and other legal instruments in their own language, which (though I think it ought not to be) are allowed in our courts, where the German business so increases that there is continued need of interpreters, and I suppose in a few years they will be necessary in the assembly, to tell one half of our legislators what the other half says. In short, unless the stream of importation could be turned from this to other Colonies, as you very judiciously propose, they will soon outnumber us; that all the advantages we will have will, in my opinion, be not able to preserve our language, and even our Government will become precarious.

And for more than 115 years the agitation has gone on to put restrictive immigration upon the statute books, but the good sense and manhood and Americanism of the Representatives of the American people in Congress have always been such as to prevent the adoption of restrictive legislation of this character. What is the condition that confronts us to-day? The men of the House have been bombarded with petitions favoring restriction, stating that the foreigners are going to overrun the country. What is the actual fact?

In the last fiscal year the net gain in population by immigration was only 400,000 and the year before that only 500,000. In the calendar year just closed about 500,000 aliens went back home. In 1908, it will be remembered, the outflow was actually larger than the inflow, and we lost population by the homeward movement of immigrants.

In five years our net gain has been about two and a half millions; so that the average annual increase of population by immigration has amounted to about one-half of 1 per cent—by no means an alarmingly large admixture of aliens. Immigration from 1840 to 1850 and from 1850 to 1860 and from 1880 to 1890 amounted to more than 10 per cent of the total population at the beginning of each period. Relatively it was twice as great as the immigration of the last five years.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has stated during debate that the Greeks and the South Italians are unassimilable, incapable of conforming to customs in a free republic, and so forth.

I want to quote from Daniel Webster, who in 1823, speaking in favor of recognizing the independence of Greece in the old House of Representatives, now Statuary Hall, said:

> An occasion which calls the attention to a spot so distinguished, so connected with interesting recollections as Greece may naturally create something of warmth and enthusiasm. In a grave political discussion, however, it is necessary that those feelings should be chastised. I shall endeavor properly to repress them, although it is impossible that they should be altogether extinguished. We must, indeed, fly beyond the civilized world; we must pass the dominion of law and the boundaries of knowledge; we must more especially withdraw ourselves from this place and the scenes and objects which here surround us if we would separate ourselves entirely from the influence of all those memorials of herself which ancient Greece has transmitted for the admiration and the benefit of mankind. This free form of government, this popular assembly, the common council held for the common good—where have we contemplated its earliest models? This practice of free debate and public discussion, the contest of mind with mind, and that popular eloquence which, if it were now here, on a subject like this would move the stones of the Capitol—whose was the language in which all these were first exhibited? Even the edifice in which we assemble, these proportioned columns, this ornamented architecture, all remind us that Greece has existed and that we, like the rest of mankind, are greatly her debtors.
> [Applause.]

Now they say we should increase the head tax. And I am reminded of the story of an Irish orator, who was a candidate for Congress, addressing a majority of his countrymen in New York, and he said at that time—some 20 years ago: "They want to make our head tax $25. My friends, could you picture a man leaving the old country if he had $25." [Laughter.]

The complaint has been frequently heard during the debate upon this bill that the class of emigrants coming from southern Europe has been largely responsible for the falling off of emigration from western Europe, yet no statistics have been presented by which this contention might be sustained.

On the contrary, many nations are spending large sums of money to encourage what we seek to destroy. A bonus of £1 is paid to the booking agent on each ticket to Canada sold to a British subject who is engaged in the occupation of farmer, farm laborer, gardener, stableman, carter, railway surface man, navvy, or miner, and who signifies his intention to follow farming or railway construction work in Canada.

Not content with the work of regular immigration agents, Canada has been sending agricultural delegates to Great Britain. The Salvation Army is also utilized as an agency to promote emigration to Canada, and grants of money are made to the army for that purpose. Canada annually receives a considerable number of English immigrants, who have been sent by private or State aid from the mother country.

Canada also encourages the immigration of poor and homeless British children to her borders. This immigration is chiefly recruited from the orphan or industrial homes of the British Isles.

An increase in the head tax is proposed in this bill which, while it does not entail a great hardship, is so entirely at variance with methods now in vogue in other countries as to be worthy of serious thought.

The Australian Government furnishes land to settlers at a nominal price, payable in small installments. Moreover, in all the States except Tasmania allowances are made to settlers for improving their holdings. By way of further inducements, the States pay the passage, wholly or in part, of immigrants from the United Kingdom whose purpose it is to settle on the land or to engage in farming or other work of a similar nature. Assistance is also offered to domestic servants and other persons who can satisfy the Australian agent in London that they would make desirable settlers in Australia. The policy of assisting immigration has been pursued by the several States of Australia for a greater part of the time since their settlement. According to official information 653,698 State-aided immigrants have been admitted to the Australian States.

That all these efforts should have diverted from the United States a part of the British emigration was inevitable, irrespective of any causes originating in the United States. The rise of land values in the United States and the agricultural opportunities of the Canadian Northwest have during the past decade resulted in an emigration of American farmers to Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

Members have laid great stress upon the unsupported assertion that immigration has restricted opportunities for employment and has been a contributing factor in the establishment of a low wage scale.

Wages are higher in most industries and workday hours are shorter than ever known in the history of this country, and the majority of men in the labor organizations are either immigrants or the children of immigrants.

Unemployment and immigration are the effects of economic forces working in opposite directions; that which produces business expansion reduces unemployment and attracts immigration; that which produces business depression increases unemployment and reduces immigration.

Yet it may be said that while immigration is not a contributory cause of unemployment, restriction of immigration would nevertheless reduce unemployment. An answer to this argument is furnished by the example of Australia, where immigration does not keep up with emigration, and yet unemployment is an ever-present problem, precisely as in the United States. Australia is a new country, with abundant natural resources. Its area is as great as that of the United States—exclusive of Alaska—while its population at the census of 1906 was a million short of the United States figures for 1800. The Australian statistics of unemployment essentially differ from ours. The Twelfth Census counted all breadwinners who were idle at any time during the 12 months preceding the date of enumeration. The statistics of the New York bureau of labor comprise all wage earners who were unemployed during the first or the third quarter of the year.

The Australian statistics, on the other hand, give the number unemployed on the date of enumeration. A comparison of the Australian ratio of unemployment with the New York ratio must therefore be favorable to Australia and unfavorable to New York. Still the comparison is highly instructive. The Australian ratio in 1901 varied from 3.96 per cent for South Australia to 6.73 per cent for New South Wales. In the State of New York the total amount of unemployment for the three summer months—July, August, and September—fluctuated during the years 1897–1907 between 1.9 per cent and 6.5 per cent. It thus appears that Australia, with an excess of emigration over immigration, is suffering from unemployment at least as much as the State of New York, which is teeming with immigrants.

We are told that the tendency of emigrants to herd in the cities creates a condition worthy of grave apprehension and constitutes in itself a menace, yet the American farmer finds it impossible to keep his own children on the farm.

Labor-saving inventions have so reduced farm labor as to make it unnecessary to employ large numbers of men, except at planting and harvesting seasons, and in consequence employment for a longer period than six months annually is almost unheard of.

The hours of labor on the farms are longer than even in the mills of the United States Steel Co., the prevailing custom being to work from sunrise to sunset, and while it may be argued that this is true only of harvesting and planting time, it is equally true that this is the only season when additional help is required.

Long hours, small pay, and irregular employment are what the immigrant can expect on a farm. His preference for other employment seems to call for no explanation by special racial characteristics; it is merely another illustration of the rule that immigration follows the demand for labor.

In the settlement of agricultural districts a point is reached beyond which any considerable growth of agricultural population is possible only if there is a change to more intensive forms of agriculture. * * * If there is no such change, the further growth of population must consist in the development of urban or nonagricultural communities.

This point has been reached in the United States. The public domain has practically all passed into private occupation. Land values during the past decade have climbed to unheard-of heights. At the same time western Canada offers to settlers vast areas of public land practically free.

It seems that for some time to come the Canadian Northwest will furnish the same opportunities for extensive agriculture as the Western States did a generation ago. Western farmers find it profitable to dispose of their land in the United States and to take up public land in western Canada. The emigration of American farmers to Canada has reached considerable proportions. In the United States a market for agricultural labor may grow up in the future with the eventual spread of intensive agriculture. But this is a problem for the American farmer to solve. The immigrant should not be burdened with the mission to reform the methods of American agriculture.

At no time in the history of the Republic has prosperity been greater in our agricultural communities than during the last two decades, yet a perusal of statistics discloses the fact that in certain agricultural States there has been a marked falling off in population.

Decrease of the population of rural territory, 1900–1910.

State.	Number.	Per cent.
Illinois	111,963	7.0
Indiana	132,266	9.5
Iowa	152,673	12.1
Kansas	4,919	.5
Michigan	9,946	.8
Missouri	133,489	8.0
Ohio	93,055	5.3
Wisconsin	8,201	.7

Even where the rural population of a State has increased since 1900 the maps given in the census bulletins show a few agricultural counties with a declining population.

This depopulation of rural territory is due to emigration of native Americans of native stock. The figures for 1910 are not as yet available; the census of 1900 recorded in Kansas a loss of 2.8 per cent of the native population of native parentage in settlements of less than 2,500 inhabitants, and in Nebraska a loss of 1.3 per cent of the same element. In New England, New York, and New Jersey the loss was still greater; the maximum was reached in Connecticut, viz, 16.7 per cent.

This bill makes provisions for the entry of the nonproducing class, preachers, teachers, and so forth, and aims to restrict admission of the producing class, despite the fact that the true source of national wealth and prosperity results from the work of those who toil with their hands and brains rather than brains alone.

The population of the continental United States increased between 1890 and 1910 from 63,000,000 to 92,000,000, i. e., 46 per cent. During the same period the production of coal in the United States more than trebled, the increase being from 140,000,000 to 448,000,000 long tons. As the exports of coal from the United States are insignificant these figures indicate that to-day three times as much coal is consumed in this country as 20 years ago. Coal is the foundation of modern industry. The increased consumption of coal indicates that the consumption of steam has increased threefold, i. e., that the whole American industry has grown in proportion. The production of steel, another basic article of modern industry, increased during the 20-year period, 1889–1909, sevenfold, from 3,400,000 to 24,000,000 long tons. The production of copper more than quadrupled, viz., from 101,000 to 488,000 tons. The number of ton-miles of freight carried over American railways nearly trebled from 1890 to 1909, the increase being from seventy-seven billions to two hundred and nineteen billions.

The total amount of bank clearings in the United States likewise nearly trebled in the 20-year period between 1890 and 1910, having grown from $58,000,000,000 to $169,000,000,000. The increase in the amount of bank clearings may be accepted as a fair index of the aggregate industrial expansion. Thus, while the economic activities of the people of the United States have trebled during the last 20 years, population has increased by less than one-half.

The introduction of labor-saving machinery has lessened the potential demand for new laborers, yet the pace of industrial development has been faster than the progress, i. e., exactly 100 per cent. The average number of wage earners employed in manufactures increased between 1889 and 1909 from 4,200,000 to 6,600,000, i. e., 57 per cent.

The unbiased testimony of figures shows that the demand for labor within the last 20 years has outrun the growth of population, both through natural increase and through immigration. The investigators of the Immigration Commission sought to ascertain from employers of labor the "reason for employing immigrants," and were told that "they found it necessary either to employ immigrant labor or delay industrial advancement." A number of specific instances are quoted in the commission's reports. In the Birmingham iron and steel district, Alabama, where the number of immigrants is insignificant, "the largest employers of labor state that under normal conditions, at the present stage of the industrial development of the district, the ordinary labor supply which may be relied upon continuously affords about 50 per cent of the total necessary to operate all plants and mines at their full capacity."

In the centers of immigration, on the other hand, the clothing manufacturers likewise claim "that the industry has developed faster than the number of clothing workers has increased." With the revival of business after the depression of 1908, they found it almost "impossible to keep their pay rolls full."

I have here petitions representing the united protest of Irish, Germans, Hebrews, Poles, Italians, Lithuanians, Hungarians, Bohemians, Greeks, Finns, Slavs, and other citizens, representing nearly 500,000 signatures, which I shall present to his excellency, the President, Hon. William Howard Taft. His courageous stand for justice and true American ideals will in my opinion result in a veto of this iniquitous measure, which the good though recently dormant sense of Congress should uphold.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much time we have used?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has used 9 minutes, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] 8½ minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has used 15 minutes and has 12½ minutes left.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] about to use some of his time?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the voice of true Americanism has at last been heard in this House. It has been voiced by that eminent statesman who has been Speaker of this House for four successive terms, and whose leadership on most questions I have had the honor to follow for 20 years. He has just demonstrated by the words he has spoken that he is worthy of leadership even on the question of immigration. [Applause.]

I want to bring out one fact, Mr. Speaker, that has not been stated in this debate, and that is that those districts which receive little or no immigration are voting almost solidly to exclude it, while, upon the other hand, all the districts of the country which receive immigrants are voting almost solidly to continue to receive them. If immigration were an evil would it not, I ask you, find expression in this House on the part of Representatives in the districts which receive immigrants? The great trouble with those who are proposing restrictive measures is that this question is really so little understood. You forget, my friends, that an immigrant is not only a producer but also a consumer, and it was that fact which caused another great Speaker of this House—Thomas B. Reed—to say that every immigrant practically brings his job with him. Whatever vocation he may have, he has a job for those in other vocations, and consequently he practically solves the problem himself, if immigration were still a problem. I claim, however, that it is not. If we get 800,000 immigrants a year do you not know, according to the figures published by the Department of Commerce and Labor, that 400,000 return every year, and that of the 400,000 remaining about 200,000 are women and children, so that practically there is an annual addition of only 200,000 to the population of this country, and that is about the addition that even the most densely populated countries of the earth, such as Germany and England, receive from the outside. Here we have a country with only 25 people to the square mile, while Germany has 386 and Belgium 576.

Talk about stopping immigration at a time when all the industries of the country are crying out for labor! I say that there is no economic reason for this bill, and I can not discover any motives, except unworthy ones, behind this kind of legislation. I congratulate my friends, the managers of this bill, however, for having seen the error of their ways. When I offered an amendment providing that immigrants should be required to read any language, they insisted it must be the language of some country. They voted my amendment down, but in conference they saw that the amendment was justified. They also voted down my motion to strike out the so-called certificate provision of the bill, but now they present their report with that provision eliminated. If more time were given us, Mr. Speaker, we could probably convince them that the whole bill should be stricken out because its spirit is un-American and vicious and because it is a great blunder from an economic as well as from a moral standpoint.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] use some of his time?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I prefer that the gentleman from Alabama use his time.

Mr. BURNETT. We have used more than our share.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to protest with all the force I possess against the passage of this measure. "America for Americans" is an old and familiar cry. I have heard it ever since I have been able to listen to anything going on about me. I was born in New England, and I know the intention of the measure now before the House and the people back of it. It is not to shut out a few unfortunate people who have been deprived of an opportunity to learn to read in the country from which they come. It is simply an entering wedge to bring forth other legislation that has for its object the shutting out of immigrants altogether. And the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] told the truth when he said it was only a question of time, in his opinion, until legislation to wholly restrict immigration ought to be brought forward. The fact is that this is a step in that direction. The argument in favor of this bill does not come from people who know anything about immigrants. It comes from people who have no immigration to their districts whatever.

This is a fact, and the further fact is that a lobby representing so-called patriotic organizations has been maintained here in Washington for several years working in every direction that they knew how to bring about restrictive legislation, and this bill is a result of it. I know that the liberty-loving people of America are not in favor of this kind of legislation. I know that the thoroughgoing American interested in the progress and prosperity of our Nation is not in sympathy with any such a movement, and I feel certain that when the motives back of this legislation are fully known by the American people there will be a protest against it from one end of the country to the other.

I represent a district the population of which is made up mostly of immigrants and the children of immigrants. They are industrious, prosperous, law-abiding citizens. They come here to make this country their home, and they are just as much interested in the general welfare of our country as any other class of our citizens. I regret that we are departing from the principles of our forefathers, who proclaimed this to be the land of liberty and freedom, where the oppressed of all nations could find a home. I am sure if the men advocating the passage of this bill lived among these people as I have lived nearly all of my life, knowing them as I do, knowing the efforts they have made to better their conditions, to become upright and honorable citizens, I feel certain they would not be active in advocating the passage of such restrictive legislation. Because men are deprived of an opportunity to gain an education in the country from which they come is it a reason they should be denied admittance here? Will it be contended because a man can not read he will not make a good citizen?

If the object is to shut out undesirable citizens, let us pass legislation that will restrict such immigration. The cunning and crafty schemers will be admitted, but the poor, honest, upright immigrant, because he is unable to read, will be deprived of admittance. Do you wonder, then, that I am opposed to the passage of this bill? I hope and trust it will be defeated. It is un-American; it is undemocratic. It is against those principles that have made this Nation what it is. Has America ceased to be the land of hope, the land of asylum for the unfortunate and oppressed who are seeking liberty and freedom?

If so, pass this bill, and the hour will come when you gentlemen who vote for this measure will be hurled from power with a greater force than that which speeds the waters over the falls of Niagara. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, it has been said by one of America's most distinguished sons, ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, that next to the conservation of our natural resources immigration was our most important national problem. In the minds of many immigration is even more important than conservation, because it goes a long way in settling the kind of people who make up the population of this country now and in the future; and the kind of people there are in a country inevitably determines the kind of citizenship, the kind of government, and the kind of civilization the country has; and the kind of citizenship determines the liberty, the sort of happiness, and the measure of progress which prevail in it. The importance, therefore, of the subject of immigration to this country can readily be appreciated by every thoughtful American. A little history of immigration legislation may not be amiss.

From the first settlement of this country at St. Augustine, Fla., in 1565 down to 1875—more than 300 years—immigrants came here as a matter of course, so far as Federal legislation was concerned. Congress was forbidden by the Constitution of the United States to interfere, prior to 1808, with any State's right to admit all the immigrants it saw fit, except Congress might impose a tax or duty not to exceed $10 on each person admitted. Practically up to 1835 the only legislation enacted by the Federal Government, and practically all that was proposed, was the law of 1819, regulating steerage passengers at sea and making provision for recording statistics relative to immigrants to this country. None was kept before this. Profs. Jenks and Lauck, in their book, the Problem of Immigration, say, on page 41:

> In earlier days neither the Federal Government nor State governments had passed any laws to protect the United States against the immigration of undesirable persons of whatsoever kind. Even the energetic action of those promoting the so-called "Native American," or "Know Nothing," movement from 1835 to 1860 resulted in no protective legislation. In 1866 a joint resolution [of Congress] condemned the action of Switzerland and other nations pardoning persons convicted of murder or other infamous crimes on condition that they would emigrate to the United States.

So up to this time all that was done to prevent even murderers from coming to this country was just to pass a resolution condemning such things; but that did not prevent them from coming.

From 1835 to 1860 the subject of immigration to this country was much discussed, and there sprang up what was known as the "Native American" and "Know-Nothing" movements, largely basing their opposition to immigrants to this country who embraced the Catholic faith. These movements soon assumed the form of a political organization known in history as the American Republican Party, and later the Know-Nothing Party. As a result of these organizations—organizations in the main later affiliating with the new political movement—the United States Senate in 1836 passed a resolution directing the Secretary of State to collect information respecting the immigration of foreign paupers and criminals to the United States.

The House of Representatives in 1838 agreed to a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee of the House to consider the propriety of passing a law prohibiting the importation of vagabonds and paupers into this country, as well as to consider the expediency of making our loose naturalization laws more stringent. This resolution was referred to a committee of seven members, and their favorable report was the first congressional report ever made concerning any phase of the immigration question. A bill was introduced in Congress, upon the recommendation of the majority report of the committee, which provided that any master of a vessel who took on board an alien passenger who was an idiot, lunatic, maniac, or one afflicted with an incurable disease, or one convicted of an infamous crime, with the intention of transporting such person to the United States should, upon conviction, be fined $1,000 or be imprisoned from one to three years. This bill was not even considered by Congress, and then for some 10 years following little attempt was made to secure immigration legislation; but the great increase in immigration to this country from Europe from 1848 to 1850 put new life and fears in the breasts of those fighting immigration, and it is recorded that in 1855 both the governors and legislatures of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, California, and Kentucky were "Know-Nothings." The slogan of the "Know-Nothing" Party was that Americans must rule America, and their greatest strength was in the Thirty-fourth Congress, from 1854 to 1856, when they claimed 43 Representatives and 5 Senators. Ten years later, however, in the Thirty-eighth Congress, from 1864 to 1866, there was not a "Know-Nothing" Representative in the House, and the "Know-Nothing" Party disappeared without having accomplished anything against immigration. The truth is that in 1864 Congress passed a law to encourage immigration, especially the importation of contract labor. This law was repealed, however, in 1868, leaving on the statute books the act of 1819, amended slightly by the acts of 1847 and 1848, providing improved conditions in the steerage of immigration ships. The law of 1864 stands out as the only attempt on the part of the National Government to promote immigration. New York in 1824 passed a law requiring all masters of vessels arriving at the port of entry to make a written report giving the name, age, and last residence of every person on board during the voyage, and whether any of the passengers had gone on board any other vessel, with a view of proceeding to New York.

Another section of the law gave the mayor of New York City the power to require bond of every master of a vessel to indemnify the mayor and the overseer of the poor from any expense incurred for passengers brought in and not reported. This law was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, and in 1829 the State of New York passed another law, which provided that the master of every vessel arriving from a foreign port should pay to the health commissioner $1.50 for every cabin passenger, $1 for every steerage passenger, mate, sailor, or marine, and 25 cents for every person on a coasting vessel.

In 1837 Massachusetts passed a law requiring the owner of a vessel to pay $2 for each alien passenger brought to her ports and to give bond that certain immigrants should not become a public charge. Both the New York and the Massachusetts statutes were later held in part to be unconstitutional. California and Louisiana passed statutes looking to the limitation of immigration, which were held to be unconstitutional. In California the question of Chinese immigration became so acute that recourse was had to the Federal Government, which resulted in the Burlingame treaty, which was proclaimed on July 28, 1868, and which was the first treaty to deal with Chinese immigration to the United States. The attitude of the United States in this treaty toward Chinese immigration was not popular in the Pacific Coast States, and they continued their agitation for further restriction of Chinese immigrants, which resulted in the Congress of the United States passing the act of March 3, 1875, aimed at immigrants from China, Japan, and other oriental countries. This law prohibited the importation of convicts, women for immoral purposes, coolie labor, and Chinese and Japanese subjects without their free and voluntary consent, and fixed heavy penalties for a violation of the provisions of the statute. Later other treaties and Chinese and Japanese exclusion acts forbade the immigration of Chinese and Japanese to this country, as well as Korean laborers, skilled or unskilled. And that is the way the matter stands to-day. So the bill now before the House is not intended to exclude Chinese, Japanese, or Korean laborers, skilled or unskilled, as that is already provided for.

From the unsatisfactory attempt of State legislation on the immigration question it became apparent that the subject was too big for State control, and in a very unusual decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on March 20, 1876, that court decreed:

> We are of the opinion that this whole subject [of immigration] has been confided to Congress by the Constitution; that Congress can more appropriately and with more acceptance exercise it than any other body known to our laws, State or national; that by providing a system of laws in these matters applicable to all parts and to all vessels a serious question which has long been a matter of contest and complaint may be effectually and satisfactorily settled.

This decision virtually put the subject of immigration under Federal control, and on July 6, 1876, following the decision of the Supreme Court in March of that year, Senator Conkling and Representative Cox of New York introduced bills in Congress for the national regulation of immigration. No legislation, however, of this sort was put on the statute books until August 3, 1882. This law provided, among other things, that a head tax of 50 cents each be levied on all aliens entering the ports of the United States to defray expenses of regulating immigration and caring for needy immigrants after landing; that lunatics, idiots, convicts (except for political offenses), and persons likely to become public charges should not be permitted to land, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be charged with executing the provisions of the act, and that he be empowered to enter into contracts with such States officers as the governor of any State might designate to take charge of the local affairs of immigration within such State.

On February 26, 1885, the first act of Congress was approved, forbidding the importation of contract labor to the United States. This law was defective in that no arrangement was made for its general execution, no inspection of the alien was provided for, nor deportation of the contract laborer, if found so to be. This act, however, was amended by an act of February 23, 1887, which gave the Secretary of the Treasury authority to deport within one year from landing any alien who had come to this country contrary to the provisions of the contract-labor act.

In 1889 a standing Committee on Immigration was established in the Senate of the United States and a select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization was established in the House.

In 1890 these committees were authorized to make a joint investigation of the immigration question, and especially to look into the various State laws on the subject. These committees, in making their report, suggested that while no very radical changes in the immigration laws were at that time advisable, still they found that throughout the country there existed a strong sentiment for a stricter enforcement of these laws.

The fact is that in the year 1890 one or more political parties in 23 different States demanded additional regulation of immigration. Responsive to this demand for stricter immigration laws and regulations the Congress of the United States passed, and it was approved on March 3, 1891, an additional immigration act amendatory of previous acts. This act added to the list of aliens heretofore excluded those "suffering from a loathsome or contagious disease," "polygamists," and those "whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or who is assisted by others to come," except, however, that any person living in the United States could pay the way of a relative or friend, provided, of course, that the relative or friend did not belong to some of the excluded classes. This act strengthened further the existing contract-labor law by prohibiting the encouragement of immigration by promises of employment through advertisements published in any foreign country, and steamship companies were forbidden under penalty to solicit or encourage immigration.

The law of 1891 also created the office of Superintendent of Immigration, and instead of some State officer, by appointment of the governor, having charge of the execution of the immigration laws in that State, as provided for in the act of 1882, the whole question of immigration for the first time was completely under Federal control.

This act also provided that the commanding officer of every vessel carrying aliens to our shores should furnish to the proper immigration officials the name, nationality, last residence, and destination of all immigrants on board; that medical examination of immigrants at United States ports should be made by surgeons of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, and within one year after arrival any immigrant might be returned who had come to this country in violation of law, and that, too, at the expense of the transportation company that brought him. It was not until 1907, however, that steamship companies were required to keep a record of outgoing passengers.

For the first time inspection of immigrants on the Mexican and Canadian borders was established. While this was the most stringent immigration act passed by Congress up to this time still the subject of immigration continued to be much discussed, and a strong movement for further restriction developed, owing largely to the industrial depression from 1890 to 1896. Investigations more or less extensive were conducted by joint committees of Congress and also by the Industrial Commission. In 1894 an act was passed raising the head tax from 50 cents to $1, but President Cleveland vetoed another bill passed by both branches of Congress providing for a literacy test.

Based upon the report of the Industrial Commission made to Congress February 20, 1902, a bill was introduced in the House providing for a complete codification and rearrangement of all immigration acts from March 3, 1875, to the act of 1894. An amendment was offered to this bill and passed by the House by a vote of 86 to 7 providing that all persons over 15 years of age who were unable to read the English language or some other language should be excluded, making an exception in favor of wives, parents, grandparents, and children under 18 years of age. The bill so amended passed the House May 27, 1902. When it reached the Senate it elminated the educational test, raised the head tax from $1 to $2, and made it unlwful for any person to assist in the entry or naturalization of alien anarchists. The House agreed to these amendments, and the bill was approved by the President March 3, 1903.

It was not until February 20, 1907, that any other immigration act of much import was passed by Congress, although by an act of February 14, 1903, the Department of Commerce and Labor was established and the Commissioner General of Immigration was placed under that department, his official position being that of a head of a bureau. On June 29, 1906, the Bureau of Immigration was changed to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens was provided for, and the administration of the new naturalization law was charged to this bureau.

A little history of the immigration act of February 20, 1907, the latest now on the statute books (with a small amendment of March 26, 1910), and the one sought to be amended by the bill we are now considering, may not be amiss:

A bill introduced by Senator DILLINGHAM, of Vermont, was favorably reported by the Senate committee on March 29, 1906. This bill sought to amend the immigration act of 1903 by increasing the head tax from $2 to $5. Imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, children under 17 years of age unaccompanied, and persons "who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of such a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living," were added to the excluded classes. The section of existing law excluding prostitutes was amended by adding: "Women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose."

A division of information was created in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and steamship companies were for the first time required to furnish to the proper immigration officials lists of outgoing passengers. In the Senate the bill was amended by the insertion of a literacy test very similar to the one this House is now considering and which I will later quote, and the Senate bill as amended by the literacy test passed the Senate May 23, 1906. When the bill reached the House it was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and they amended it by substituting one of their own in many respects similar to it, including the literacy test. In the conference between the House and Senate conferees the head tax was made $4 and the other amendments were agreed to except the literacy test was eliminated, and a commission composed of nine members was authorized to make a complete investigation of the immigration question and report its findings to Congress. The bill as amended became a law February 20, 1907. Composing this commission, which I have referred to, were to be three Members of the House appointed by the Speaker, three Members of the Senate appointed by the President of the Senate, and the other members of the commission to be appointed by the President of the United States. This commission, after an extensive investigation both in this country and in Europe, costing $1,000,000 and covering a period of four years, made a voluminous report, embracing 42 volumes of printed matter, covering all phases of the immigration question. This commission, after a most thorough investigation of the immigration question, found certain facts to exist and made some specific recommendations to Congress.

In the first place, the commission found that there were too many immigrants coming to this country; that there is now an oversupply of unskilled labor in the basic industries of the United States; that restrictive legislation ought to be passed by Congress; and that the literacy test was the best single method of accomplishing the desired end. Let me quote the exact words of the commission:

> The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in industries of the country as a whole, a condition which demands legislation restricting the further admission of such unskilled labor. It is desirable in making the reduction that a sufficient number be debarred to produce a marked effect upon the present supply of unskilled labor.

Even the Hon. William S. Bennet, the only dissenting member from any of the findings of the commission, concurred in this in his minority report. He said:

> A slowing down of the present rate of the immigration of unskilled labor is justified by the report.

And after enumerating more than a half dozen ways by which this reduction could be brought about the commission added:

> A majority of the commission—eight out of the nine—favor the reading-and-writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

And this is not a partisan political report for political purposes. It is a report by men of both parties after a most careful and painstaking investigation. The fact is that the question of immigration is not a political one.

I have briefly reviewed the legislation on this question, and before taking up and beginning to discuss the merits of the bill now pending before this House I want to adduce some proof to show that the question is nonpolitical and that restrictive legislation has been demanded in the national platforms of the two dominant political parties in this country. Away back in 1896, more than an eighth of a century ago, when the evils of immigration were not so great and not so well known as now, the Republican Party, in its national platform of that year, not only demanded a restriction of immigration but specifically indorsed the reading-and-writing test as a means to accomplish that end. The plank in the platform to which I refer is as follows:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

This is one of the planks in the platform upon which the beloved McKinley was elected, and in his inaugural address he specifically indorsed the immigration plank and recommended an educational test to alien immigrants, to the end that American citizenship be protected and American institutions preserved.

In the Republican national platform of 1900 we find this language:

In the further interests of American workmen we favor a more effective restriction of the immigration of cheap labor from foreign lands—

And so forth.

In his first message to Congress, in 1901, ex-President Roosevelt indorsed unequivocally the restriction of immigration and an educational test. He used this pointed language:

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure a careful, and not merely perfunctory, educational test—some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

The Republican national platform this year—1912—the latest expression of the party on the subject, reads as follows:

We pledge the Republican Party to the enactment of appropriate laws to give relief from the constantly growing evil of induced or undesirable immigration, which is inimical to the progress and welfare of the people of the United States.

That the Republican Party stands for a restriction of immigration there is no room to doubt.

The Democratic Party, too, has put itself on record in regard to this great question. In its national platform of 1896 it uses this language:

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

In its national platform of 1900 the Democratic Party, while inserting no plank upon the general subject of immigration, indorsed the Chinese exclusion law and recommended its application to the same classes of all Asiatic races.

The Democratic national platform of 1904 contained no plank upon the general subject of immigration, but did specially oppose the admission of Asiatic immigrants, in this language:

We are opposed to the admission of Asiatic immigrants who can not be amalgamated with our population.

The Democratic national platform of this year—1912—indorses more stringent immigration laws.

This is the latest expression of the Democratic Party on this important subject of immigration. Not only have the two dominant political parties in this country repeatedly expressed themselves in their national platforms in favor of restricting immigration, but the Republican platform of 1896 and the Republican President elected upon the Republican platform of 1900 have in express terms favored the literacy test; such a literacy test, in substance, that we are now considering, which is the crux of the bill before us, although it contains many other salutary provisions. And what is that literacy test and what are the terms of the bill now before us? Before the adjournment of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress the Senate of the United States passed, on April 19, 1912, an immigration bill known as the Dillingham bill, which covered many phases of the immigration question. That bill was sent over to the House on April 20, 1912, and referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. For reasons which will appear later the House committee amended the Senate bill by striking out all of it except the enacting clause and substituted and passed the Burnett literacy bill. The matter went to conference the second time, and a majority of the second conferees, both on the part of the House and the Senate, agreed upon a report which was made to the House on yesterday eliminating the penal certificate, or certificate of character, test as embodied in the first report.

In the statement accompanying the report to the House is found this language:

The Senate having disagreed to the entire House amendment, which in its turn had stricken out the entire Senate bill, the whole subject of immigration came before the conference committee.

The conference committee has rearranged and recodified the entire immigration laws, all of which are now before the House for consideration. Other than adding the literacy test as contained, in substance, in the Burnett bill, which lately passed the House, the other most important amendments are as follows:

First. The head tax per alien immigrant has been increased from $4 to $5.

Second. The exclusion of aliens not eligible for naturalization.

Third. The deportation of aliens who become criminals within three years subsequent to entry.

Fourth. Providing for interior immigrant stations.

Fifth. Providing against the illegal entry of seamen and stowaways.

Sixth. Providing more severe penalties for transportation lines which violate the law against advertising for immigrants and which bring to the United States aliens who are ineligible to enter.

The literacy-test provision is the most important change proposed in the law, most of the others being administrative changes. For the purpose of getting clearly before the House just the class of aliens who will be excluded from admission into the United States if the conference report becomes a law, I will quote section 3 of the report, amendatory of previous acts, which now embraces all the classes intended to be excluded:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; stowaways, except that any such stowaway may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; all children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe; persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips, of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude: Provided further, That the provisions of this act relating to the payments for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation, and such determination by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case, but such determination shall not become final until a period of 30 days has elapsed. Within three days after such determination the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall cause to be published a brief statement reciting the substance of the application, the facts presented at the hearing, and his determination thereon, in three daily newspapers of general circulation in three of the principal cities of the United States. At any time during said period of 30 days any person dissatisfied with the ruling may appeal to the district court of the United States of the district into which the labor is sought to be brought, which court or the judge thereof in vacation shall have jurisdiction to try de novo such question of necessity, and the decision in such court shall be final. Such appeal shall operate as a supersedeas: Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States, to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any alien exhibitor, or holder of a concession or privilege for any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States, under contract, such alien mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of his country, as may be necessary for installing or conducting his exhibit, or for preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any such fair or exposition in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may prescribe both as to the admission and return of such persons: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign governments nor to their suites, families, or guests: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

Nor shall it apply to persons of the following status or occupations:

Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

It will be noted that this bill adds to the classes heretofore excluded—

Aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish.

Provision is made, however, that any alien legally, or hereafter legally, admitted to the United States may send for his father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, wife or daughter, whether they can read or write or not. "Vagrants" and "stowaways" are added to the excluded lists. So are those "who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government"; also "persons who are members of or affiliate with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals, or officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized Government because of his or their official character."

Also contract laborers who have been "assisted" or "encouraged" to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, "whether such offers or promises are true or false"; also "persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country"; also "persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation," unless the Secretary of Commerce and Labor gives his consent thereto. The act of February 20, 1907, applied only to contract laborers who had been deported.

Also "persons who can not become eligible under existing law to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into."

It will be seen that this proposed new measure adds quite materially to the excluded classes of aliens under the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907. As to the justice of the most of them, however, there is not much room for argument or contention. Most of the opposition argument on the floor of this House has raged around the literacy test.

And since the literacy test is the one most objected to, and since it is conceded to be more efficacious in restricting immigration to this country than all the other new provisions put together, I will address myself first to its consideration—or, rather, to a resumption of its consideration—together with the general subject of restriction of immigration.

This literacy test, for the purpose of preventing objectionable foreigners from coming to this country, is not a new proposition, as I have already observed. Not only have political parties in their national platforms especially declared for it, but Congress itself has several times unequivocally indorsed it.

The House, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed such a measure by the decisive vote of 195 to 20, while the Senate passed it by a vote of 52 to 10.

That literacy test bill would have become a law but for the veto of President Cleveland.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress an immigration bill again passed the Senate, which carried a literacy test provision, by a vote of 45 to 28.

In the Fifty-seventh Congress an illiteracy test amendment to an immigration bill passed the House by the sweeping majority of 87 to 7.

The fact is that at no time in the history of the country has a literacy test provision in any immigration bill ever been defeated by either House of Congress. Upon the contrary, such a provision has invariably been passed by decisive majorities when the question was submitted to a vote.

And the various votes by both Houses of Congress on this subject is but a reflection of public opinion on the question.

Not all the newspapers, periodicals, and magazines of the country favor this legislation, but I think I am safe in saying that the bulk of the press do favor it. At any rate, a majority of the people favor it.

Resolutions, petitions, and memorials have poured in upon Congress expressing their views and making known the wishes of large and representative bodies of our citizenship on this momentous and far-reaching question.

The legislatures of the great States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Vermont, and others have specifically indorsed the literacy test, while twenty and odd others have memoralized Congress to pass more stringent immigration laws.

The various farmers' organizations throughout the length and breadth of the land, the great labor organizations all over the country, the patriotic societies, powerful bodies representing charity, commerce, and the like have upon divers occasions passed resolutions memorializing Congress to enact a law embodying an educational test and more stringent immigration laws.

There are a greater number of the people of the United States engaged in agriculture than in any other calling. At the last National Farmers' Congress they passed the following resolution:

Whereas the Congressional Immigration Commission's report of 40 volumes has just been published, and recommends the very measures which this organization has been advocating in its resolutions for years to judiciously restrict undesirable immigration:

Resolved, That we enthusiastically approve the commission's legislative recommendations that the head tax be increased, the illiteracy test be enacted, that foreign steamships be fined for bringing undesirables, and that other judicious measures be adopted, which are hereby urged upon the Congress of the United States.

The Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union has a membership of over three million. This is possibly the most powerful in point of members and influence of any of the farmers' organizations in this country. This organization has been much interested in restrictive immigration laws and has frequently indorsed the literacy test.

The American Federation of Labor, the largest labor organization in this country, has for years at its annual gatherings been passing resolutions and petitioning Congress to pass more strict immigration laws, and it has specifically indorsed the educational test—in substance the test we are now considering.

The grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Knights of Labor, and other organizations have repeatedly passed resolutions specifically indorsing the literacy test and memoralizing Congress to make it a law.

In 1909 the American Federation of Labor at its annual gathering passed the following resolution:

Whereas the illiteracy test is the most practical means of restricting the present stimulated influx of cheap labor, whose competition is so ruinous to the workers already here, whether white or foreign born:

Resolved by the American Federation of Labor in twenty-ninth annual convention assembled, That we demand the enactment of the illiteracy test, an increased head tax, and the abolition of the distribution bureau.

Samuel Gompers is the president of this organization. He appeared before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on February 29, 1912, and among other things declared that the American Federation of Labor had advocated the literacy test for years and years; that the Immigration Commission had but emphasized the foresight of their organization in taking such position; that most of the immigration to this country is not of its own free will and accord, but that it is "stimulated" by "the captains of industry" and by the "allurements of the shipping companies"; that the "captains of industry" wanted "low-priced, docile labor" and the shipping companies wanted transportation—wanted business; that something "must be done to further limit immigration"; that the great horde of "docile illiterate" immigrants coming yearly to our shores, especially those willing to work for most any wage, was largely responsible for many of the untoward conditions and serious problems now confronting the American wage earner; that "in the iron and steel industry"—that is, in the making of iron and steel—the percentage now of foreign workers is about 75 per cent; that "they work 7 days in the week, 12 hours a day, and 365 days in the year," and that "the percentage of foreign-born workers in the woolen trade is 85 per cent"; that they displaced the American laborer, reduced the American wage, and lowered the standard of American life; that a large percentage of them when employed would for years "suffer indignities and privations and then in sheer desperation, disregarding all rules of order and precedence in the orderly conduct of relations between employers and employees, rush out on a strike."

I have quoted at length the views of Mr. Gompers on immigration, because he is the president of the most effective and powerful labor organization in this country, and is known and regarded as one of the truest and most able champions of labor in the Western Hemisphere, if not in the entire world. Mr. Gompers knows, as few men know, what this tremendous and never-ceasing flow of alien immigrants means to the American wage earner, both native and foreign born.

John Mitchell, formerly head of the mine workers in the United States, and at present one of the vice presidents of the American Federation of Labor, and widely known for his breadth and depth of thought on labor and social problems, said:

The American workingman recognizes the necessity of reasonable restriction upon the admission of future immigrants. He fails to see the consistency of a legislative protective policy which does not at the same time it protects industries give equal protection to American labor.

That is sound argument; that is good Republicanism.

And what are the reasons for this widespread interest in favor of stricter immigration laws? Why has the American Congress from 1819 to 1907, as I have pointed out, been adding one restriction after another to the continued stream of immigrants flocking to our shores? Why have the framers of the Burnett and Dillingham bills, the conference report we are now considering, added very materially to the excluded classes of aliens as provided for in the act of February 20, 1907? It is because the people of this great country have slowly but surely been waking up to the imminent dangers to themselves and their institutions lurking in the ever-increasing tide of undesirable immigrants drifting to our shores.

Even under the operation of what was called "the stringent immigration act" of February 20, 1907, there have reached the United States every year since its enactment in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 alien immigrants, from 30 to 40 per cent of whom can neither read nor write.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] said that this was largely an economic question. I am glad to be able to agree with the gentleman in part on that proposition. It is largely an economic, social, and moral question. The truth is that immigrants have been flocking to the American shores, as I have said, at the rate of about 1,000,000 a year, and now in the great basic industries of the country foreign labor is largely employed. In the iron and steel industry of the United States there is now employed 75 per cent of foreign-born laborers. In the woolen industry of this country there is employed 75 per cent of foreign-born laborers. In the oil refineries of this country 75 per cent of the wage earners are of the immigrant class. In the slaughtering and meat-packing business of the United States 75 per cent of the wage earners are of foreign birth. In the furniture factories, in the leather tanneries, in the woolen and worsted trades, in the bituminous coal mines, and in railroad and construction work 75 per cent of the men now employed in those industries in the United States are not merely of foreign descent, but actually born abroad, and in a large part of these industries there is now less than 10 per cent of native Americans employed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Are not the facts that the gentleman cites really an argument against this bill? Do they not show that these men are earning their bread in the sweat of their brows and by honest employment?

Mr. TOWNER. And adding to the wealth of the country?

Mr. POWERS. An argument against this bill? They show conclusively that native Americans have been crowded out of employment by the immigrants from foreign shores; that native Americans have not been able to compete with the wages and standard of living that is brought in here from abroad and practiced by the immigrants, especially from southern and eastern Europe, who work at a low wage and live largely—many of them—on bologna sausages, bread, and macaroni, as is stated by Profs. Jenks and Lauck, high authorities on this question. The American standard of living and of wages have been lowered to such an extent that an American can not compete with that sort of business.

If it is all right and proper for alien immigrants to crowd our native American wage earners and laborers out of employment by low wages and low standards of living, it would be equally all right and proper for them to crowd all other Americans out of their places, and let this country be turned over to foreigners to own, rule, and control.

With all due respect for the opinion of the able Member from Missouri, I can not concur in that character of logic. As has been suggested, the industrial phase of the immigration question is one of far-reaching importance. It is indisputably true that in many of the basic industries in this country the native-born American wage earners have been driven out of employment by the illiterate, non-English-speaking immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, while the American standard of living has received a staggering blow at their hands.

The Commissioner General of Immigration in his annual report for 1911 said:

A large proportion of the southern and eastern European immigration of the past 25 years has entered the manufacturing and mining industries of the Eastern and Middle States, mostly in the capacity of unskilled laborers. There is no basic industry in which they are not largely represented, and in many cases they compose more than 50 per cent of the total number of persons employed in such industries.

Profs. Jenks and Lauck, who were appointed by the President on the Immigration Commission and who have given much study to this question, and who boiled down the substance of the commissions report and investigations in their splendid volume entitled "The Immigration Problem," said on page 135:

In most of the principal branches of the industries the native American and immigrant employees from Great Britain have, to a large extent, especially in the unskilled occupations, been displaced by recent immigrants from southern and eastern Europe and the Orient.

On page 126, same book:

It was found that only one-fifth of the total number of wage earners in 38 of the principal branches of industry were native white Americans, while three-fifths were of foreign birth. Almost one-half of all the wage earners were from southern and eastern European countries.

On page 137, same book, they say:

More than three-fourths of the iron and steel workers, employees of oil refineries, slaughtering and meat-packing establishments, furniture factories, leather tanneries and finish establishments, and woolen and worsted goods and cotton-mill operatives, together with two-fifths of the glass workers, one-third of the silk-mill operatives, and glove factory employees—were of foreign birth.

On page 140, same book:

The reason for the employment of recent immigrant wage earners in the United States was primarily the inability of the manufacturers and mine operators to secure such labor at the same wages.

On the same page:

It may be said in general that the recent immigrant wage earners from the south and east of Europe are found on the lowest level of the industrial scale.

On page 167, same book:

Disregarding geographical lines, it may be said in general that foreign-born wage earners constitute slightly more than three-fourths of the entire number of persons engaged in railway and other construction work. Native white Americans and native negroes each make up about one-tenth of the working forces.

On page 168:

In all sections of the country the south Italians form the highest proportion of laborers employed on railroad-construction work.

On page 270, same book:

The great mass of foreign-born workmen remain in the ranks of unskilled laborers.

Mr. John A. Fitch, in his book "The Steel Workers," says that at the Carnegie Steel Co. plants, where there are employed 23,337 men, only 5,705 were native-born white Americans, the remainder being foreigners, of whom over 14,000 were unnaturalized, and about 8,000 of whom could not speak English.

In the great cities of New York, Chicago, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Rochester there is manufactured about 70 per cent of the total product of men's ready-made clothing in the United States. More than 50 per cent of the workers engaged in this industry in these cities are women. Less than 10 per cent of them are native-born Americans, and 75 per cent of them can not speak English. The average weekly wage of these workers is $3.72.

Seventy-five per cent of the wage earners employed in the basic industries of this country are either foreigners or foreign born. Profs. Jenks and Lauck, in their book "The Immigration Problem," on page 283, say:

A number of cities show a very high percentage of pupils with foreign-born fathers. In New York City 71.5 per cent have foreign-born fathers; in Chicago 67.3 per cent; in Boston 63.5 per cent.

This shows to what extent foreign immigrants have taken possession of our large cities.

Lawrence, Mass., is the center for the manufacture of woolens and worsteds. It has a population of 85,000. More than 73,000 of its inhabitants are foreigners and less than 12,000 are Americans. There are employed in the manufacture of woolens and worsteds in this city about 30,000 workers, 92 per cent of whom are foreign born. They live in segregated colonies, separate and apart from our people. Fifty per cent of them not only can not read English but can neither read nor write in any other language.

In an article written not long ago by the Secretary of the United States Immigration Commission and published in the North American Review is found this language:

The term American wage earner is rapidly becoming a misnomer. Almost three-fourths of the employees of the principal branches of manufacturing and mining in the United States at the present time are of foreign birth.

This does not include those born in this country, but of foreign parentage. The secretary of the commission continues:

Only about one-fifth of the total number of wage earners were born in this country. * * * Among bituminous coal and iron mine workers less than one-tenth are native Americans. The fact of great import in connection with the situation is that about one-half of the industrial workers of foreign birth are southern and eastern Europeans and Asiatics, principally representatives of the north and south Italians, Poles, Greeks, Slovenians, etc. There is no manufacturing city or town or any mining community of any importance in the Middle West, New England, and the Middle States which has not a foreign section made up of industrial workers from southern and eastern Europe. * * * There has been a distinct segregation of the immigrant and the native American population, and there is little contact or association beyond that rendered necessary by business or working relations.

This statement on the part of the secretary of the Immigration Commission is merely corroborative of the data and facts gathered on this subject from a good many sources.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman know of any native Americans who are out of employment? If he does, I wish he would send them to St. Louis, where employment will be found for all of them. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. In answer to the question of the distinguished Member from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], I will say that the act of February 20, 1907, created an Immigration Commission to study this question from every conceivable standpoint, and after having devoted four years to extensive investigation, both in this country and in Europe, at an expenditure of $1,000,000 that commission came to the unanimous conclusion that there was an oversupply of unskilled labor in this country. [Applause.] Even the Hon. William S. Bennet, the only member of the commission who handed down a dissenting opinion at all, agreed with the majority that there was an oversupply of unskilled labor in this country, and it is indeed a very cheap labor and goes largely to our industrial centers.

Profs. Jenks and Lauck, in their book, page 26, speaking of the immigrants coming to this country, say:

They find that our supply of free agricultural land is practically taken up, that there is a strong demand for their labor, especially in our mining and manufacturing centers, at wages much higher than any that they have known in their own country, although they may be low when compared with the American standard.

On page 169, same book, they say:

A study of more than 5,000 wage earners in all sections of the country showed that the average daily earnings of native white Americans were $2.43 and of immigrants $1.68.

Respecting the cost of living the same authors, on page 174 of their book, say:

The cost of living is about $10 per man for the Croatians for a month and the same for the Slovaks, and from $5 to $7 for the Italians. The Italians live mainly upon bread and macaroni and bologna sausage, which accounts for the extremely low cost of their maintenance.

Speaking of the amount of money brought into this country by the south and east European immigrant per person and his necessity to take employment at low wage in this country these same authors, on page 183 of their book, say:

During the past eight years the average amount per person among these immigrants has been about one-third as much as among immigrants from northern and western Europe. Consequently, finding it absolutely imperative to engage in work at once, they have not been in a position to take exception to wages or working conditions, but must obtain employment on the terms offered or suffer from actual want.

On page 195 of the same book is found the following:

The low standards of the southern and eastern European, his ready acceptance of a low wage and existing working conditions, his lack of permanent interest in the occupation and community in which he has been employed, his attitude toward labor organizations, his slow progress toward assimilation, and his willingness seemingly to accept indefinitely without protest certain wages and conditions of employment have rendered it extremely difficult for the older classes of employees to secure improvements in conditions or advancement in wages since the arrival in considerable numbers of southern and eastern European wage earners.

America is being filled up with people from other countries in such numbers and in late years of immigrants of such a character that it is impossible to assimilate them, and America is gradually but surely being foreignized.

It will be remembered that there were no statistics kept of alien immigrants to this country until 1819. From that year down to now the increase has been tremendous and the character of the immigrants has undergone a marked change. Let us first look into the number and then the character of the immigrants that have been coming to this country.

From 1820 to 1830 there arrived on our shores 143,439 immigrants; from 1830 to 1840, 599,125; from 1840 to 1850, 1,713,351; from 1850 to 1860, 2,589,214; from 1860 to 1870, 2,314,824; from 1870 to 1880, 2,812,191; from 1880 to 1890, 5,246,613; from 1890 to 1900, 3,844,420; from 1900 to 1910, 8,795,386, while in 1911 there arrived in that one year 878,587. A glance at these figures will show the tremendous increase in immigration to this country. The first decade that has any record of immigrants coming to this country, the decade from 1820 to 1830, shows that there were only 143,439 immigrants admitted to the United States, while during the last decade, the decade from 1900 to 1910, there were 8,795,386, more than five times as many, although from 1820 to 1830 there was no Federal law on the statute books really seeking to restrict immigration and no law on the statute books really attempting to regulate it or any part of it, except the act of 1819, which regulated in a way the steerage passengers at sea.

From 1900 to 1910, when nearly 9,000,000 alien immigrants were admitted to this country, there were on the statute books pretty stringent immigration laws, as is shown by an examination of the immigration acts of March 3, 1891, and February 20, 1907, the one now sought to be amended. The passage of the literacy test bill will curtail annually by some 200,000 the influx of immigrants to our shores. The Immigration Commission in a unanimous report—those in favor of the literacy test and those opposed to it—declared that there were too many immigrants coming to this country, and that their number ought to be materially curtailed. The question is, How should it be done?

As I said in a speech a few days ago, the immigration to this country naturally divides itself into two great groups: Those coming before the year 1880 and those coming after that time. Up to 1880 the bulk of the immigrants to this country came from western and northwestern Europe, from such countries as Great Britain, Germany, Norway, and Sweden. Since 1880 the character of the white immigrants to this country changed so rapidly that in 1907 71.3 per cent of such immigrants came from southern and southeastern Europe and western Asia.

Profs. Jenks and Lauck, in their book, on page 128, say:

The members of the old immigration, generally speaking, came much more generally in families, with the evident purpose of making America their permanent home, than do the members of the new immigration.

And on page 272 of the same book is found this statement:

Of the total number of industrial workers studied by the Immigration Commission who had a residence of five years to nine years [in the United States], only 6.2 per cent were fully naturalized, as compared with a degree of citizenship of 56.9 per cent of those with a period of residence from 10 years or over.

They go on to say that only 30.1 per cent of the southern Italians have either been naturalized or have taken out first papers looking to that end.

The bulk of the old immigration was similar in instincts and civilization to our own, and readily assimilated with it, and at once became a splendid type of American citizenship. Profs. Jenks and Lauck, speaking of the characteristics of the recent immigrants, say, on page 170 of their book:

Fifty-five per cent of the immigrant wage earners were married, but more than three-fourths of these had left their wives and families in their native countries.

On the same page they say:

As regards the small extent to which the southern and eastern Europeans exhibit any tendency toward progress and assimilation, it was found that practically all of the recent immigrants, except the north and south Italians, and one and one-tenth of these, were fully naturalized. Moreover, only about one-third of the southern and eastern European wage earners could speak English.

On page 197 of their book is found this statement:

Owing to the rapid expansion in industry which has taken place during the past 30 years and the constantly increasing employment of southern and eastern Europeans, it has been impossible to assimilate newcomers, politically or socially, or to educate them to American standards of compensation, efficiency, or conditions of employment.

On page 265, same book, they say:

The coming in of people who will not be assimilated creates discord and makes separate classes or castes in a community.

The chief motive in coming to America of the old immigrant class was to escape religious or political persecution and to found for themselves a permanent home here. The bulk of the immigrants coming to this country after the year 1880, and known as the "new immigrants," have not sought homes here, have not assimilated readily if at all with our people and things American, but the tendency has been to settle in colonies in the industrial centers of our country, separate and apart from American citizens, and to continue to speak their own language or dialect and virtually to establish while here foreign customs and conditions and even foreign cities here on American soil.

Profs. Jenks and Lauck in their book (p. 67) say:

The widespread existence of immigrant industrial communities or colonies in the United States at the present time may be realized when it is stated that in the territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers there is no town or city of industrial importance, with the exception of the lead and zinc mining localities of Missouri, which does not have its immigrant colony or section composed of Slavs, Magyars, North and South Italians, or members of other races of recent immigration from southern and eastern Europe. In the South and Southwest, because of the large areas devoted almost exclusively to agriculture, the immigrant community is less frequently met with than in the Middle West or East. In the bituminous coal-mining territories of West Virginia, Virginia, Alabama, Arkansas, and Oklahoma immigrant colonies in large numbers have been developed in the same way as those in the coal-mining regions of Pennsylvania.

The new immigrants to this country have not fled from their country to seek safety in ours from religious or political persecution. That has not been their motive in coming here. Their reasons for coming have been largely economic. They have sought to take advantage of the high-priced wage in this country—to make a competence and then to return to their former homes. Profs. Jenks and Lauck in their book (p. 12) say:

The money wages in southern Europe, from which more than 80 per cent of our present immigrants are coming, are indeed very low as compared with those in the United States—often not over one-third as much. Moreover, the assertion often made that, owing to lower prices in Europe, the low wages will furnish practically as good living conditions as those in the United States is a mistaken one. The standard is far below that of the United States. They come to this country with the intention of making some money and then returning to their homes. This is shown by the fact that they send back to their mother country each year from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 in money earned here, and by the further fact that 40 per cent of those who do come here do return to their own country after a little sojourn with us.

The old immigrants, in the main, come here for the purpose of making America their home, and but a small per cent of them return.

For the purpose of showing that the class of immigrants coming to this country have undergone a marked change; that they are not what they used to be; that before the year 1880—yes, beginning with the year 1869—there was less than 1 per cent of the new immigration coming here and at that time nearly 75 per cent of the old. I want to submit this table:

[1] Includes Poland to 1898.

It will be noted that in 1869 the immigrants from Italy, Poland, Russia, and Austro-Hungary—whence come the new immigration—were about one hundred times less than the number from the United Kingdom, Germany, France, and Scandinavia—from whence have come the old immigration; in 1880 it was only about ten times less; in 1894 it was about equal to it; and in 1907 it was four times greater; and at the present time the proportion is still much larger. The old immigration has been supplanted by the new. The old immigration came to stay, and a large proportion of it sought homes on the farm. A large per cent of the new immigration comes to return, and to settle while here in colonies in the industrial centers of the country. Only about 15 per cent of it goes to the farms.

The Immigration Commission in its report says:

The old and the new immigration differ in many essentials. The former was, from the beginning, largely a movement of settlers who came from the most enlightened sections of Europe for the purpose of making for themselves homes in the New World. * * * Many of them entered agricultural pursuits. They mingled freely with native Americans and were quickly assimilated. On the other hand, the new immigration has been largely a movement of unskilled laboring men who have come in large part temporarily from the less enlightened and advanced countries of Europe in response to the call for industrial workers in the Eastern and Middle Western States. They have almost entirely avoided agricultural pursuits, and in cities and industrial communities have congregated together in sections apart from native Americans and the older immigration. The new immigration as a class is far less intelligent than the old, more than one-third of all those over 14 years of age being illiterate when admitted. * * * They are actuated in coming by different ideals from the old immigration, for it came to be a part of the country, while the new, in a large measure, comes with the intention of profiting in a pecuniary way by the superior advantages of the New World and then returning to the old country. The old immigration movement in recent years has rapidly declined, both numerically and relatively, and under present conditions there are no indications that it will materially increase. The new immigration movement is very large, and there are few, if any, indications of its natural abatement.

The fact is that statistics show that in more than 30 of our largest cities the foreign population is larger than the native born. Take New York City, for example: Its foreign population, including those born abroad and those born here but of foreign parentage, is 3,757,856, while the native-born Americans of native parents number only 1,012,027, including the negroes. Chicago has 1,693,988 of foreign parentage and birth, while it has less than half a million of native-born Americans, including the negroes. Milwaukee, another one of our large cities, has 293,986 foreign born and native born of foreign parentage, while it has less than 80,000 native-born Americans. And so the story goes. In a number of Atlantic seaboard cities it is even larger.

The literacy-test bill we are now considering will not cure all the evils of immigration, but it will cure a part of them. It will materially lessen the number of immigrants coming to this country, and it will lessen the illiteracy. It is generally agreed that there are too many immigrants coming to this country, but the opponents of the illiteracy test maintain that that is not the way to cure the evil. They point out that it will not shut out the idiots, anarchists, criminals, professional beggars, prostitutes, black handers, or forgers; that it will not exclude the educated criminal. Nobody contends that it will. The bill was not framed primarily for that purpose. The present law excludes all these classes of undesirables, or is intended to do so, and the argument that a literacy test will not exclude them is beside the mark. Such argument, if not intended to deceive the public, is at least calculated to. But while the literacy test does not have as its primary object the exclusion of such people, yet in its practical operation it will exclude 21 per cent of our foreign-born criminals, 18 per cent of our foreign-born insane, and 30 per cent of our foreign-born paupers.

The argument is further made that the literacy test would exclude the honest, though illiterate, laboring man—the very man we need—and would admit the educated theif and scoundrel, the very men we do not need. That character of argument is unfair. Nobody contends that a dishonest educated man is a better citizen than an honest uneducated man. No law can be framed that would not in some instances work a hardship. In dealing with matters like immigration we deal with large classes of people; and the question with the literacy-test part of this bill is whether an education fits or unfits men for American citizenship.

Few men, I take it, would care to affirm that it would be better for our country if the millions of immigrants that arrive yearly upon our shores were uneducated rather than educated people. If it be true that ignorance adds to the true conception and ideals of American citizenship, and is a valuable asset for any people to possess, we had better abolish our public schools and tear down our institutions of learning. They are maintained at great cost.

For the scholastic year ending June 30, 1910, we expended on the 25,000,000 students in our public schools $426,250,434, to say nothing of what was expended on the 125,000 students who attended our colleges and universities. If to fit our own American boys and girls for proper and efficient American citizenship we expend annually on them in tuition alone some $500,000,000, have not we a right to demand that immigrants coming to this country who are over 16 years of age shall at least be able to read some language or dialect? The consensus of opinion in America is that the American fathers and mothers who have not educated their sons and daughters who are over 16 years of age, at least to the point of being able to read in some language, have fallen far short of their duty in fitting their children for wholesome and efficient American citizenship, to say nothing of citizenship in some foreign land, about whose Government and institutions they know nothing, and whose language they can not speak. The American citizen who can not even read or write, but who has been reared in America, surrounded by Americans, and who has observed the workings of its Government, caught the spirit of its institutions, imbibed its lofty ideals, and inherited its progress, is infinitely better prepared for wholesome American citizenship than any illiterate foreigner could be; and yet America feels that young Americans must be educated not merely to read, but must be really educated to properly prepare them for the great struggle for existence and to fit them and train them for wholesome American citizenship. What does the alien immigrant who can not read know of America or the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship? What can he know?

Profs. Jenks and Lauck, in their book, page 32, say:

> At the time they are admitted into the United States as immigrants, judging from conditions in Europe, the percentage of illiteracy among the races composing the new immigration is much greater than that among the old, the difference being that of 35.6 per cent to 2.7 per cent, as shown by the following tables.

In the tables referred to, among other things, they show that 54.2 per cent of the south Italian immigrants over 14 years of age can neither read nor write.

Ours is a representative Government. Every citizen is a sovereign, and as such is called upon by his vote and otherwise to intelligently maintain that sovereignty, to uphold the ideals and institutions of the country of which he is a part. How can he maintain them when he knows nothing of them? How can he maintain them when he does not read, even in his own language; has never caught the spirit of our civilization, but upon the other hand crowds with others in colonies that do not know a word of English and are far removed from the better influences of our national life?

Profs. Jenks and Lauck, in their book, page 290, say:

> Inability to speak English, as a matter of fact, is the greatest obstacle to the proper distribution of the recent immigration population. It causes segregation of the immigration races in industrial towns and large cities and prevents proper contact with American life and institutions.

How can an immigrant be fit for citizenship in a country like ours, where the people rule, when he knows nothing of the duties and responsibilities of that citizenship, and where his whole training and environment from youth up have incapacitated him from properly exercising or duly appreciating them? How can he be expected to appreciate, prize, or value freedom and liberty when he knows nothing of either, and especially when the form of government from which he comes is so radically different from our own? How can we expect to assimilate him and make him a part of us when the native Americans and the old immigrants shun and avoid him and feel disgraced to be caught in his company? How could we, if we would, take him up and make him a part and parcel of American life and character when the bulk of the new immigration that reaches our shores isolate themselves when here, introduces debased standards of living and ideals of life, stays but a short time in one place and then returns—40 per cent of them—to the land of their birth and the bosom of their families whom, when coming here, they left behind?

The reason why but a small percentage of the old immigration, as compared to 40 per cent of the new, returned to their old haunts was the difference in motive that prompted their coming from that which prompted the coming of the new. The old immigration, as I have said, sought homes in America, the new immigration seek jobs; the old expected to remain, the new expect to return. The old immigration in the main represented a sturdy, intelligent, lofty-minded, and high-spirited citizenship, who would not tamely submit to political and religious persecution and other forms of tyranny as practiced in the countries of their home, and therefore fled here and cast their lives and fortunes with us. Only 2.7 per cent of them were illiterate, as compared with 40 per cent of the new. The new immigration in coming to America is actuated by no such ideals, inspired by no such motives as those which inspired the old. They do not come to America even on their own initiative or on their own accord. Their coming here is stimulated, inspired, induced. The great steamship companies, the great railway companies, the large employers of labor find profit in the business.

Thousands of immigration agents are employed by these large concerns and industries and operate in the countries of southern and eastern Europe and the western part of Asia, and are largely instrumental in corralling a large part of the immigrants who come to our shores, and that, too, in violation of both the spirit and the letter of the law. Profs. Jenks and Lauck in their admirable work, "The Problem of Immigration," say:

> A good authority stated that two of the leading steamship lines had 5,000 or 6,000 ticket agents in Galicia alone, and that there is "a great hunt" for immigrants, and that the work is very successful there.

The Immigration Commission in its report and speaking of the causes of immigration to the United States uses this language:

> A large number of immigrants are induced to come by quasi labor agents in this country, who combine the business of supplying laborers to large employers and contractors with the so-called immigrant banking business and the selling of steamship tickets. * * * Another important agency in promoting immigration from Europe to the United States is the many thousands of steamship ticket agents and subagents operating in the immigrant furnishing districts of southern and eastern Europe. Under the terms of the United States immigration law, as well as the laws of most European countries, the promotion of immigration is forbidden, but nevertheless the steamship agent propaganda flourishes everywhere.

The Commissioner General of Immigration in his annual report of June 30, 1911, uses this language:

> Much of the immigration which we now receive is artificial, in that it is induced or stimulated and encouraged by persons and corporations whose principal interest is to increase the steerage passenger business of their lines, to introduce into the United States an overabundant and therefore cheap supply of common labor, or to exploit the poor, ignorant immigrant to their own advantage by loaning him money at usurious rates.

The new immigration, much of it, is induced to come to this country. During the fiscal year 1911, 850,000 immigrants reached our shores, while only 16,000 were deported. There are too many coming here. The Immigration Commission has said so.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I venture to say that there is not 1 Member out of 100 in this House who has read the report of that commission, and I venture to say, further, that this legislation that is pending is not in any way justified by the findings of that commission and by the facts elicited by that investigation.

Mr. POWERS. I did not yield for a speech. I am not responsible for the Members reading or failing to read that report. The facts are as I have stated them to be.

If the distinguished Member himself has read the report of the Immigration Commission, he would know that the commission used this language in making its report:

The commission as a whole recommends restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations. * * * A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration. * * * The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in the industries of the country as a whole, and therefore demand legislation which will at the present time restrict the further admission of such unskilled labor. * * * The commission also recommended a "material increase in the head tax."

So the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is mistaken in the facts when he says that the legislation now under consideration is not "in any way justified by the findings of that commission." It is not only justified by it but is specifically recommended by it. The Immigration Commission recommends an increase in the head tax. The bill now before us increases it from $4 to $5. The commission recommends restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations, and specifically indorses the reading and writing test. The bone of contention, the reading test, is embodied in the bill now before us. This and the other new restrictions I have pointed out in my remarks will lessen the number of immigrants coming to this country, and all in accord with the findings and recommendations of the Immigration Commission and not in opposition to it, as the gentleman from Missouri would have us believe.

I have no bitterness in my heart toward the peoples of other lands and countries.

I am not opposed to the right sort of immigrants coming to this country. In fact, we welcome them to our shores. Human nature is pretty much the same the world over among all races and nationalities. There is not a land or country in the civilized world—no race or nationality—that the sun sees that can not proudly boast of the brilliancy and accomplishments of at least some of its own distinguished fellow citizens.

I hope the American people will never fail to recognize merit wherever it may be found, nor neglect to pay due homage to the greatness and deeds of achievement of the races and peoples of other lands and countries.

America is under a debt of gratitude to and has not failed to show her appreciation of the desirable immigrants who have sought refuge and homes on her friendly coasts. Our history is full of instances of both. I will cite but a few. Carl Schurz, the "political offender" in Germany, escaped from that country and came to the United States as an alien immigrant. His merits were soon made manifest and were duly appreciated and recognized. He was elected to the United States Senate from Missouri, made a major general in Union Army during the Civil War, and was Secretary of the Interior in the Cabinet of President Hayes, and he deserved them all and more.

D. B. Henderson was an immigrant from Scotland. This country was not slow to appreciate his worth. He was made a general in the Union Army during the Civil War, was later sent to Congress for several terms, and became one of the ablest Speakers that has ever presided over the deliberations of this House.

Andrew Carnegie was an immigrant to this country. He borrowed the money to come on, but he does not have to borrow the money now to go back on.

William Kelly, a Kentuckian, by the way, discovered in 1851, I believe, an improved process of making steel. Andrew Carnegie purchased that process and through his foresight and industry has amassed his millions.

William Marconi, the young Italian, now less than 40 years of age, the inventor of wireless telegraphy, has added a boon and blessing to mankind by that remarkable achievement and discovery. The world is his debtor. He is an Italian. To such as these the United States opens wide her hospitable doors. The intelligent, the industrious, the thrifty, whether in high stations or in low, of all lands and countries, who are seeking homes here and who are assimilable with our people, have received, at least in the past, a welcome to our shores. That is the position of our country now. The literacy test excludes only those who can not read. The ability to read does not make out of a bad man a good man. He is good or bad, regardless of that fact. His failure to be able to read does not make out of an honest man a dishonest man nor vice versa. Men are either honest or dishonest, regardless of that fact. Some of the truest and best men I have ever known could neither read nor write. The failure to be able to read and write is no impeachment of a man's integrity, but it is a great handicap to him in the race of life.

The alien immigrants who seek our shores and who are thus handicapped are but poorly prepared to add to the intelligence or real greatness of our Nation or improve the standard of its citizenship. At tremendous cost we try to educate our own people to fitly prepare them for enlightened and wholesome American citizenship. Why not, then, require alien immigrants who seek American citizenship for the purpose of partaking of its blessings to at least possess education enough to read in some language or dialect, so that in time, if they desire to do it, they can acquire some knowledge of our freedom and form of government, appreciate to some extent our free institutions, and exercise to some good advantage the glorious responsibilities of the citizenship they seek?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, we witness again in these days a clamor, of which we may well doubt the sincerity, about the supposed evils of immigration. We have heard the same protest go up at different times in our history. We know its meaning, and we are thoroughly familiar with the motives of those who are making it. It proceeds from a class of our citizenship that seems unable to comprehend and, at any rate, is reluctant to be guided by the true spirit that underlies the Government we live under.

Keep out immigration, cry they, and preserve America for Americans. The slogan is catchy, but it is insincere. Those using it can not give proper reasons to justify its enforcement, and when we consider the subject it refers to we find that there are no valid reasons why it should be enforced.

Hitherto it has been our unbroken policy to encourage to this continent the influx of sturdy and industrious foreigners. From the beginning of our national existence the stream of immigration has been steady and uninterrupted. The downtrodden of all lands, however oppressed, whether politically, religiously, or industrially, were taught to reverence our flag as the symbol of a people ardently attached to the doctrine that all men are created equal, and who would, because of this belief, give the industrious immigrant the opportunity to reap the rewards to which good character and patient toil would entitle him. So he came here hopefully and confidently became naturalized and cast his lot among us. He became the fulcrum of the lever of American enterprise and genius, which built up the country across the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He lifted the lusty young Nation to a high and commanding plane of wealth and power. But, of course, he was of the "old immigration," and the advocates of this bill hasten to tell us that with this class of foreigners they have no objection. It is extremely fortunate for them that they feel this way about the matter, because the descendants of this "old immigration" have multiplied very rapidly, and in many places are politically strong enough to resent any aspersions on their hard-working forefathers by cutting short the official careers of such Members of Congress as might be guilty of making them. But nevertheless these old immigrants had their struggles. They were opposed everywhere by the prejudiced and unreasoning, a class who, if living to-day, would, I am satisfied, be numbered, in spite of disproving experience, among the advocates of this proposed literacy test. As an instance of what they had to bear with, just listen to this liberal and discriminating observation that emanated in this broad land of enlightenment in 1835. A pamphlet issued in that year by "An American," Mr. I. F. B. Morse, in drawing a comparison between what was then the previous immigration and that of the day the writer lived in, contained this statement:

Then we were few, feeble, and scattered. Now we are numerous, strong, and concentrated. Then our accessions of immigration were real accessions of strength from the ranks of the learned and the good, from enlightened mechanic and artisan and intelligent husbandman. Now, immigration is the accession of weakness, from the ignorant and vicious, or the priest-ridden slaves of Ireland and Germany, or the outcast tenants of the poorhouses and prisons of Europe.

But immigration still continued to grow, and very luckily for the country.

The Civil War broke out, and the patriotism of the foreign-born citizen was put to the supreme test. The test, however, was not literacy but loyalty. The recruiting officers carried no slips containing 40 words. The only requirement was whether he would fight for "liberty and union," and how well he proved his devotion to this doctrine needs no eulogy from me, although I may take occasion to remark that his achievements during the conflict effectually silenced the carping of his critics. The immigrant of to-day would, if put to the same trial, prove equally worthy as his predecessor.

Abraham Lincoln realized the need and the value of immigration. His message to Congress of December 6, 1864, contained this recommendation:

I regard our immigrants as one of the principal replenishing streams which are appointed by Providence to repair the ravages of internal war and its waste of national strength and health. All that is necessary is to secure the flow of that stream in its present fullness, and to that end the Government must in every way make it manifest that it neither needs nor designs to impose involuntary military service upon those who come from other lands to cast their lot in our country.

As a result of this friendly and wisely foreseeing policy the period which has elapsed since the close of the Civil War has been specially characterized by immigration, and this period has also been the most glorious in our economic history. It has been notable for gigantic strides and progress in all the arts and industries. It has at the same time been distinguished for high wages and national prosperity. Immigrant industry constructed our railroads, opened our mines, leveled our forests, toiled in our mills and factories, in our shops and on our farms, and kept the furnaces of production burning and the wheels of industry turning.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], when confronted with this undeniable record, graciously admitted the truth of it, but said we ought to leave some of these railroads and mines to be developed by our descendants. It is fortunate for the gentleman, so far as his convenience is concerned, that those who lived before him did not adopt his sagacious view of waiting until the railroads would be built by the then native labor, for if they had I am afraid the gentleman in coming to this Capitol to discharge his duties as a Representative would be compelled to travel from Texas to Washington on horseback.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] gives us a specimen of a similar kind of logic used in advocating this bill. He regrets that about 75 per cent of the operatives engaged in the woolen business are immigrants or their descendants and that there is a great percentage of immigrant labor employed in other industries. Does it never occur to the gentleman that when these people are working they are heaping up and have heaped up a wealth cornered and monopolized, not by immigrants, but by keen and shrewd Americans of long residence in this country?

When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] stands up and with a willingness amounting almost to flippancy gives his assent and voices his perfect satisfaction at being numbered among those who are in favor of this measure, he forgets that the mills and manufactories of Massachusetts, his own State, are a standing protest against his action and an eloquent tribute to the industry and effectiveness of immigrants and their descendants.

Now, what does this bill provide. It excludes—

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish.

In other words, it makes education the standard and measure of good citizenship. It would close the gates of the country to the moral and industrious immigrant who has been denied the opportunity of education at home, whose vigorous body would add value to the country's power of production, but open them wide to the idle and worthless but somewhat educated foreigner whose presence here is unnecessary and whose purpose is often to stir up agitation against the Government. On this point let me read a most pertinent editorial taken from the Jersey Journal, of New Jersey, issue of May 11, 1912. It says:

THE LITERACY TEST.

The proposed literacy test would keep out a great many immigrants, but it is doubtful if it would exclude the really undesirable aliens, the proletariat that produces social ferment in dense alien populations.

Criminals are not the illiterates, as a rule. Some education is required to write Black Hand letters, and some degree of intelligence is needed to make bombs.

Another editorial, taken from the Boston Morning Herald of June 3, 1912, comprehensively deals with the contention of the advocates of this bill, as follows:

ILLITERACY AND IMMIGRATION.

One honest, hard-working illiterate who lives clean and raises a decent family is worth a hundred of the inefficients our schools turn out annually, who can read and write, but who are too fine to work and who are utterly useless in the civilization they live in. We place too high an estimation upon mere literacy, but if we paid more attention to teaching children that morality which comprehends respect for parents and law and the necessity of earning bread by the sweat of their face, we would not be troubled so much with the envy and discontent which are the outgrowth of laziness and inefficiency.

The literacy test for the exclusion of immigrants is the sheerest humbug. Had such a law been in force since the early seventeenth century America would still be a howling wilderness. The American troubles of the twentieth century are not the fruits of illiteracy and immigration; they are made right here on the soil by those born on the soil, by the lazy, the inefficient, the envious, the unsuccessful—all the products of our public schools. Go to your prisons some time and learn how many of the inmates are illiterates. When literacy has become a synonym for sanity, honesty, industry, and physical soundness it will be time enough to make illiteracy a barrier for admission to the Republic. I would rather have an illiterate who can steer a plow, wield a sledge, roof a house, lay brick, or dig a good sewer than a dozen half-baked chaps who can write dog and read cat and who are willing to live on the labor of a father and mother. Let Congress face the question fairly, and let the Government back up the immigration authorities in enforcing the laws we have. The illiterate test is pure punk, just plain flapdoodle.

Mr. REILLY. Is the gentleman aware that over 75 per cent of the inmates of prisons in this country can read and write?

Mr. HAMILL. The gentleman is correct in his assertion. It is only another proof that literacy is not a synonym for good citizenship and that a man who is industrious will make a better citizen than a man who has a smattering of knowledge but who is not industrious or of good moral character.

But the authors of the bill want the immigrant excluded because he keeps down American wages and lowers the American standard of living. A good many of those who urge this charge never before evinced such a tender solicitude for the wages of the American workingman, and it is to be regretted they did not have time to consult the statistics on the subject from which they would with certainty learn that wages in this country are highest in those places where immigration is heaviest and lowest in localities where immigration is most sparse. It is not the honest hard-working illiterate laborer that the American workingman has reason to fear, but the prison-made products that come from the skilled hands of those who could always pass a literacy test.

But it appears that some of the immigrants after working here a certain period return to their own country and thus carry with them a portion of the country's wealth. Is not this argument directly fatal to the charge that he disturbs wages in America? The truth is that he remains here while work is plentiful and then departs when it is scarce. So, therefore, the head and front of the poor immigrant's offending consists in yielding to an admirable natural sentiment to visit the home of his fathers. Dear, dear, how dreadful! But how about our own precious self-expatriated plutocrats, who carry out millions they never earned to enable them to live in foreign lands amid more agreeable European society? How about the fortunes with which they dower their daughters to make them eligible in marriage to scions of foreign nobility—fortunes spent in discharging mortgages and repairing the estates of gentlemen who could probably pass a literacy test, but not invariably a character test? There is this difference between the two classes that go out. When the immigrant returns he carries with him and spreads the grateful story of America's grandeur and goodness to all who live beneath the flag and causes America to be cherished in the hearts of the world's millions. When the plutocrat goes abroad, if ever we hear about him, it is generally in making among his new neighbors some obsequious reference in disparagement of America as compared to the land he then lives in. No; we should not restrict immigration. We need the immigrant here. We can easily assimilate him and there is plenty of room to receive him.

The present immigration laws are more than stringent enough to keep out unworthy applicants for residence. They are a more than sufficient sifting process and will keep out all undesirables if the gatekeepers of the country properly enforce them. If, perchance, a small number of unworthy immigrants have found entrance, it was owing to the lax enforcement of the laws, the remedy for which is not restriction. It is unjust to attempt to shut off the entire stream of foreign population merely because a small and impure rivulet trickles through.

The safety of this country demands that the supply should be drawn from different sources, whereby the various nationalities are blended and a high type of physical strength combined with intellectual and moral excellence is obtained. This alone would give us an ideal American citizenship. No country ever did or ever could succeed in this policy of exclusion. This was attempted by China when, lured by the siren cry of "China for the Chinese," she raised prohibition barriers against immigration and severed all voluntary relations with the outside world. From then onward the star of her career steadily waned. A similar fate would befall us if ever, in an evil moment, we should adopt the policy insisted upon by the oriental sagacity of the advocates of this bill.

America owes to the immigrant too great a debt to be repudiated by restriction. He has been closely identified with her history in the most perilous as well as the most prosperous periods of her history. The future welfare and supremacy of this country will depend in no small part on her immigrant citizen, and to now close the avenues of the country against his entrance would be in the highest degree ungrateful and unwise. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this measure to-day have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this measure or who may speak upon it to-day have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Not those who may speak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that those who have spoken on this measure have leave to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] to use some further time. He has quite a little time left.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to use any more time?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many more speakers has the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, immigration should be wisely regulated, and we do not attempt to oppose wise restrictions; but the question is so presented that it becomes of vast and mighty importance to our civilization.

Much is said about education. What is it? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] seems to think that it is everything. Education is power, if it is education founded upon morality and right; but if it is top-heavy, if it is merely an education of intellect divorced from usefulness, from honesty, from virtue, it is a danger in this country. [Applause.]

I wonder what this Nation would be to-day if you should eliminate from it all the men and women who can not read and write? My judgment is you would weaken it; that there is much of virtue in the simple and unlearned of our land. Virtue is the foundation of all that is permanent in our national life. The unlearned men of the past, who could neither read nor write, have been a power in usefulness, and usefulness is the test. We want men who come here and add to the daily virtue of this Republic by usefulness. Those are the men we want; and when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] recites, as I am glad he did, the important fact that a very large proportion of our useful industries are served by people of foreign birth, he adds an argument that is unanswerable in favor of the usefulness and the virtue of the foreign population as a whole who come to this country. Learning without industry is of little profit and often an injury. Virtue is the test, and virtue springs largely from useful industry. Robert Burns, after picturing the rugged beauty and simplicity of the poor cotter's life in his native land, says:

> From scenes like these, old Scotia's grandeur springs,
> That makes her lov'd at home, rever'd abroad:
> Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
> "An honest man's the noblest work of God;"
> And certes, in fair virtue's heavenly road,
> The cottage leaves the palace far behind;
> What is a lordling's pomp? A cumbrous load,
> Disguising oft, the wretch of human kind,
> Studied in arts of hell, in wickedness refin'd!
> O Scotia! my dear, my native soil!
> For whom my warmest wish to heaven is sent!
> Long may thy hardy sons of rustic toil
> Be blest with health, and peace, and sweet content!
> And O! may heaven their simple lives prevent
> From luxury's contagion, weak and vile!
> Then howe'er crowns and coronets be rent,
> A virtuous populace may rise the while,
> And stand a wall of fire around their much-lov'd isle.

Ah, the menace to this Republic is not from the poor men of the cabin and the hut who have not learned to read. The apostles in olden times could not read or write, some of them, and yet the world took notice of the fact that they had been in the presence of a great Teacher. Inspiration and power may come from education, but it is the education of the soul. [Applause.] It is the education that is inspirational; it is not the scholastic learning of this country that constitutes our greatness.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NYE. I have not the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has a half a minute remaining.

Mr. NYE. Then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS. Under the illiteracy test, if it is put into the law, there would be excluded some 200,000 of alien immigrants who could not read. Does the gentleman think the position of this country would be better if those people who could not read should be admitted?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has 16 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania 1 minute, and the gentleman from Alabama 5½ minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield 1 minute more to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, the literacy test is absolutely no test at all. I do not remember exactly the question put by the gentleman from Kentucky because I did not suppose I would have time to answer it, but the educational test does not go to the question of our real citizenship. The foreigners in my county and my city, whether from Italy or Scandinavia, are the people whose children are the first to learn, and foremost many times in taking prizes in the schools. [Applause.]

The children of the poor, unfortunate men who come to this country and who have been unable to get an education are invariably foremost in our schools, I think, throughout the country. That is true of all nationalities.

Yes, to answer the gentleman's question more specifically, I really believe the country would be better for the 200,000 immigrants, notwithstanding their illiteracy. Illiteracy is not incompatible with good citizenship.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has one minute remaining and the gentleman from Alabama five and a half minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to use his time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have one minute?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in that time I want to refer to the industrial and political economy of my friend from Texas, Mr. DIES, who complained of the congestion of the East Side of New York and to commend to him the testimony of Joseph Barondess, who does not agree with Samuel Gompers upon this question, that there are no better paid garment workers in the United States now than those on the East Side of the city of New York, and in a Democratic district, who receive two or three times as much pay as they do abroad. Secondly, as to the gentleman's economy with reference to the increased cost of living in connection with immigration, the gentleman ought to know that every immigrant who comes to this country, which enjoys the greatest home market in the world, consisting of more than 90 per cent of all we produce, brings in his own skin a customer for at least 90 per cent of the products of the farm. That is all, Mr. Speaker. I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The communications are as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 23, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Pennsylvanians who still have faith in freedom and love our country for what it stands for look to you and your colleagues to continue fight against narrow immigration laws. Lack of letters is misfortune, but not crime. To turn back liberty seekers because of that misfortune is like returning victims of Russian tyranny to Siberia and the knout because of their fetter bruises and their scars.

SOLOMON SOLIS COHEN, Chairman.

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE,
New York, January 22, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to draw your attention to the inclosed copy of a letter we have sent to the conferees on the immigration bill in which serious defects in the bill are pointed out. I would ask you further to consider the inconsistency between the provisions of section 3 and section 9 pointed out by Senator STONE in his argument, which may be found on page 1788 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 20, 1913. As Senator STONE showed, the clause in section 9 prohibiting steamship companies or their agents under penalty of $100 fine from bringing in persons who can not read practically nullifies the provision in section 3, which permits an alien to bring his grandfather and other relatives, even if they can not read. An immigrant domiciled in this country may be separated from his family because of the unwillingness of the steamship company to incur the penalty by bringing in persons who can not read. This is a hardship which plainly was not intended and may be remedied by inserting the exceptions mentioned in section 3, also in section 9.

I trust you will find it possible to use your influence with the conferees to have the amendments referred to incorporated in the bill.

Assuring you of our appreciation of the splendid fight you have made against the enactment of this unnecessary, restrictive measure, I am,

Very truly, yours,

HERBERT FRIEDENWALD, Secretary.

JANUARY 21, 1913.

DEAR SIR: In the debate in the Senate on the 20th instant a number of defects in the conference immigration bill were pointed out, and there are several to which I especially wish to direct your attention.

1. A provision still remaining in the conference report is as un-American as the certificate section to which the Senate unanimously objected. Its evils, however, require a little study in order to make them apparent. The provision referred to is made up of three portions of the bill, viz, in section 3, among the excluded classes are "persons who have committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude." In section 16 the immigration officials are given the right to secure through United States courts subpœnas to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and documents, while no such power is conferred upon the accused or detained alien; and in section 18 there is the clause: "In every case where any person is ordered deported from the United States under the provisions of this act or of any law or treaty now existing the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be final." The provisions in sections 16 and 19 are new. The present law as to criminals is that those are excluded "who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude."

As will be seen at a glance, the amended law confers upon boards of special inquiry and upon immigration inspectors the right to try aliens for alleged crimes. There are no rules of evidence; there is no right of counsel; the immigration officials have the right to subpœna witnesses, but the alien has not. Many European countries try defendants in their absence, and, of course, the production of a properly authenticated judgment convicting a person might be held to be conclusive proof that he had committed the crime therein mentioned. Under the present act it would not be sufficient to deport, as the courts have held such convictions are not the character of convictions which the statute contemplates; but under the amended law such a conviction might be held to be absolute proof of the commission of the crime, which is all that would be required for deportation.

If an alien is ordered excluded or deported, he has only the right of appeal to the Secretary, and the decision of the Secretary is made final. This means that even the courts have no right to admit an alien whom the immigration inspectors have declared to have been guilty in his own country of a crime involving moral turpitude. (Lou Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S., 460.) In other words, foreign governments, as, for instance, Russia, who hereafter desire to have returned to them their citizens or subjects in this country will not resort to extradition proceedings under treaties, where an alien has a right to go to court and where he has the right to remain in this country if he can show that he is a political refugee, but the alien will be accused of the commission of some crime. He can not plead that he is a political refugee, as the statute makes no exception but simply provides for the exclusion or deportation of persons who have committed a crime involving moral turpitude. Surely, the American public has not so soon forgotten the cases of Pouren and Rudowitz, the Lettish revolutionists, whom Russia tried to extradite only two or three years since and who were permitted to remain in this country by the order of Secretary ROOT, because the crimes which they undoubtedly committed were political crimes in connection with a revolution. If this statute had been in force, Russia would never have gone into extradition proceedings against them, but would have accused them of larceny or murder and proved it, and they would have gone to Russia as men who had committed those crimes in that country, and when they arrived there would have been shot as having taken part in a revolution.

Unless our Congress has lost all touch with American ideals it will not put into the hands of the secretar agents of foreign countries the right to have deported, upon proof of some minor crime in connection with revolutionary activities, those who unsuccessfully engaged in revolutions in foreign countries and thereafter fled to this country. If this had been the law in our country in 1849, Carl Schurz would have been deported to Germany and shot.

2. In the bill as it passed the Senate, page 31, section 16, lines 17 and 19, the following appears:

"On such examinations by the board of special inquiry the alien shall have the right to be represented by counsel or other adviser."

In the conference report the above clause is omitted, and in its place is inserted, page 14, lines 12–21, a clause requiring the board of special inquiry to inform the alien of his right of appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and giving him the further right to be represented by counsel or other adviser on such appeal. This last clause is practically meaningless, as the alien has always had this right. (See Immigration Rules, Nov. 15, 1911, rule 17, subdivisions 1 and 2.)

In the conference report, page 14, section 17, lines 20 and 21 of that section, is reproduced the provision of existing law that "all hearings before such boards shall be separate and apart from the public." This gives to the proceedings of the boards of special inquiry an inquisitorial and star-chamber character, which is against the spirit of our institutions. Practically the first contact, therefore, which an alien has with American institutions is with secret administrative processes which he has left his native land to avoid.

There is no reason, therefore, why an immigrant should not have the same right to be represented as is conferred upon the meanest criminal. Frequently the immigrants are so dazed when they come before boards of inquiry, being unfamiliar with the language and procedure, that they are practically speechless, some of them having come from countries like Russia and Roumania, where a public official is looked upon as a public enemy. I have heard of many cases where immigrants were possessed of considerable means, who, fearing that they would be stripped of their belongings if they admitted that they had money, have denied that they had any, and were only saved from deportation by subsequent disclosure of the fact.

Proper regulations can be adopted by the boards of inquiry which would prevent any abuses that might be feared from the presence of advisers and counsel. Nobody should be prevented from coming into this country without a proper opportunity of being represented by counsel.

I therefore suggest that the words stricken out be reinserted, and that the words in section 17 requiring all hearings before boards of inquiry to be separate and apart from the public be stricken out.

Will you not have these amendments made in conference? They are altogether in accord with the spirit of American traditions.

LOUIS MARSHALL,
President American Jewish Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized for five and a quarter minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

[Mr. FARR addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know this is coming to an end, and that after six years of struggle petitions, not of the 450,000 whose petition the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] referred to but the petitions of 3,000,000 of workingmen, are about to be heeded by the American Congress. Thousands and thousands of them are themselves foreigners, who came to this country for the purpose of obtaining their living by their daily toil. I am glad that after long, weary waiting years in response to the petitions of 3,000,000 farmers all over this country and of thousands of members of patriotic organizations you are about to cast the vote for which the country has so long besought you in vain. One gentleman said there had been a lobby maintained here. Who are the lobbyists, Mr. Speaker? None of them hired and paid by the steamship companies to do their work. The only ones that I know of are those who are legislative agents of those who toil and who do know something about these conditions. [Applause.] Right there I want to read from a letter that has no doubt been going into the hands of Members of Congress during this debate, signed by L. H. Hammerling, president of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers. He says:

If the bill becomes a law, not only will it hamper the interests referred to, but, no doubt, by reason of the limitation of labor, further increase the cost of living and give more power to the labor agitators to make trouble.

Here is what that man said. That is the kind of lobbyist, Mr. Speaker, that is being maintained all over the country, not only here, for the purpose of stirring up sentiment against this bill. That man was before our committee, and here is the statement he made as the president of the Foreign Language Newspapers Association:

As an ex-member of a union I know something about their doings, and I hope it will be taken down as I say it. The labor leaders have realized to-day that the foreign-speaking population can not be managed by them in their own way, as was done 20 years ago. We have advanced, become acquainted with American institutions, and have educated ourselves. When they could use us they were satisfied to have us come, but they have found we object to some of their methods.

That is the kind of man who has been filling the mails with base slanders of the officials of the great labor organizations of the country, the purpose of which is to ameliorate the conditions of those who earn their living by the sweat of their face.

When President Gompers was before our committee and that statement of Hammerling's was called to his attention he said:

I do not think Mr. Hammerling would have made that statement seriously in the presence of Mr. Mitchell and myself.

And then went on to state that foreigners who were members of these organizations had themselves joined in these petitions. They have prayed to you to take this cup from them in order that they may be relieved of those who come like birds of passage and beat down the price of the wages of laboring men and then, like Arabs, fold their tents and silently steal away and take everything they can with them.

Over against the petition referred to by Mr. CURLEY, of the authenticity of the signatures to which we know nothing, I present the following letter of Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1912.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that you will speak before the United States Senate on the amendment offered by yourself to the immigration bill, S. 3175, and that you will deal specifically with the subject of the restriction by means of the illiteracy test.

In order that you may also know the latest action of the American Federation of Labor on the subject of immigration, I hand you herewith copy of the proceedings of the thirty-first annual convention, held at Atlanta, Ga., last November (1911), on page 66 of which you will find a statement by President Gompers on the subject of immigration, showing the Immigration Commission to have completely indorsed the attitude of the American Federation of Labor upon the general subject matter of immigration, particularly that of the requirement of an educational test. On page 287 of the same report you will find the report of the committee on president's report, reaffirming former actions of the conventions of the American Federation of Labor, and instructing the legislative committee to continue their efforts to secure the passage of either the Gardner or the Burnett bill, or, for that matter, any other suitable measure providing for the educational test. This report was unanimously adopted by the convention.

Hoping that this may be of service, and with best wishes for your every success on this important question, I remain,

Yours, very truly,

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

A resolution of the same purport was again adopted at the recent annual meeting of the representatives of the American Federation of Labor. I also present a resolution recently adopted by the National Grange, and a letter from the general counsel of the Farmers' Union containing resolutions passed a few weeks ago by the Farmers' Union of the State of Texas:

Resolution adopted by the National Grange of Patrons of Husbandry in national session, 1912.

Whereas the Senate has passed an excellent bill, S. 3175, containing the legislation recently recommended by a congressional investigating commission as necessary to exclude undesirable immigration, and the House leaders have announced that the measure will be considered "the first thing in December," and as we have recommended that the head tax be increased, the illiteracy test be enacted, the foreign steamships be fined for bringing undesirables, and that other judicious measures be adopted by the Congress of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the National Grange, forty-sixth annual session, That we urge this needed legislation.

FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE
UNION OF AMERICA,
January 25, 1913.

Hon. JOHN T. WATKINS, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

CONGRESSMAN WATKINS: I am in receipt of a letter under date of the 19th instant from the State president, Mr. I. N. McCollister, of the Louisiana Division of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, pointing out that a few farmers are being hoodwinked by certain mercenary interests and selfish influences into asking for the disapproval of the immigration bill, S. 3175, unless special provision is made for the free admission of "cotton pickers" from Mexico, directing me to call the matter to your attention and the attention of the other Members of the Louisiana congressional delegation, and informing me that he had sent you a telegram in which he stated, among other things, "I hope that you will * * * urge the passage of the immigration bill."

These same interests and influences have been industriously at work in Texas with specious arguments and half-truth statements trying to inveigle members of the farmers' union to write and telegraph their Congressman in opposition to the approval of the immigration conferees' report. A number of their letters and newspaper articles have been sent to me. In fact, Mr. Peter Radford, State president of the Texas division, is now in Washington attending a conference of farmers, and he says that the matter was thrashed out at a State meeting last week in Fort Worth, at which there were over 1,500 delegates, the following resolutions being unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the House and Senate have passed an immigration bill (S. 3175) containing the very legislation urged for years by the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America in local, State, and national meetings, and recently recommended by a congressional immigration commission, after a four years' searching investigation: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Texas Division of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America in State session assembled this 15th day of January, 1913, That we urge upon the President the approval of this excellent bill, and point with pride to the fact that every one of the Congressmen from this State, except one, were in favor of the measure, a number of them taking the floor and ably arguing for its passage; and be it further

"Resolved, That the State secretary send forthwith a copy of this resolution to each one of our 16 Congressmen, each of our Senators at Washington, give a copy to the newspapers for publication, and transmit a certified copy to the President, the White House, Washington, D. C."

Thanking you for permitting this intrusion upon your busy time, I am, knowing your genuine interest in and sympathetic support of all measures looking to the betterment of farm life in particular, and the promotion of the general welfare of all the people and the country in general, instead of the service of certain special interests and selfish influences,

Very truly, yours,

J. H. PATTEN,
General Counsel Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America.

I could pile up resolutions of patriotic organizations, labor brotherhoods, and others until they would fill a book.

Gentlemen, these are the ones in whose behalf I appeal to you to-day. The Hammerling clans have sung their swan songs. The attorneys and agents of steamship companies have been for months gumshoeing through these corridors. The voice of the country comes to you in clarion notes, and if you fail to heed it they may refuse to heed your voice when you come before them again.

This is the day I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen have spoken since the unanimous request was made some time ago, and I ask that those gentlemen who have spoken since that time on this bill be given unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 72, answered "present" 13, not voting 131, as follows:

CITIZENS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUFFRAGE LEAGUE.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorial of the Citizens of the District of Columbia Suffrage League.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorial. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not know what the memorial is, but a great many memorials are presented to Congress every day. If we intend to print them in full in the RECORD, we shall have a big job on our hands. Is there a special reason for printing this in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. What is the memorial about?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is a memorial signed by a body of citizens who seek suffrage in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I hope in the end to object, because otherwise when memorials are sent to me and I am called to account because I can not have them printed in the RECORD I should be at a disadvantage.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will object, to save time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

YAKIMA INDIANS—IRRIGATION OF LANDS (H. DOC. NO. 1304).

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have put in the basket and printed as a House document a memorandum from the Yakima Indians relative to the irrigation of their lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] desires unanimous consent to print as a House document a memorandum from the Yakima Indians. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 28180) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Mr. MOON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Calumet River, Ill. and Ind.: For maintenance, $20,000: Provided, That the portion of the old channel of the Calumet River in sections 18 and 19, township 37 north, range 15 east, of the third principal meridian, in Cook County, Ill., which lies outside of the new channel lines established by the United States and shown on "Map of the Calumet River, Ill., from Lake Michigan to Calumet Lake, to accompany report of W. G. Ewing, United States attorney, to the Attorney General, respecting cession of right of way for improvement of said river under the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884," and which lies outside of the exterior limits of the turning basin to be established on said Calumet River in said sections, is hereby abandoned as navigable water of the United States from and after the time when the United States shall have secured title to the land necessary for the establishment of the turning basin at some point, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, between One hundred and thirteenth Street and One hundred and seventeenth Street in the city of Chicago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask whether the Calumet River is wholly within the municipality of Chicago at the place where these improvements are contemplated?

Mr. MANN. The Calumet River is not wholly within the limits of Chicago or of the State of Illinois. It rises in the State of Indiana.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to get an answer to my question whether at the point where these improvements are to be made the city of Chicago extends on both sides of the Calumet River?

Mr. MANN. Where this turning basin is to be located, which is one of five proposed turning basins, it is wholly within the limits of Chicago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Wholly within the limits of the city?

Mr. MANN. The turning basin is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask what will become of that part of the channel which is to be abandoned as navigable water of the United States, after the United States has acquired certain other parts of the land for a turning basin?

Mr. MANN. Under the project adopted a number of years ago for the improvement of the Calumet River in Illinois and Indiana, it was provided that the property owners might donate property, or might be required to donate property to straighten the river. At that particular place there was a bend in the river running out some distance from a straight line. The property owners donated property for the straightening of the river 200 feet in width. The title was accepted and the channel has long since been constructed. As a part of the project it was provided in a subsequent act of Congress that five turning basins should be located on this river. The Government desires to locate a turning basin at the lower end of where this bend formerly was, and the property owners there are expected, or somebody is expected, to furnish the land necessary for that.

In the original project is was stated that the old bend of the river should be abandoned as navigable water whenever the channel was straightened. That has been done. Of course the people there are to furnish the land necessary for the turning basin. This is for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the abandoned navigable water reverts to some one. To whom does it revert? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. MANN. The property owners there claim that it has already reverted to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The channel which was acquired was acquired from somebody. From whom was it acquired?

Mr. MANN. It was acquired by donation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think it is worthy of note that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is somewhat lax upon other great subjects, seems to be fairly well posted on this particular matter affected by the river and harbor bill. Later on I want to make some comments on that. I think my time under the five-minute rule has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Chicago, Ill.: Of the amount appropriated in the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, for improving harbor at Chicago, Ill., $100,000, or so much there of as shall be necessary, may be allotted, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the repair of the existing outer breakwater and for maintenance dredging in the harbor; and the said sum, if so allotted, is hereby made immediately available.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. For a great many years the city of Philadelphia has endeavored to have written into this bill a provision for the survey of Frankford Creek and the Schuylkill River, both streams within the limits of the city of Philadelphia, upon which a business, national and international in character, is done. Frankford Creek penetrates a portion of the city and reaches an arsenal of the Government. It is in a deplorable state. Time and time again we have asked that that creek be opened and developed by the Government because of its navigability and because of the national and international commerce that passes over it. But in one or two instances the Government engineers reported that while the project is worthy they can not recommend an appropriation because it is wholly within the limits of the city of Philadelphia. In the case of the Schuylkill River it does more export business in the petroleum trade than any other part of the country, with the possible exception of Galveston, which has been coming along rapidly within recent years. We formerly had an appropriation for dredging, as we ought to have had, but under the recent policies of the River and Harbor Committee or under the Board of Engineers, with the concurrence of the committee, we have been denied any support whatever for the Schuylkill River. I can produce statistics, and shall ask to put them in the RECORD, which will show the vast amount of business of all kinds that is done on that stream.

I have shown by the chairman of the committee and other distinguished Members of the House that in many other instances when streams bisect the city the Government makes appropriations. It develops in Boston where Chelsea Creek is to be improved at the expense of the Government, although it bisects the city and is within the limits of the municipality. I have shown by the gentleman from Florida that the city of Jacksonville is situated on both sides of the River St. John, and the Government makes improvement of the channel, and properly so. Now, I come to the distinguished leader on the Republican side, who out of the abundance of his knowledge says that the Calumet River, upon which he seems to be thoroughly posted, bisects the city of Chicago and is within the city limits.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That portion which is to be improved by the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there is no appropriation in this bill for the improvement of Calumet River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the committee has sanctioned and authorized work to be done on the Calumet River, which is bounded by the limits of the municipality.

Mr. MANN. Not in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, jurisdiction is being exercised by the committee over this stream within the limits of the city of Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon me for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Here is an item in the bill, "Improving Calumet River, Ill. and Ind.: For maintenance, $20,000." That project runs into Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman maintains that where a river runs into two States, the project covering the improvement in two States, that we can not spend the money in Illinois because it is within the city limits, and because it is within the city limits of some city in Indiana we can not spend it there; that although it is an interstate stream they could not spend the money on it at all?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not object to the Government spending money on any navigable stream. That is what I am advocating; but I do object to spending it within the limits of a certain municipality and then refusing a Government appropriation to certain other streams in other municipalities.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to give a better illustration than the Calumet River.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Is Frankford Creek in Philadelphia a navigable stream?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it has a depth of water of 9 or 10 feet and coastwise vessels go in and come out.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is quite likely correct in so far as the failure of the Government up to the present time to go inside of the corporate limits of the city of Philadelphia for the purpose of doing river and harbor work; but I want to say that there is no hard and fast rule on the subject; in fact, no rule at all. It so happens, maybe, that it has not been done in Philadelphia, and if it has not the reason no doubt is that the engineers have given no projects for work there.

As I have said, there is no rule on the subject, because there are many instances throughout the country—several that I know of—where work is being done or has been done on navigable channels extending into the limits of cities—improvements made within such limits. It is not confined to Chicago nor to Boston; it is not confined to any other city in the country. Whenever the engineers furnish a project for work inside the corporate limits of a city, the River and Harbor Committee considers such recommendation, and if found to be worthy we do not hesitate to recommend an appropriation, even though a part should be within the corporate limits of a municipality.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, does not the Government make appropriations for the improvement of the Willamette River, which bisects the city of Portland, Oreg.?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It has been making appropriations for that river; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the gentleman and to the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors whether it is a fair proposition that in numerous instances appropriations should be made for the improvement and development of rivers that bisect cities, and then deny the same right to other cities that make application therefor.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is not a question for our consideration here to-day. It is purely an academic question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it is a very practical one.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If I were to answer the gentleman's question, I would answer it as I did a moment ago, that we can not lay down any hard and fast rule. I do not know why the engineers have not recommended a project for the rivers or creeks in the city of Philadelphia. I do happen, however, to remember this: That some years ago I think the then chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Mr. BURTON, had some kind of an agreement, oral perhaps, with the officials in the city of Philadelphia by which it was understood that if Congress would do the work from the ocean up to the city, the city would take care of the work inside its limits.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was an understanding made with one mayor of the city; I remember it very well; but it grew out of the desire of Mr. BURTON to hold the appropriations for rivers and harbors in check as well as he could, and constantly the illustration of the Cuyahoga River, which bisects Cleveland, was used, and that has been the only precedent which the Board of Engineers has given, so far as I am informed.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would say that I do not know anything about the merits of the proposition. It may not have been an equitable arrangement or it may have been; but assuming that it was unjust to the people of Philadelphia, yet the agreement does not necessarily lay down any rule for our action in the future. And I will say again, if a project is recommended to Congress for work inside the corporate limits of Philadelphia, it will receive fair consideration at the hands of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a fair statement from the gentleman, and I thank him. That gives us some hope.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to see the gentleman from Pennsylvania trying to compare Frankford Creek, which is a meandering stream where the people owning the abutting property own to the middle of the stream, with the Calumet River. Frankford Creek is wholly within the city limits, it does not run into navigable waters, it is not navigable, and still the gentleman undertakes to compare it with the Calumet River!

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Not now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that the Government would not permit a bridge to be built across Frankford Creek.

Mr. MADDEN. The Calumet River is an interstate stream, 200 feet wide, having a navigable depth of 22 feet, through which the great ships of the Lakes sail, and the gentleman complains about this all because he thinks appropriations are being made within the city of Chicago. There is no appropriation for the improvement of the Calumet River within the city of Chicago in this section of the bill, none whatever. There is simply a provision to abandon the navigability of a piece of land that formerly was the stream, in which there is now no water, and which it is intended to use as a turning basin. Frankford Creek! It is wholly within the city of Philadelphia. Trying to make it navigable!

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Trying to have the Government place itself in the position of having lawsuits brought against it by the owners of property who own title into the middle of the stream.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We will absolve the Government from that at once.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE.]

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Frankford Creek is in my district, and I would like him to speak as kindly of it as he possibly can. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of veneration for Philadelphia and all its creeks, and I hope that Frankford Creek is sleeping as peacefully as Philadelphia is. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] seems to have overdone himself in his efforts to call attention to Frankford Creek. But if he had compared Frankford Creek with any of the smaller streams anywhere——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will be very glad to compare the condition of the commerce of Frankford Creek with almost any inland water you may mention.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). But by comparing it with a great river like the Calumet, why that makes the gentleman from Pennsylvania ridiculous.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he desires to compare the commerce of this creek, or whatever it is, with any stream in Illinois. Why, this little Calumet River has a commerce of between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 tons every year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think I can show for one or two of the creeks—I know the Calumet River fairly well——

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman will find it very difficult to show any place in the eastern part of Pennsylvania that has the same amount of commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I said I would compare the commerce of Frankford Creek with any inland stream of Illinois.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I hope our friends over in Philadelphia will not get the impression from this debate that Frankford Creek or other waterways in that locality are being neglected by the Member from Philadelphia on the committee. I have done everything in my power to induce the Government engineers to recommend Frankford Creek for improvement, but they have failed to do so up to this time, and until they do so everyone here must know that this committee can not recommend an appropriation for that purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. SPARKMAN] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 36, line 7, after the word "available" by adding a new paragraph as follows:

"Improvement and repair of levee at Shawneetown, Ill., $10,000."

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that was a matter we passed upon here yesterday afternoon which the committee refused to adopt.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was $15,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the chairman is right about the amount. Now, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the River and Harbor Committee, I did my best to induce you to consent to an amendment to give relief to the people in my district at Shawneetown in the sum of $15,000. I have studied the question over and have concluded that if you will consent to give an appropriation of $10,000 that you will exemplify the old adage, "A stitch in time saves nine." If we fail to do this, I have no doubt, gentlemen, that the time will come when the great ravages of the mighty Ohio River will produce such havoc and destruction at that place that some Member of Congress from that district will come before your committee with a much larger scheme of appropriation and you will consent then to the sum of $50,000 or $100,000, which might be saved here by a timely appropriation of $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOWLER. You did this some time ago——

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to interrupt him in the middle of a sentence, but last year, when we made the appropriation at the time of the flood, was it not understood or expressly provided we would do something for Shawneetown?

Mr. FOWLER. I so understood it at that time.

Mr. MANN. Was not that in the nature of an adoption of the project for the protection of that locality?

Mr. SPARKMAN. There was so much confusion I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Last year, when we made the emergency appropriation on account of the floods in the Mississippi River and extended it up more or less to the Ohio and Illinois, I know my colleague either introduced a resolution or offered an amendment——

Mr. FOWLER. It was a resolution.

Mr. MANN (continuing). In reference to Shawneetown, and it was understood when we passed that emergency appropriation a portion of it might be made available for this sort of purpose. Is not that in the nature of an adoption of the project for that purpose?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No. If the gentleman will pardon me, the emergency resolution that we passed simply anticipated an appropriation that was to come in the general rivers and harbors act then pending. It provided that this money—a million and a half of dollars—should be spent for the construction and repair of levees on the Mississippi River and its tributaries. The places where it was to be spent were to be selected, of course, by the Mississippi River Commission, and allotments made by that commission in such amount as in their judgment seemed necessary. I am not advised how much the Mississippi River Commission allotted to Shawneetown. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] can state.

Mr. MADDEN. Was it not allowed to Mound City?

Mr. FOWLER. It was allowed to Mound City and, as I recollect, a portion to Cairo.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There was no provision that any particular place along the river should have the allotments made, but the whole matter was to be left in the discretion of the Mississippi River Commission in such places as in their opinion were entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have five minutes more. We have taken up most of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is quite right in his reference to the disposition of the resolution which I had the honor to offer about a year ago for the improvement of the levee at Shawneetown. Then, as now, there was a very high stage of water in the river, with immense danger to the life and property of the people of that town and that section. The resolution provided for the immediate appropriation of $25,000. It was considered by the House, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] gave his wisdom and his assistance to the adjustment of the emergency fund which had been provided for in the rivers and harbors bill, or in a special bill—I believe it was—or a special resolution. In that adjustment it was considered and agreed, as I recollect, that it should apply to the city of Shawneetown. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is quite right in saying that that created a project. In fact, there was a project. In fact, there was a project created before that time, because the United States Congress had appropriated money for the purpose of aiding in the construction of that levee. An immense gap or break had been made in it some time before, whereby property and lives were destroyed. An appropriation of $25,000 was made by Congress for the purpose of repairing it. The danger to-day is so great that, in my opinion, the levee is likely to break at any time. A few dollars spent now will save to the Government, in my opinion, in the future many thousands of dollars. I hope and trust, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will assent to this proposition, because it is not much in comparison with the amount of work which may be done or which may be required to be done in the future.

I know that there is a disposition on the part of Members of this House to allow no appropriations which have not been provided for in the bill, but this seems to me to be a case of emergency. We may read in to-morrow morning's paper, or in the paper a few mornings hereafter, of an immense break in that levee requiring the expenditure of thousands of dollars to repair. But if it should stand the high water for this season, $10,000 could be used next summer for its repair and the strengthening thereof, and put it in a condition where it would be able to protect the lives and property of the people of that section of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it is a wise policy on the part of the Government to enter into the construction of broken levees for the purpose of commerce and navigation?

Mr. FOWLER. I will say to the gentleman in reply, that I am not questioning the wisdom of Congress in its past action in this respect.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If a dam should break, does the gentleman think the Government ought to appropriate money to repair the dam?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an extension of three minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that it is not good policy to run off after every idle dream for the improvement of creeks and small streams of this country, not navigable, like the one that flows through the city of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], but when it affects a great thoroughfare like the Ohio River, then the importance is of such great value——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would take about all the money that the Government can afford to raise for all purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. I think one that would question the improvement of a river of that character ought to have his name written upon the scroll that I am told will be dropped down by the archangel of heaven on the great day of judgment, on which will be written the names of those who have committed crimes against mankind on earth. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the gentlemen will give me this little appropriation, so that "a stitch in time may save nine." [Applause.]

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would not concede that this would be a wise expenditure or a proper expenditure of public money, even if there was a project for it, or a project upon which it might be predicated. But there is really no project for this work. The fact that in an emergency last year that particular portion of the stream may have been embraced within the terms of the bill making appropriations for the Mississippi River and its tributaries would not furnish a project for any appropriation this year. The law under which that appropriation was made reads as follows:

That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans and specifications and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against the impending flood the levees on the Mississippi River and tributaries thereto.

That was intended—whether wisely or unwisely I shall not stop now to say—to meet a particular emergency, which emergency has passed. Now, if we are to make an appropriation every time a flood is threatened, every time an individual becomes frightened in regard to rising waters, then we shall soon reach the bottom of the United States Treasury. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote has been announced, and it is too late for a division. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent channel depth of 9 feet, $6,000,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building of levees between the Head of Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo., and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That of the money hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary shall be expended in the construction of suitable and necessary dredge boats and other devices and appliances and in the maintenance and operation of the same: Provided further, That the watercourses connected with said river and the harbors upon it, now under the control of the Mississippi River Commission and under improvement, may, in the discretion of said commission, upon approval by the Chief of Engineers, receive allotments for improvements now under way or hereafter to be undertaken, to be paid for from the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this paragraph. This is a very important item, involving questions similar to those raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Against the entire paragraph?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning on line 14, page 36?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Page 36, beginning on line 12, and ending with line 14, page 37.

I make this point of order, Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be a ruling on the question. I shall not discuss the merits of the proposition except in one or two instances as I go along.

The rules provide that "existing law may be repeated verbatim in an appropriation bill (Hinds, IV, 3814 and 3815), but the slightest change of the text causes it to be ruled out." I think the point is entirely different from the point raised yesterday. Here is a positive change of existing law.

The basis for the appropriation was the act of July 25, 1912, in which, among other things, it was provided that there should be an appropriation of $6,000,000, similar to the appropriation made here, for a purpose which shall be considered extraordinary work. Now what was the purpose of the appropriation? It was to be considered extraordinary work, due to an emergency that prevailed at that time, which Congress intended to relieve.

Now the bill that come before us changes that law, removes the emergency entirely, and writes into the law an appropriation of the enormous sum of $6,000,000 for a permanent and fixed purpose. My contention, Mr. Chairman, is that you can not write into a bill of this kind an appropriation involving a tremendous sum of money for a permanent improvement when the original provision of law was that the appropriation was made and was to be considered as for an extraordinary emergency work.

What are the facts? That in 1912 there were floods upon the Mississippi River, and the newspapers reported great loss of property and inundation of vast acreages, involving plantations upon which there were cotton and other products, and we read occasionally that lives had been lost, although there is very little specific information as to that. There is nothing obtainable in the hearings before the River and Harbor Committee indicating that there was any loss of life, and we have very little, except through the newspapers, as to the loss of property. But the War Department, in the annual report of the Secretary of War, throws some upon the subject of the floods upon the Mississippi River for which this emergency appropriation was made.

In the annual report for 1912 the Secretary of War gives us this first authentic information concerning these floods in the Mississippi for which this Congress last year spent about one-fourth of the entire appropriations made for commerce and navigation throughout all of the States of the Union. The Secretary of War reports:

> In the latter part of March and early April of 1912 most disastrous floods occurred in the Mississippi River and its tributaries, the flooded area covering 15,000 square miles, or a tract larger than the combined area of the States of Maryland and Delaware or of Vermont and New Hampshire. Appropriations amounting to about $1,240,000 were made by Congress—

I do not know just where those figures come from. The appropriation for emergency work was $6,000,000, but he says—

> Appropriations amounting to about $1,240,000 were made by Congress for the purpose of providing tents, rations, and other necessities and services to alleviate the distress of sufferers in the flooded district. The work of distributing this relief was organized and carried out by the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments of the Army, under the general direction of Maj. J. E. Normoyle, of the Quartermaster's Department. The department was assisted in the work of relief by naval, revenue, and militia officers, by the Red Cross, and by local citizens' committees. The work was handled so quietly and efficiently that it has not attracted the public attention which it deserves. But it was directly instrumental in preventing a very large amount of suffering in what has proved to be one of the worst floods in the history of the Mississippi River. For a considerable period of time 185,000 persons were furnished daily rations, 20,000 persons were furnished shelter, and 50,000 head of live stock were provided with forage. I believe that the work was accomplished with an unusually small amount of wastage.

I call attention to the fact that this is not for the purpose of commerce and navigation, as contemplated by the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The particular appropriation to which the gentleman refers there was not contained in any bill reported by the river and harbor committee, but was appropriated for by the Committee on Appropriations for the specific purpose there mentioned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then this $1,240,000——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is not included in the $6,000,000 at all. It is an entirely different matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This $1,240,000 is in addition to the $6,000,000, and in addition to the $2,500,000 additional that was granted last year for work upon the Mississippi River.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; the bill last year carried $6,000,000 for the Mississippi River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Plus two and one-half million dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; it carried three and one-half million plus two and one-half million.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For Mississippi River work—I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I suppose the gentleman is talking about the Mississippi River from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That was $6,000,000, and this particular appropriation of $1,240,000, to which the gentleman is now referring, was made by the Appropriations Committee not for the purposes of navigation at all but for the purpose of caring for about 150,000 people, who were rendered homeless and shelterless and who were without food or raiment. It had nothing whatever to do with the amount carried in this particular item or in the similar item which was carried in the last bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This was in addition to the $6,000,000 that was specifically appropriated for this emergency work. Then, leaving out the smaller appropriations, that would make $6,000,000 plus $1,240,000, which would make $7,240,000 appropriated for emergency work.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Why does the gentleman persist in using the word "emergency" all the time, when, as a matter of fact, this appropriation is a general one, just the same as previous appropriations? It was only considered as emergency work in order that it might be carried on more expeditiously under the eight-hour law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the very point I am making, that the reason we were induced to appropriate $6,000,000 last year was that it was represented to Congress that there was an emergency; and it was so written in the bill, because the gentlemen did not dare ask for $6,000,000 to build levees along the Mississippi River without having an emergency. And that emergency has now passed.

In the present bill the line "which shall be considered extraordinary emergency work" is eliminated, and now we are introducing a permanent project on the strength of a law that passed last year, which is existing law, providing that there was an emergency.

The reason for the enactment of the law, the basic law upon which this bill is based, was the representation to the House that an emergency existed in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman's objection is that we have departed from the language of the bill last year?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is my point.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The emergency having passed, we are justified in departing from the language. That was to meet the emergency.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point is that the representations made to the House upon which it appropriated $6,000,000 last year was that there was an emergency, and that this year the committee has taken language out of the bill and has undertaken to write into the law that we shall hereafter appropriate $6,000,000, or whatever amount is agreed upon hereafter for the permanent construction of levees along the Mississippi River.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman believe that making the appropriation of $6,000,000 would render the paragraph more subject to a point of order than it would have been if the amount carried had been $4,000,000?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the fact that you have followed in this bill the exact amount—attempted to follow the exact language of the bill of last year—vitiates the paragraph in the bill this year because you have eliminated the emergency part of it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The language is the same that has been in the bill for 20 years except in amount. Sometimes it has been three million, sometimes three and a half million, sometimes four million, and sometimes six million has been carried. The rest of the language is the same, except that last year, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, which was rendered just before the reporting of the bill, which declared that this was not emergency work, and as always before that we assumed that it was, we put in the provision last year that that should be considered emergency work.

Now we have reverted to the language that we have adopted for the past 10 or 15 years. If this paragraph is subject to a point of order, then all of the paragraphs that have appeared for the last 15 or 20 years were subject to a point of order, because they are identical in language except that we carry an appropriation of six millions, and heretofore sometimes it was two millions, sometimes three, and sometimes four.

The fact that it was put in last year making it emergency work has no bearing whatever upon the propriety of this particular legislation under the rule, because the gentleman will note that this money is being expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, and so forth, "in such manner as, in their opinion, shall best improve navigation and promote the interest of commerce at all stages of the river."

The expenditure of the $6,000,000 is limited to that particular purpose, but the emergency which confronted us last year, in the opinion of the committee, had passed, and therefore this work was not taken out from the operation of the eight-hour law. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to answer the gentleman, if the Chair will indulge me a moment. I am not contending against the appropriation of public money for the construction of levees, for the improvement of private property, if Congress shall determine that that is the wise thing to do. But I say to the gentleman that this $6,000,000 written into the law last year because of an emergency was never written in before.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But $4,000,000 was written in before and three and a half million dollars was written in, and the language of the law—take, for instance, the bill of 1911—is identical with the language contained in this bill, except that the bill of 1911 said three millions and this says six.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was the emergency work mentioned in the bill of 1911?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It was not, and has never been mentioned except in the bill for 1912.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The appropriation for $6,000,000 was written in for emergency work and only because there was an emergency?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the appropriation for last year had been for $3,000,000, the words exempting it from the operation of the eight-hour law would no doubt have been put in, because it was desired by Congress that the commission might be able to repair these breaks before another flood came. I am very sorry indeed to say that although it was written in as an emergency we were not able to repair the levees. In my own district, having worked day and night in an effort to close that breach, we to-day have been notified by telegrams from that country that the flood that is now in the river has broken through this crevasse that we were not able to close, and the country is now being overflowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to indulge me for a moment or two. Suppose a dam should break in Pennsylvania, as one did at Johnstown in 1889, and 5,000 lives or thereabouts should be destroyed and millions of dollars of property lost, I question whether Congress would consider reconstructing that dam or whether it would consider making reparation for those lives and that property lost. I am simply saying to the gentleman, in answer to his proposition as to the Mississippi, much as I deplore the breaking of levees there, it seems to me he is putting into this river and harbor appropriation bill, intended for the promotion of commerce and navigation, a clause that has no business here. If he would take this question up as an entirely new question, eliminate the Mississippi Commission altogether from this bill, or give it a separate department, I care not which, then we would have the proposition before us in such a way that we could discuss it fairly. But here, on the pretense of an emergency last year, the gentleman comes in this year for exactly the same appropriation, when the emergency is passed, and he asks Congress to bind itself to a project that will cost $100,000,000 and postpone for a long time work on other projects.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Always with these words of limitation, heretofore and now:

In such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to press this matter unduly. I base the point of order on the ground that there has been a distinct change in the text of the law in the submission of this bill. On that I rest the point.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard a moment upon the point of order. I think it will expedite the consideration of the bill if there is a ruling on the point of order before we discuss the merits of the question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] makes the point of order that this paragraph changes existing law and therefore is not in order in this bill. It is true that we can not change existing law in a general appropriation bill, but it is also true, and it has been held over and over again, that river and harbor bills are not general appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question about that.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Legislation is in order in a river and harbor bill. The only question, then, is whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has exceeded its jurisdiction. This is a paragraph relative to the improvement of a river, and it is therefore within the jurisdiction of the committee, so even if it were new legislation, which I do not concede, it would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the whole paragraph which provides for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, and so forth, and for continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent channel depth of 9 feet, $6,000,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and so forth.

The point the gentleman makes, as the Chair understands it, is that it changes existing law, and that the language of this paragraph is at variance with the general law authorizing the appropriation. That, of course, raises the question of the jurisdiction of the committee. It has been held time and again that the River and Harbor Committee is not one of the general appropriation committees, and that the restrictions as to legislation provided by the rule to which the gentleman refers do not apply to this bill. The question then left, and the only question for decision is, is the subject matter of the paragraph within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The Chair thinks it is, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think the Chair is entirely correct in holding this paragraph is not subject to a point of order so far as the language in the paragraph itself is concerned, but I am inclined to believe that if the paragraph clearly indicated the class of work which is largely done under it, it would be held subject to a point of order, for this is a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the interest of navigation, and it is not a bill for the protection of private property from inundation. Yet everyone who is at all acquainted with the facts knows that the work that is being done, and has been done on the Mississippi River, for which large portions of these appropriations are used, are for the building and repair of levees whose primary object and purpose is to protect private property from inundation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like for the gentleman to quote some authority for that statement, which runs counter to the judgment and the reports of the engineers and the Mississippi River Commission—all of them.

Mr. MONDELL. No one in the country—no one I can think of—more fully understands and appreciates the truth of what I have just said than the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman quote me, then, as his authority? Am I the only authority the gentleman can quote to support that? If so, I would like to testify.

Mr. MONDELL. I think if the gentleman from Mississippi would here and now admit—which he will not do, and which he might do at some other time and some other place—that these funds are used for that purpose, I think he would be held to be a very high authority on that subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. I think it is about time for us to begin to be honest with ourselves and fair with the country. If the expenditure contemplated was writ in plain language in the bill, the item would go out on the point of order. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware of the fact that bills have been introduced at this session of Congress providing for the payment of damages for riparian rights done by floods along the lower Mississippi?

Mr. MONDELL. I was not aware there had been any recent proposed legislation on the subject, but I know there have been propositions for legislation of that sort. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] eloquently, forcibly, vehemently appealed to us for an appropriation admittedly for the purpose of protecting an old historic town in his district, and no member of the committee suggested that they refused to appropriate on the ground that it did not come within the purview of the bill, but because, forsooth, some engineer had not reported favorably upon it. There will be vast sums of this $6,000,000 spent on works that can have no other real object or purpose than to protect private property along the lower Mississippi. I am not here to quarrel with that policy; I am here to ask gentlemen to acknowledge it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have five minutes additional, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. I am here to ask gentlemen who live along the Mississippi to be honest and frank and fair about these things and admit that we have long entered upon the work of spending the people's money to protect the property of individuals. We have spent $121,000,000 upon the Mississippi River, not taking into consideration the sums spent on the various harbors along that river, on which many millions have been spent.

That $121,000,000 has been largely spent for the purpose of protecting private property, and yet the bills carrying these appropriations have contained no word or suggestion of this purpose for which the money was largely being spent. And gentlemen at this late day, when it is known to all the world that this is what we are doing, ask upon what information I base that statement. Levees are constructed and repaired. Many miles of them are for the purpose of protecting private property or they have no value. This is a great river, the greatest in all the earth, draining an immense basin, having great tributaries hundreds of miles in length, and the people of the States and communities bordering these streams and tributaries have for many years been draining their swamps and their lowlands, adding to these annual floods, carrying devastation to the lower river. I would be the last to say that there was not a responsibility on the part of the American people to do something for the protection of the property and the rich lands along that river from the devastating floods that flow into it from the Missouri, the Ohio, the Red, and all the great streams that flow into it. The only complaint I have is, first, that you are not fair and frank about it, that you are not honest in regard to it with yourselves and with the country, and, secondly, that, refusing to be frank and honest and fair about it, the system under which the work is being done is wasteful, and in the long run must be the most gigantic failure ever undertaken by man.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The constant building up of levees on either side of this mighty stream and attempting to control its flood waters, which rise higher and higher and higher until they will overtop any levee you may build, though you drain the Treasury. You can not confine within a narrow channel the enormous floods that are increasing rather than decreasing as the years go by——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman's time has not expired, but I just wanted to ask a question. I want to ask what plan the gentleman would recommend to Congress to save the great overflow of this river and protect the land adjacent thereto?

Mr. MONDELL. I see many men before me who are better qualified to formulate and recommend proper plans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. NYE. Will the gentleman give me just a second?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. NYE. On the subject of floods I ask unanimous consent to print a letter from a friend and a man well known in Washington, a scientific investigator, Mr. Freeman Thorp. I do not know that he has written anything before for Congress on the subject, but this correspondence is entirely germane. Without stopping to read it I ask unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter referred to:

HUBERT, MINN., January 20, 1913.

Hon. F. M. NYE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see that the House is to discuss what to do with the Mississippi River for its improvement and the control of its floods. Why not consider the subject broadly? I live near the headwaters of the Mississippi where the floods start, and I can from my own researches suggest a practical method of ultimately eliminating the danger factor from the Mississippi flood problem and at the same time solving other important problems closely allied to it. Scientific investigation, conducted along the same lines by the late Prof. W J McGee and myself for many years, shows that on all the great central plateaus of the North American Continent we are slowly but surely losing our groundwater supply because more of the precipitation runs away to the oceans than ever comes back as floating vapor, the only way it can come back. The enormous surface run-off that causes the floods, great as it is, is only two-thirds as great as what goes to the oceans by seepage and underground currents. The underground part we can have little control of except to a limited extent by artesian wells. But the direct surface run-off we can and for many reasons of vital importance ought to prevent. First, because on all the uplands of the Northwest it is all needed in the soil that it falls upon; second, because in its run-off it carries with it by soil erosion some of the best soil to swell the floods to a dangerous height with muddy water. This is a constantly increasing waste and danger, as we bring more and more of the land under cultivation by the mistaken old methods that proceeded on the assumption that good farming required surface drainage that would run the rainfall off as direct and quickly as possible. Hence the greater the floods, and as we build necessary levees to prevent flooding the lower Mississippi Valley, the channel of the River between the levees receives an annual deposit of mud at the bottom, making it necessary to raise the levees higher and higher to insure safety, and in time the lower Mississippi is going to be up in the air. When by stopping this surface run-off from all the dry upland cultivated fields, pastures, meadows, and forests, as I have been doing for years on my own land and as it is thoroughly practical to do on 400,000,000 acres in the upper watershed of the Mississippi, we can hold back a hundred times as much of what would otherwise be flood waters as can be held back by all the big reservoirs that can be practically made in that territory. All this except on forest lands can be done by present and prospective farmers by the method I have worked out without any cost to the farmer and no other cost to the Government than to show the farmer how to do it with great benefit to himself in greatly increased crop yields and in preventing soil erosion, preserving and increasing the fertility of his soil and preventing on prairie lands the waste of soil drifting, which my method does. The method in brief is for all the semiarid and dry sandy upland fields under cultivation a system of contour plowing and disking that leaves the surface of the field with horizontal parallel ridges that hold all of the precipitation exactly where it falls, preventing soil drifting and the usual run-off with its attendant soil erosion, and in practice these ridges do not interfere with cultivation and harvesting to any material extent, and it costs no more to prepare a field for a crop by this method than by the old methods, and when prepared by this new method there will be no run-off, and these ridges remain to hold all the precipitation when these fields in the rotation of crops become meadow and pasture land. With very little labor lands that are now and are to remain in permanent pasture or forest can be put in condition to hold nearly all the precipitation and thereby double the grazing capacity and forest growth. I have sandy land prepared in this way from which not one drop of water has run off in 17 years, the average precipitation being about 30 inches, and there are many million acres of just such land in Minnesota to which this method can be applied and it will hold back more water than all the many reservoirs in our State which contains nearly all the reservoirs that hold back the Mississippi River waters except the irrigation reservoirs, practically none of which are in Minnesota. I do not antagonize reservoirs wherever practical to hold back flood waters, especially in humid regions, but holding the precipitation on and in the soil of nearly half a billion acres of land in the upper Mississippi watershed is of such vastly greater importance that any plans for the improvement of this great river should take into account this practical method of lessening its floods and eliminating a deposit of mud in its channel that scientific investigation has brought to our hands.

With great respect,
Respectfully,

FREEMAN THORP.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from my native State, for I was born on the banks of the Mississippi, asked me what plan I would propose. I do not pretend to be a river expert, but this must be patent to anyone who has given attention to the subject at all, namely, first, that the floods of the Mississippi, with the draining of the lands along its border, increase rather than decrease; and, second, that there can be no system of storage reservoirs, no matter how large they may be, on the upper ranges of the river which will to any considerable extent reduce the volume of its mighty floods, particularly when various branches rise in flood at the same time; third, the building of parallel lines of levees leaving but a narrow channel can have no other effect than to confine these volumes until they rise and overtop any levees you may build.

The only way, in my opinion, to control the Mississippi River is to abandon to overflow in high flood a reasonable amount of the lowland along the stream. Build such low levees as may be helpful for navigation and protect those lowlands from ordinary rises, but not high enough to protect them from great rises. Further back from the river, at reasonable distances, build your lines of levees that will preserve the lands lying on either side of them from all the mighty floods of the stream. That means that in the intermediate territory it will not be possible to build as permanent structures as people owning those lands might desire to do. That would require that those lands should be utilized for the growth of certain classes of crops, but it would fix and make certain their values. Back of the outer lines of levees the country would be perpetually protected from inundation.

But we are not doing that. We are not attempting to do anything of the sort. We are patching here and there. We are making appropriations in times of great floods which we call "emergency appropriations," simply for the purpose of making a bad matter worse, and after we have piled up all these mighty mounds of earth and stone, and the Missouri, the upper Mississippi, the Ohio, the Red, and the Platte hurl their mighty floods into the lap of the Father of Waters. At the same time these great works, built at the expense of hundreds of millions of dollars, are as absolutely ineffectual and valueless as though they were built of straw, and lands that might be protected, and lands lying back from the river at some distance that might be made perfectly safe from this inundation, are frequently and periodically swept by these swelling floods.

I will join the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in doubling those six millions if that committee will frankly state its purpose to protect the lands along this great river and adopt a plan under which that can be effectively done.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I have listened with a great deal of interest, Mr. Chairman, as I always do, to the very learned and eloquent discourse of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I fear that he has been led into some errors in regard to this measure to-day, as he undoubtedly was guilty of making some mistakes in his statements yesterday in regard to certain other projects. He tries to impress upon the House the idea that we are building levees on the Mississippi River without any warrant for the same, entirely for the purpose of protecting private property and without any reports of engineers or anyone else in favor thereof.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is a fact that more than 30 years ago all works on the Mississippi River south of Cairo were placed in charge of a great commission known as the Mississippi River Commission, composed of three Army officers of the Engineer Corps, one officer from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, two of the greatest engineers that could be found in civil life, and one lawyer. The lawyer, let me say, for many years has been Judge Robert S. Taylor, of Fort Wayne, Ind., who lives many miles from the nearest part of the Mississippi River.

This great commission, created by act of law in 1879, and since then given additional authority in every river and harbor act passed since that time, has studied the various problems connected with the Mississippi River, and under authority given to it by law has expended considerable sums of money in building levees, on the theory that those levees were of material aid to commerce and were necessary to improve the navigation of the river.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I decline to be interrupted, Mr. Chairman, as I have only five minutes. Those reports have been printed year after year along with the reports of the Chief of Engineers of the Army. Anyone can find them.

There has been some little difference of opinion, I admit, among the members of that commission, but ever since its creation a majority of its members have held, and to-day hold, that it is necessary to build levees along the banks of the lower Mississippi River in order to promote navigation, and that levees are material aids to commerce. So in that particular the gentleman is entirely wrong. The paragraph in question provides that the commission shall expend the sums at their disposal "in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river."

Could legislation be better safeguarded than that? Could a better plan be adopted than to commit the expenditure of this money to such a commission as I have described? Can higher-grade men be found anywhere in this United States, and more disinterested men?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five miuntes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already had 10 minutes on this paragraph.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I move to strike out the last two words of the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment as a new section to this paragraph.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the debate was closed only on the paragraph. If the gentleman moves to strike out the last two words, that is an amendment. He is entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed on the paragraph.

Mr. GARRETT. But not on all amendments thereto.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall try not to detain the House long.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent if the gentleman desires five minutes, but it is perfectly patent that when you close debate on a paragraph that is not subject to debate at all except in the way of amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proposes to proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Gentlemen, it is a fact that considerable sums of money have been expended on this river for levees, and I assume that considerable other sums are going to be expended for levees on that river. But it presents a unique situation, different from any that exists anywhere else in this Union.

Let me remind the gentlemen of this House that the three political parties that held their conventions last summer all recognized this river as presenting an entirely different problem from those presented by any other waterway in the Republic. All of them declared that the control of floods on the Mississippi River was a national problem. The accumulated waters of 24 States flow down into that river. It is a greater burden than the local people can possibly bear, but they have struggled nobly.

Within the last 30 years the National Government has expended about $26,000,000 to aid in the construction of levees along the banks of the Mississippi for the purpose of protection against floods and for assisting navigation and commerce. The National Government would not have expended it if the commission had not thought it was going to aid commerce. At the same time the local people, whose property was frequently overflowed and whose losses were very severe, have expended more than twice that sum—have expended on these great levees over $60,000,000. My own State of Louisiana every year pays out fully a million and a half dollars for levees.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says that these levees do not protect the adjacent lands from floods. This is a mistake. There are occasionally great floods which these levees are inadequate to control, but in the main, gentlemen of the House, the levees do furnish protection. Between 1903 and 1912 we had no disastrous overflows. From 1897 to 1903 there were no overflows. But if we did not have the levees there would be a serious overflow every spring. It is necessary to have the levees in order to protect our lands against the freshets that come down the river every year.

The gentleman suggests a second line of levees. That is probably all right, and I will be glad to join him on it. Why did he not say what was in his mind? Why did he not tell us to impound the rainfall at the headwaters of the various streams in order to use those waters for irrigation?

I was delighted to make a speech for the gentleman's irrigation project when it was up here several years ago, and I will gladly vote any reasonable sums to irrigate the arid lands anywhere and everywhere in this Nation which belong to the public. But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, let me say to the Members of this House that when a gigantic problem confronts them and only one effective measure of solving it has been suggested by the greatest engineers in the world, they will naturally adopt that means. The levee system may not be effective in all instances, but it is the best that can be done. We have been following it for 200 years with a great measure of success. The reservoir system which is advocated by some has not met general approval from the engineering world. Mr. M. O. Layton, its chief exponent, says it would cost from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 for reservoirs on the Ohio and upper Mississippi alone, without considering the many other streams which form other floods down the lower Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. Are the pro forma amendments withdrawn?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I withdraw the one I made.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "appropriated" in line 13, page 37, the following: "And provided further, That waters wholly or partially within municipalities along said Mississippi River and on watercourses connected with it may be improved upon paying one-half of the cost thereof to said commission, the other half of the cost thereof to be paid from the amount herein appropriated."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that amendment is offered on behalf of the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee. That city is situated at the junction of Wolf River and the Mississippi River. Nonconnah Creek is just south of the city. For all time the city of Memphis has been on a bluff high enough not to be injured by the flood waters of the Mississippi River until the building of levees on the Arkansas side. Since those levees have been built the waters have come up higher and higher each year until the floods of 1912 submerged the northern part of our city on Wolf River and all of the lower part of the city. The engineer in charge reported to the Mississippi River Commission, and it is to be found in the report, that last year there was destruction of property of the value of about eleven hundred thousand dollars in the city of Memphis by reason of these floods. It destroyed or put out of commission our gas system, it put out of commission our artesian water system in part, drove hundreds of families from their homes, and caused the greatest loss of property and injury for a time to the health of our city.

Practically no moneys have been expended for a period of more than 16 years in the Memphis Harbor, except some five or six thousand dollars perhaps, and now the object of this amendment is to get a reasonable proportion of protection for this city from the ravages of the river. We do not come here and ask you to give us entire protection, although we believe our damage is due to the building of these levees. I do not say that we are against this project, because I am heartily in favor of building levees along the Mississippi River. [Applause.]

But while we build them surely it is not the desire of any fair-minded man to permit the destruction of property in any city by reason of the building of the levees, and surely we ought to be protected in part, and that is all we ask in this matter. By this amendment it is provided that this work shall not be done until such municipality shall put up one-half of the cost of improvement of this harbor. Is not that a fair proposition? Has any other applicant in any other portion of this bill come before you with a similar proposition? I appeal to you, gentlemen. I was not here during the deliberations of the committee, I am sorry to say, and did not have the privilege of a hearing before the committee on this amendment, but I now appeal to members of the full committee to do an act of simple justice to the city of Memphis.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman says the damage that was done was due to the building of levees put in by the Government on the other side.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And the gentleman thinks the Government ought to bear one-half the expense?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the Government is liable for the damage, why should it not be liable for the whole expense?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Let me finish. If the Government is liable for the damage done, why should not the gentleman ask for protection for the whole sum?

Mr. McKELLAR. I would be very glad to do it, but I felt that that was as much as I could get. I am asking for what I think the committee will give me.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman is not asking for justice; he is only asking for what money he can get.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am asking that Congress will do Memphis justice in part; if they could not do it in whole, I ask it for half of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, although I shall not object, the debate on the paragraph is exhausted and can only proceed by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is pending.

Mr. MANN. If the Chairman will permit me to read the rule on the subject he will see that if debate is closed on the paragraph it is closed on all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII says:

The committee may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only (which motion shall be decided without debate); but this shall not preclude further amendment to be decided without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. MANN. I do not object to the gentleman's request to proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already ordered that debate shall be closed, and the gentleman from Tennessee is only proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] has asked why I do not ask for all of these improvements. I want to be fair with this committee. It will take a very considerable sum of money to protect the northern part of our city, which is on Wolf River, as well as on the Mississippi, from these overflows, if there is another one like that of last year. A simple dirt levee will not do the work, because there is a bayou, as we call them down there, but which are commonly known as creeks, that runs through the entire city, and some arrangement will have to be made to take care of that water. The city of Memphis is not responsible for this visitation of floods. That city had never been overflowed until the building of these levees.

Mr. CALLAWAY rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, I have only five minutes, and I trust the gentleman will excuse me. I stated to him the position I have taken in my appeal to the committee.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to ask just a simple question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well, I yield for a question.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understood the gentleman to say that he was in favor of the levee system and that the levees were the cause of the injury, and that now he wanted the Government to protect them against the injury by the levees that he was in favor of.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will answer the gentleman's question. I am in favor of levees, absolutely, unequivocally, beyond the shadow of a doubt, but I am not in favor of building the levees on one side to protect the people on that side of the river, without giving at least a measure of protection to the people on the other side of the river. Is not that a fair proposition? Anyone who is familiar with that great river and the territory through which it flows, and anyone who is familiar with the project, knows that we have to have levees along its banks.

All that I am asking is that provision be made to protect, in part at least, the cities along that river. I appeal to you in the name of fair play. As I say, this city was up and beyond any overflow whatever, by its natural position along the banks and along those high bluffs, until the Government and the levee districts together have built up these levees on the other side, thereby raising the stage of the water until it overflowed our city. I ask you for help because of the injury that it did to our city. It can hardly be imagined, and the Mississippi River Commission has reported that about eleven hundred thousand dollars' worth of property was destroyed in the city of Memphis last year, that the gas works were put out of commission, and that the waterworks in the northern part of the city were put out of commission. Hundreds of families were driven from their homes, and every species of property destroyed. We had to haul water around the city in carts for the people until we got relief because of the backing up of the sewers into the water mains. It seems to me that this amendment ought to pass.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed on this amendment. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and of the committee to the fact that the bill now contains a provision almost identical with the one that he offered, beginning on line 8, page 37, as follows:

Provided further, That the watercourses connected with said river and the harbors upon it, now under the control of the Mississippi River Commission and under improvement, may, in the discretion of said commission, upon approval by the Chief of Engineers, receive allotments for improvements now under way or hereafter to be undertaken, to be paid for from the amount herein appropriated.

The only difference in this proviso and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is that his amendment leaves out the words "in the discretion of said commission," and makes it read, in substance, that the Mississippi River Commission may make these allotments, provided the community contributes one-half of the amount. Under the rule which has always obtained, under the interpretation put upon the statutes universally by the Chief of Engineers when the language of the statute is that they "may" make such improvements, it is interpreted to be mandatory that the work be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the municipality is willing to put up one-half of the funds, might it not be reasonably supposed that the commission ought to do it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will answer that. Under the gentleman's amendment the Mississippi River Commission will be compelled to contribute half of the money whether in their judgment the work ought to be done or not. Under the law as it stands to-day, and as it will be under this bill as now written, they may contribute not only half but all of it, if they think it ought to be done.

But if the city of Memphis thinks that her waterworks or her gas plant is in danger, without any reference on earth to the interest of navigation, without reference to any interest the Federal Government may have in the matter; if the city of Memphis, under the gentleman's amendment, sees fit to put up the money necessary to protect her waterworks or gas house, they will come to the Mississippi River Commission and compel the Federal Government to come in and make an appropriation to bear half the expense. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is no concern whatever of Congress and that it is in a spirit of unfairness, it is an ungenerous spirit on the part of the city of Memphis that sits upon a high hill, surrounded by these deltas from which it draws its trade and its prosperity, and for the upkeep of the levees which protect them she pays not one nickel in taxes. I say, it is an ungenerous spirit for that city to ask those people who have, as Mr. RANSDELL has just told you, contributed out of their own pockets and out of their taxes $60,000,000 of money to maintain these levees, to share her municipal burdens, or to ask that the Federal Government take from those people the money that will otherwise be spent for levees, in order to help the city of Memphis, where the assessed value of taxable property exceeds the assessed value of property in all those deltas combined, in order to help that city build or protect her gas plant or her waterworks. So, I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the "noes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. McKELLAR), there were—ayes 6, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 23, page 36——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has that paragraph been read?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is an amendment to the Mississippi River paragraph.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman puts in an amendment ahead of what has been read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the Clerk read the next paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to lose my place, that is all.

Mr. MANN. We have not reached the gentleman's place yet.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a new paragraph at the end of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has under consideration the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the amendment comes in properly here; it is an amendment to the paragraph on page 36.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that paragraph has been already passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The whole paragraph is pending, the Chair understands.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph at the end of the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 23, page 36, by inserting, after the word "levees," the following: "which shall be considered extraordinary emergency work."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is that debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 14, page 37, insert as a new paragraph:

"That the sum of $20,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the purpose of maintaining, raising, and protecting against the impending and possible future floods the levees on the Mississippi River, as well as the rivers tributary thereto."

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair that this is not an amendment, but is a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] does not offer it as an amendment, but an independent section.

Mr. DYER. This is the substance of a bill which I introduced into the House on the 6th of last May, and it is in substance a law that will have to be enacted if Congress is to cover this situation on the Mississippi River and the floods that come from time to time. It has been stated here that appropriating money piecemeal from Congress to Congress to protect the people and property is not satisfactory. The engineers of the Government have decided that the levees can be raised to protect the property and to prevent overflows, and if that can be done, Mr. Chairman, it certainly ought to be done, and it ought to be done by the United States. The vast amount of property involved in the protection and raising of the levees to prevent overflows is of so vast importance that it must and will come in the near future. I present this to the committee for its consideration, with the hope that I may bring it to their attention and to the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in such a way that they will begin a careful and scientific investigation of this project, with the hope that in the near future we may secure a law and sufficient appropriation to raise the levees for good. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the raising of the levees of the Mississippi River so as to prevent overflows affects many of the great States of this Union. Within its watershed, in whole or in great part, are the following States: Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. The Chief of Engineers of the Army stated to me that for substantially the amount carried in this amendment the levees can be raised to prevent overflows. When the levees have been raised to prevent overflows then the swamp and overflowed land can be drained and made healthy and fit for agriculture. There are 77,000,000 acres of this land, and divided into farms of 40 acres it would provide homes for 1,925,000 families. Swamp lands, when drained, are extremely fertile, requiring but little commercial fertilizer, and yield abundant crops. They are adapted to the growth of a wide range of products, and in most instances are convenient to good markets. While an income of $15 to $20 per acre in the grain-producing States of the Middle West is considered profitable, much of the swamp lands in the East and South would, if cultivated in cabbages, onions, celery, tomatoes, and other vegetables, yield a net income of more than $100 per acre.

In addition to the immediate benefits that accrue from the increased productiveness of these lands, a greater and more lasting benefit would follow their reclamation. The taxable value of the Commonwealth would be permanently increased, the healthfulness of the community would be improved, mosquitoes and malaria would be banished, and the construction of good roads made possible. Factories, churches, and schools would open up, and instead of active young farmers from the Mississippi Valley emigrating to Canada to seek cheap lands, they would find better homes within our own borders.

The following is substantially an accurate estimate of the number of acres of swamp and overflowed lands, by States, that may be reclaimed for agriculture if the levees of the Mississippi are raised sufficiently to prevent overflows, which can and will be accomplished through the enactment of the amendment I have presented to this bill, to wit:

	Acres.
Alabama	1,479,200
Arkansas	5,911,300
California	3,420,000
Connecticut	30,000
Delaware	127,200
Florida	19,800,000
Georgia	2,700,000
Illinois	925,000
Indiana	625,000
Iowa	930,500
Kansas	359,380
Kentucky	444,600
Louisiana	10,196,605
Maryland	192,000
Maine	156,520
Massachusetts	59,500
Michigan	2,947,459
Minnesota	5,832,308
Mississippi	5,760,200
Missouri	2,439,000
Nebraska	512,100
New Hampshire	12,700
New Jersey	326,400
New York	529,100
North Carolina	2,748,160
North Dakota	200,000
Ohio	155,047
Oklahoma	31,500
Oregon	254,000
Pennsylvania	50,000
Rhode Island	8,064
South Carolina	3,122,120
South Dakota	617,480
Tennessee	639,600
Texas	2,240,000
Vermont	23,000
Virginia	800,000
Washington	20,500
West Virginia	23,900
Wisconsin	2,360,000

These lands, after they have been drained and made fit for agriculture, will be worth from $60 to $100 per acre. Taking the lowest estimate of $60 per acre, the cash value of these 77,000,000 acres of land would be $4,620,000,000. These lands as they now stand are not worth to exceed $8 per acre. You can therefore see the greatness of this project and that it is worth while for Congress to give it serious consideration.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reply briefly to some statements made here a little while ago by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I trust my friend from Louisiana did not intend to convey the impression to the country that there is an antagonism between the friends of the levee system and the friends of another system, namely, the reservoir system, to protect the lands of the South.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman that I had no such idea at all. I was simply trying to convey the idea that the only two systems I had heard suggested were levees and reservoirs, and the cost of the reservoirs, as laid down, was $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and it was impractical.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, at ordinary times there is no question but that the levee system is sufficient to protect the lands, but when the floods of all the rivers that are tributary to the Mississippi come together, as they did last year, it is demonstrated that the levee system is not entirely sufficient to protect them. And therefore, as supplementary to the levee system——

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment. He is talking upon an entirely different subject.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am coming to that. My remarks will have relation to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

I wish to make this point clear, that we do not oppose the levee system, but are heartily in favor of it, but it is only the question of a vast amount of money that perhaps prevents this country from embarking upon a new policy for more efficiently protecting the lands of the South from floods such as we had last year.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to appear discourteous to any gentleman, but it is very important we must get this bill through very soon, and to get it to the Senate as early as possible, and we hope to finish it this afternoon.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. These are the only five minutes I have consumed on this bill, and I thought the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana were important enough to justify the consumption of five minutes, which I did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak against the amendment. At this point, Mr Chairman, let us note that $30,000,000, in addition to what is already appropriated in this bill, is suggested by the amendment for the construction of levees along the Mississippi River, and it seems appropriate now to say one or two things that ought to be said with regard to the Mississippi River appropriation. I have a table of statistics here, prepared by Emory R. Johnson for the White House conference in 1907, showing just what has been spent on the rivers and harbors in this country since the first appropriation.

In that time, up to 1907, Congress had expended altogether a total of $552,000,000. I will put the accurate figures in the RECORD. On the Atlantic coast, since the year 1802, for all the great commerce of this country for more than 100 years, there was expended $141,000,000 of this total.

The statement of Prof. Johnson is as follows:

Congressional appropriations for the survey, improvement, and maintenance of harbors and waterways of the United States, by periods and divisions.

Division.	Date of earliest appropriation.	Appropriations.
		Total.	Up to and including 1890.	1891 to 1906, inclusive.	Mar. 2, 1907.
Atlantic coast	1802	$141,162,391	$56,448,541	$73,821,326	$10,892,524
Gulf of Mexico	1826	64,292,362	21,065,470	38,027,940	5,198,952
Pacific coast	1852	34,061,782	10,248,592	21,204,544	2,608,346
Great Lakes	1823	97,791,108	37,522,937	50,980,283	9,287,888
Mississippi Valley	1819	209,484,720	84,211,783	115,457,054	8,815,883
Lake Champlain	1836	1,347,910	1,133,660	211,750	2,500
General	1824	[1] 5,802,752	3,408,903	1,743,849	650,000
Total		[2] 552,943,025	214,039,886	301,447,046	37,456,093

[1] Includes general appropriation items for removal of wrecks, examinations, surveys, and contingencies which are not capable of being segregated according to divisions.

[2] Does not include appropriations for the following: California Débris Commission, Permanent International Commission of Congresses of Navigation, International Waterway Commission, improvement of harbors and waterways in insular possessions, prevention of deposits in New York Harbor, bridge construction.

Up to and including 1890 the congressional appropriations amounted to 38.7 per cent of the total shown in this table. From 1891 to 1906, inclusive, 54.5 per cent of the total was appropriated, while the rivers and harbors act of March 2, 1907, authorized the expenditure of 6.8 per cent. The waterways of the Mississippi Valley, including the Red River (of the North), have received 37.7 per cent of all congressional appropriations for the improvement and maintenance of harbors and waterways; the harbors and streams of the Atlantic coast, 25.5 per cent; those of the Great Lakes, 17.7 per cent; the Gulf of Mexico, including the delta and passes of the Mississippi, 11.6 per cent; the Pacific coast, 6.2 per cent; and Lake Champlain, two-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I regret I can not. I have not the time. The Gulf of Mexico received $64,000,000; the Pacific coast only $34,000,000; the Great Lakes $97,000,000; Lake Champlain a little over a million; miscellaneous about five millions; and Mississippi Valley $211,000,000. This out of the total of $552,000,000.

Now, since these figures were prepared and published, indicating the manner in which the money for rivers and harbors has been distributed for commerce and navigation in the country, statistics have been prepared by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress for the five years intervening between 1907 and 1912. In those five years Congress has expended, in addition to the $552,000,000 up to 1907, a total of $179,000,000.

Now, of that additional total of $179,000,000, the Pacific coast has received $19,000,000; the Atlantic seaboard, with its tremendous commerce, has received $50,000,000; and the Mississippi River, the Great Lakes, and the Gulf territory have taken $110,000,000. In this bill you have provided for the Missouri River legislation which will take $20,000,000 before you can complete the work or before you have proven that the work can be done. In this bill you have also a project for the improvement of the Mississippi River levees that will run up to $100,000,000 more. You also have inserted a provision for the Ohio River that will spell $63,000,000 before it is accomplished.

Now, while I am on this topic I want to say that the customs receipts of this country, which are not exclusive to the Atlantic seaboard, but which are representative of the business of the entire country, amounted to $311,000,000 for the year 1912, and of that total $265,000,000 came in substantially at four ports on the Atlantic seaboard that are here begging for improvements, while the rest of the country contributed of those customs revenues only $46,000,000. The Atlantic coast gets 25 per cent of the appropriations you make for the improvement of rivers, and on the Atlantic coast are held back other important projects that would prove to be revenue producers; and yet the Mississippi Valley in five years takes, out of a total of $179,000,000, $110,000,000. Still you put in the law a provision for a $100,000,000 Mississippi improvement, and gentlemen come in here for $30,000,000 more. It does not seem to me a reasonable or fair distribution of the revenues of this country.

Mr. MADDEN. Who consumes the merchandise on which the duties are paid at the port of New York?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The people.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; the people of the whole country. I just wanted to elicit that information from the gentleman by that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how much of the $265,000,000 collected at the four ports on the Atlantic seaboard is collected at Philadelphia. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much it is?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Twenty-one million dollars.

Mr. MANN. It was a very nice thing to say that $265,000,000 had been collected "at four ports."

Mr. Chairman, ever since I have served in this House alongside of my distinguished friend from Philadelphia I have recognized him as an exponent of the proposition that the Government ought to improve rivers and harbors. In fact, there was a time when I was led to believe that my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania was really trying to appropriate too much money for the improvement of rivers and harbors. But to-day my idol is shattered and falls to the ground.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania for the last two or three days, while this bill has been up for consideration, has done everything he could to prevent its passage, opposing various propositions that are in the bill, while assuming and assuring the House that he really was in favor of them. Think of my friend from Pennsylvania, whom we had placed upon a pedestal as being in the lead in the way of river and harbor improvement, now standing and fighting each of the items as they become a law. Why, I thought my friend from Pennsylvania was the president of half a dozen different associations designed to extract money out of the Treasury for the improvement of rivers and harbors. I have heard the gentleman time and again ask leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of inserting something in favor of great appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they have been denied.

Mr. MANN. Yet the gentleman is doing his best now to prevent the passage of this river and harbor bill in time for it to be considered at the other end of the Capitol so that it may become a law. I fear that in the future I may not be able blindly to follow my friend from Philadelphia along the lines in favor of river and harbor improvements, because I shall never know when he is going ahead and when he is backing up. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any funds which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated by Congress for improving the Mississippi River between the Head of Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees, may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for levees upon any part of said river between the Head of Passes and Rock Island, Ill.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve a point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will not the gentleman make it?

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] why there is an effort in this paragraph to place a limitation upon what future Congresses may do?

Mr. SPARKMAN. In what respect are we trying to do that?

Mr. FOWLER. This paragraph reads:

Any funds which have been or may hereafter be appropriated.

Mr. SPARKMAN. We wish to limit this appropriation and all other similar appropriations in so far as we can limit them to the purposes mentioned. Of course, I understand, and everyone else understands, that we can not limit the actions of future Congresses. Any other Congress, like this, can do as it pleases; but so far as future Congresses are concerned, we want to emphasize the fact that we do not desire to extend the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission over levees beyond the point where it now reaches or permit that commission to expend money on levees except for the purposes herein contemplated.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not strike out the words "or may hereafter be"?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Because the River and Harbor Committee thought those words should be in the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Have they been carried before?

Mr. SPARKMAN. They do no harm, and they may do some good. We think they serve a good purpose there.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. SPARKMAN. He has not made any point of order. He has simply reserved it.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. FOWLER. I was trying to get information from the chairman of the committee, to see whether the point of order should be made or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Regular order!

Mr. FOWLER. The point of order is that the words in line 1 appear to place a limitation upon the action of future Congresses, which I do not believe this House has the right to do.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the Chair rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph does, of course, extend the power of the Mississippi River Commission very much and takes in a considerable stretch of river which has not heretofore been under the jurisdiction of that commission.

When the Mississippi River Commission was created 30 years ago or more it was given jurisdiction from the mouth of the Ohio to the Head of Passes. This makes a very great departure. It extends its jurisdiction—and I really think there ought to be an explanation from the committee, to go into the RECORD, as to why that is done. It seems to me it would not be amiss to have a five-minute explanation, at least, of the reason for the extension of the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman had been present the other day during general debate on this bill, he would have heard as clear an explanation of that matter as I am capable of making. It was gone into quite fully then. But I will again briefly explain. There had been for some time quite a demand for the partial extension of the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission from Cape Girardeau up to Rock Island, so as to place that section of the river, in the matter of levee construction, on the same footing with that below, the claim being that there was no difference between the two sections in that particular, a claim which appeared to be well founded. So after considering the matter carefully the committee concluded to meet that demand, which it thought had considerable merit, by inserting this paragraph, which has the effect of thus extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission up to Rock Island, Ill., in so far as the construction of levees is concerned, but only in the interests of navigation, not for the purpose of protecting private property or anything of that kind, the committee considering any matter other than that of navigation foreign to the purposes of a river and harbor bill. It will be observed that the whole matter is left to the discretion of the Mississippi River Commission and the Chief of Engineers to say whether any expenditure is for the benefit of navigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph enlarges the power of the Mississippi River Commission. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] eulogizes that commission. I have no doubt but that they are high-minded, patriotic gentlemen, but I think if we had in our employ men who had spent as much money as these men have spent, or as has been spent under their direction, and secured so little benefit from the expenditure we would discharge them rather than enlarge their powers.

The trouble is these gentlemen are circumscribed in their efforts, cribbed and confined in their opportunities to do the right thing by reason of the fact that the gentlemen who are in control of these matters refuse to acknowledge the truth, and that is that we are protecting, and we desire to protect, private property. The commission is proceeding on the theory—and I use the word advisedly, because the gentleman from Louisiana used it when he said the appropriations were all on the theory that they aid navigation, and if they were not on that theory they would not be made, he said. Why, certainly not. What is the theory in face of an established policy which we have been following for years against which there is no opportunity for anyone to do more than protest, as I have been trying to do. My protest is not against the real object of the expenditure, but against the smug hypocrisy which refuses to acknowledge what we are attempting to do. It is that which makes the expenditure largely futile, because the commission can not recommend the expenditures in such a way as to make them really effective. They must pretend they aid navigation.

If they could recommend expenditures for levees, leaving such channels as would carry the floods of the river, then the expenditures would be of some permanent benefit. So far as aiding navigation, we all know that last year it cost about $30 a ton in expenditure for every ton of freight that went over certain reaches of the river. We all know that after the expenditure of over a hundred millions there is much less navigation on the river than there was years ago.

Now, gentlemen, let us acknowledge what we are doing and proposing to do. Acknowledge the national responsibility for the floods of the Mississippi River, for protecting property along the stream, and let us do it in an intelligent and effective way, and in doing it improve as much as we may the navigation of that great stream. So long as we continue to try to fool ourselves and the American people that we are building levees wholly in the interest of navigation we must so build them that they will have some appearance of being in the interest of navigation and, consequently, so build them in many instances, as the gentleman from Tennessee has just pointed out, that they do harm rather than good by confining the waters of the river in too narrow a channel. Let us so build them as to give free passage for floods, and thus effectually accomplish the protection of property and at the same time improve the river navigation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to appeal to my colleagues on this side of the House to give us an opportunity, in the interest of public business, to go forward with the consideration of this bill. [Applause.] We have 31 working days before the final adjournment of this Congress. There are 11 supply or appropriation bills. There are 4 of them that have not been reported to this House, and only 1 of the 11 has passed both Houses of Congress, and that bill has not so far received the approval of the President of the United States.

Here is a calendar with thirty-odd pages of general and private bills. More than 400 or 500 general and private bills and 11 supply bills of the Government awaiting us, and here we are killing time—making motions and objecting and wasting valuable time.

This bill is a meritorious measure. This great committee that has brought it in is deserving of commendation on both sides of this House. It is not deserving of the unjust criticisms that have been made. This bill is practically above criticism and condemnation. No appropriation committee in this House is hedged about with more safeguards in the interest of the legitimate expenditure of public moneys than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The chairman of it is a Member of long standing in this House, competent, worthy, and deserving the confidence of all his colleagues. The men who are associated with him in the preparation of this bill, Republicans and Democrats, have the interest of our country at heart. They have brought in for our consideration this measure which awaits our approval. Do not let us trifle away any more of the valuable time that belongs to the people of this great country. Here we have spent almost an entire afternoon on less than 3 pages of a great measure which runs into 60 pages. It is not creditable to the membership of this House. We can not change the paragraphs in this bill, for the Members are determined to sustain this committee, and I appeal to my Republican colleagues to let us proceed in an orderly and creditable manner, in the interest of the American Congress and to our own honor and credit. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to and including the mouth of the Missouri River: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $1,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I presume I am one of those gentlemen on this side who is subject to the strictures of my very good friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. I note with great concern how gentlemen sometimes get anxious toward the close of the day for the passage of an undigested bill that contains large appropriations for their benefit. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am surprised that a Democratic House should insist upon pushing through a measure carrying $40,000,000 without a fair opportunity to debate some new problems that are being injected into the legislation of the country through this measure. Surely my friend from Tennessee does not want us to pass through this bill and bind ourselves to a policy with regard to the construction and taking over of dams and the assignment of water-power rights? That is being done in this measure. Why not let us discuss it here? Surely my friend does not want to drive us incidentally into the business of building levees along great rivers without an opportunity to discuss whether or not we should embark upon so important a policy. That ought to be fairly considered as new matter in the House.

My friend from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], eloquent and forceful as he always is on these waterway propositions, has referred to the fact that the great national conventions have approved this levee system.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asserts that this bill has provisions in it for the purpose of taking over water-power rights and all that class of things. I would like to have him point out that provision.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go any further into a discussion of that than is warranted in the five minutes of time which I have.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I know of no such provision in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to say with reference to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], whom I highly respect as one of the most conscientious men in this House, that if he were to tell all he knows about the planks put into the platforms of my party and his party he would probably tell us a story that could be boiled down to the brain and ingenuity of one man. I am getting a little tired of planks in platforms, whether in the Democratic or Republican Parties, for too often they mean only what one man says.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has discussed the Mississippi River Commission. I grant that it is made up of strong and earnest men. It was created by act of Congress, June 28, 1879. They have been in business 34 years. Their business when created in 1879, with an appropriation of $175,000, was—

To direct and complete such survey of said river between the Head of Passes, near its mouth, to its headwaters as may now be in progress, and to make such additional surveys—

And so forth.

That identical language is given in this bill as an excuse for their expenditure of over $9,000,000 this coming year. When is the work of the Mississippi River Commission to cease? They have been at it since 1879. They have been working on this river—which only five years ago, when the engineers were forced to report upon the commerce of the stream, had but 4,300,000 tons of commerce, or one-sixth of the commerce upon the 60 miles of the Delaware River alone; and yet gentlemen resist our right to speak of these things when amendments are being brought in adding $30,000,000 more to $100,000,000 contemplated to be expended by this commission. Take it out of this bill; put the Mississippi River Commission on a basis of its own. Treat that problem apart from commerce and navigation, because it does not concern it, and make it what it is. Do what the gentleman from Wyoming suggests—make this a separate service, and attend to it as it should be attended to, and let commerce and navigation have the benefit of these appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Osage River, Mo.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $15,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to talk about the Gasconade and Osage in disparagement; they are down there in Missouri, where I lived as a boy. I am kindly disposed to the people who occupy that territory in their desire to secure appropriations. I find from the report of the engineers on the Osage—it is about the same on the Gasconade—we have spent very large sums on both rivers:

The original condition was one of alternate pools and shoals, with snags and overhanging trees. The first project or plan was general in its nature—

It certainly had to be general.

The first appropriation was made in 1871, and no estimate of cost or time limit was adopted.

There has been no time limit; they have kept it up ever since.

The removal of obstructions under this plan contemplates maintenance—

Certainly we must maintain these improvements, because the people have no use for them in navigation, and otherwise they would go to destruction.

The obstructions will form anew, and while the cross and wing dams have a degree of permanency, they must receive frequent repair and extension to keep up their efficiency.

However, by the expenditure of, I think, a little less than $1,000,000 on this beautiful little stream, the Osage, they have accomplished this result:

The result of the expenditure has been to increase the depth over the shoals, remove obstructions, and keep open navigation—

Not that there is any to keep open. [Laughter.]

The least depth at low water over shoals is 1½ to 2 feet, while in the pools the depth ranges from 5 to 15 feet.

There are some beautiful swimming holes down on the Osage [laughter and applause] and the Gasconade, and long may they be a delight to boyhood, as they were to me and my companions in my early days down there in Missouri. While these improvements can be of no special aid to commerce, I hope they will not destroy the swimming holes. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Coos Bay, Oreg.: For maintenance of the completed channels in Coos Bay and equipping and operating the bar dredge heretofore authorized, $80,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, at the end of line 21, insert the following:

"And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to use any additional money that may be placed at his disposal by the board of Coos Bay or by any other organization or individuals for the improvement of the inner harbor of Coos Bay, and the said Secretary is also authorized, in his discretion, to use any Government plant available in connection therewith at such times as it may not be needed and employed on other work authorized by Congress."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors, for which there may be no special appropriation, the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made: Provided further, That after the regular or formal reports made as required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed are submitted no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless ordered by a concurrent resolution of Congress: And provided further, That the Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until funds for the commencement of the proposed work shall have been actually appropriated by law.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 44, section 2, line 17, after the word "appropriated," add the following: "of which sum $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is to be used to protect the caving banks of Red River at Coushatta, La."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like at least an opportunity of explaining the situation which prevails there before the vote is taken. The situation is the same as it was or is at Pine Bluff, Ark., for which there is an appropriation on page 20 in the amount of $48,000, part of which is to protect the caving banks at Pine Bluff. The town of Coushatta is situated on the Red River, La. The banks have been caving there and are liable at any time in the night to go into the river. A surveyor went there, Capt. Smith, some time ago, and his report is in, and I suppose the committee has had access to it, because I filed a bill here (H. R. 27204) in which I asked that Coushatta be protected from the caving banks. Capt. Smith was to be at Coushatta at some time, but the citizens did not know at what time he was to come. He was sent there by the War Department—by the Chief of Engineers. He got there in the night, the train being late—about 2 o'clock in the morning. When he got to Coushatta he was not met by anyone and did not know where the hotel was, so he states he spent the time from the time he arrived there at 2 o'clock in the morning on the store galleries waiting to see some one to tell him where the hotel was. He was to leave early in the morning. He met the mayor of the town, and he went and looked at the caving banks, and his report, on a casual examination and opinion, was that the town will not be destroyed by this caving bank; but if it should be, that it will not be in the interest of navigation to remedy the trouble.

The situation there is identical with that at Pine Bluff. It may be, and in all possibility is, a fact that navigation will not be seriously injured, or, at least, not be destroyed by the caving in of these banks at Coushatta. But since Capt. Smith's report was made a large part of the town has gone into the river. Several houses have caved into the river. The district attorney's residence, one of the handsomest in the town, has had to be removed recently, as well as the Baptist Church. The House of the superintendent of education and the mayor's house will have to be moved soon. The people are watching the river, and the Army engineer is making a report that it is not in the interests of navigation and commerce that relief be had. There is a brick store on the bank of the river which it appears will cave in in a short time if this relief is not granted. It is supposed that in the neighborhood of $20,000 to $40,000 is needed to protect the situation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. He asked that $40,000 be diverted——

Mr. WATKINS. Or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Has the gentleman any information at all as to what will be necessary?

Mr. WATKINS. The engineer's report stated that it would take 20 cents a foot, and he was not certain as to the exact distance up and down the river, but that at the utmost it would not take more than $40,000, and probably that $20,000 would afford relief.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I will.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I understand the engineer's report on that is that it would not help commerce and navigation at all, but simply protect the property, and that the rule of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is that no business will be considered except that which protects commerce and navigation?

Mr. WATKINS. But there was the same condition at Pine Bluff.

Mr. CALLAWAY. That was prior to the time this great committee had this salutary rule that we should not spend money except for commerce and navigation.

Mr. WATKINS. All of us joined, and were glad to join, last spring in voting to contribute millions of dollars to protect the sufferers from overflow of the levees on the Mississippi River.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But that is the only time this great committee has ever violated this salutary rule, is it not?

Mr. WATKINS. I think not; no.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I want to find out about this thing. Is not that the only time this great committee ever departed from this salutary rule?

Mr. WATKINS. I think not. My impression is that in the State of Louisiana, the city of Alexandria, the same proposition was favorably acted on and relief was granted.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Your opinion is that they never have regarded the rule at all except when it suited the interested parties backing the bills?

Mr. WATKINS. I say as a general rule it is a safe one. But there are exceptions. Here we find a whole town tumbling into the river, and people are at the mercy of the engineers, because they decide that under the technicalities it would not affect commerce and navigation. The banks at Coushatta are caving in, and when those banks are caved in the river will be diverted and the navigation will be very seriously injured, if not destroyed, at that point.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Was not the objection the committee made in considering the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that it did not affect commerce and navigation? Were you in here when the committee turned down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] saying that private property there was being injured by the levee? He needed help to protect this private property, the electric-light plant, and so forth.

Mr. WATKINS. I was here at the time and heard the argument, and was present during the vote; but the committee voted that proposition down. As to why they did I am not prepared to say.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You do not think the reason given by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] was the real reason for the committee's action at all?

Mr. WATKINS. I am not responsible for the reason that each member of the committee had for voting. Personally, I did not vote on it at all.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The thing I am trying to get at is the rule on which this committee acts in shoveling out this forty millions of public money. I would like to find some man to give a rule by which they appropriate it. The members of this committee have been told that their pretensions were hypocritical, and they sit as silent as the tomb and make no reply, but the grim determination on their faces shows they intend passing this bill just as it comes from the committee. They have adjusted the balances. Each has got his share in the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] gives two good reasons why his amendment should not be adopted. In the first place he admits there is no project for it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What does the gentleman call a "project"?

Mr. SPARKMAN. "A project" is a plan for an improvement with estimates furnished by the engineers, so as to advise Congress just what the proposition is likely to cost, with a recommendation at least by the Chief of Engineers that the work be undertaken. That is to say——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman mean to say——

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman wants an answer, he should let me finish the sentence. If he does not want an answer, all right.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Let me proceed slowly, so that I can digest it. Does the gentleman mean to say that he has an engineer located at each point, who makes a report showing what it will cost the Government to complete each project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is what I mean to say.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman mean to say he has got that all in this little committee report—all the information he proposes to give to the House in justification of the expenditure of $40,000,000?

Mr. SPARKMAN. My eyes are not good enough at this distance to enable me to identify what the gentleman holds in his hand, but if it is the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of course it does not contain all of those things. The gentleman would find most of them, however, in a volume of this size, a volume such as I am now exhibiting, but of course not all of them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The House has not got that. The House is not in possession of the reasons why the committee is acting in this way, advising the House to spend $40,000,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman will exercise the power which his commission as a Representative in Congress gives him, and will go out to the document room yonder, he can procure this document, and then, if he is industrious enough, as I presume he is, and patriotic enough, as I assume he is, he will read and digest all those things, and in that way he may become possessed of the desired information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding——

The CHAIRMAN. A proposition to amend the amendment has already been made.

Mr. FOWLER. By adding the following:

And the falling banks of the Wabash River at Maunie, Ill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment already pending. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] offers an amendment in the third degree, which is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana. That amendment to the amendment is to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, there was no point of order made against my amendment to the amendment by any gentleman on the floor of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware of that, but that is the rule of the House. An amendment in the third degree can not be entertained. The Chair is simply enforcing the rule.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it true, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment can not be offered to the amendment which is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment pending to the original proposition, and there is an amendment to that pending. That is all that can be entertained by the House at once.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not understand, Mr. Chairman, that there was an amendment to the amendment pending——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken——

Mr. FOWLER (continuing). Which was a pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. And that was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the amendment was to strike out the paragraph, and that was not withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following: "And the falling banks of the Wabash at Maunie, Ill."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be heard if he desires.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the falling of the banks or the caving of the banks at Maunie, Ill., has been going on for a number of years to such an extent that they are filling up the channel of that river, which is one of the greatest rivers in the Mississippi River system. A few thousand dollars could be well expended there, the same as in the case of the gentleman who offered the original amendment, as I understand, and it would relieve the situation and thereby give a better chance for navigation.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this committee is made up of a number of the wisest men in this Congress. [Applause.] I have great respect for the opinion of that committee and of each member thereof, and I believe that they have sought to give justice to every proposition which has come before them. But I believe that there are propositions which are not provided for in this bill which are just as meritorious as some of those which have been provided for. I understand that the river provided for in the original amendment as well as the river whose navigation I have offered to protect by my amendment to his amendment is of such high importance that it demands the attention of Congress, in order that navigation may be properly protected. I trust that my amendment to the amendment may carry and that the original amendment as amended may then carry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys to be made at the following-named localities, and a sufficient sum to pay the cost thereof may be allotted from the amount provided in this section.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee with reference to these reports of the Army engineers, which he has told me I can look to for information. Is that where the chairman gets his information on which he bases these bills, and is that where the committee get their information on which they pass these bills appropriating millions and millions of the people's money?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am glad to answer that question and to say that we get a great deal of the information, perhaps the most of it, through the reports of the engineers. In addition to that, when we can visit localities and talk with individuals, we obtain some information in that way. Often we have an engineer before us, either a district or a division engineer, but more frequently either the chief or one of his assistants. We glean a good deal of information from them, and also some from the hearings, from questioning persons who come before the River and Harbor Committee. Often we have hearings, and we listen very patiently to those who come before us, the desire always being to get all the information that we can possibly gain upon these important subjects.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to know where this information came from, because I am on an investigating committee whose duty it has been to look into some of the reports of these engineers and the expenditures made on their reports. I went down to Phoenix, Ariz., where this House had appropriated $540,000 on the report of the engineer at the head of the Indian Bureau. I want to give the House this information, in order that they may know how much the reports of some engineers are worth. We went down there to look at the outlay of $540,000 made by this House on an irrigation project for the Pima Indians over the repeated protests of the Indians themselves and found that it was not worth a cent on earth. It was made, presumably, for the benefit of the Pima Indians, and it is not worth a cent to them, to the people of Arizona, nor to anybody in God's world. Yet this House appropriated $540,000 on the advice of W. H. Code, one of these Government engineers.

I want to call the attention of the House to another investigation that was made by the Insular Affairs Committee with reference to an outlay on a road 10 miles long, based on a report of Army engineers, in the Philippine Islands. That road ran from Manila up to Bagio. Some said it was 10 miles long and some said it was 12. These Army engineers estimated it would cost $75,000. It did cost $3,000,000, stayed there four and one-half years, was washed away, and Gen. Edwards, before the committee, said it was not worth rebuilding. After this experience with Army engineers' reports and reclamation engineers' reports and Indian Bureau engineers' reports, and seeing how absolutely worthless they are, I have got no kind of confidence in these engineers' reports; and I have no confidence in the bills brought into this House by committees based on such reports. They ought to be kicked out through the ceiling.

I have found another thing, Mr. Chairman, that when we call these people before the committee to find out what they base their estimates on we have to corkscrew everything out of them as we would a criminal on the stand testifying in his own behalf. So far as I am concerned, I will never vote to appropriate a dollar unless the men who bring in the bills here can give to this House some definite and accurate information on which to base the appropriation. We know that this river and harbor proposition is a hoax and an extravagant waste of the people's money.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. What particular project does the gentleman want information about?

Mr. CALLAWAY. I do not want information about any particular project. We have had a whole lot of gush about the Mississippi River and levees built on each side to improve navigation and to benefit commerce, and there is not a 10-year old schoolboy in the country that does not know that it is all rot.

Mr. EDWARDS. Referring to the gentleman's inquiry about matters in the report, I have three volumes of the engineers' report——

Mr. CALLAWAY. If the gentleman had a hundred volumes, and they were engineers' reports, they would not be worth a cent to me, with my experience with engineers' reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boston Harbor, Mass., with a view to securing increased width and depth of channel from Mystic River to President Roads.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what this item contemplates.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can answer the gentleman. We are just completing in Boston Harbor a 35-foot channel from the Charlestown Navy Yard to President Roads and then to the sea. At the suggestion of the engineers a survey was included in the last bill looking for an increased depth from the roads to the outer harbor, because in a severe storm, when the 35-foot channel is complete, they will not actually have the use of the entire 35 feet. The survey was ordered and no report was made, but it has been suggested that it would be well to have the report also from President Roads to the navy yard.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the depth?

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is no stipulation as to the depth, but it is left to the engineers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. New York has 40 feet, Baltimore has 35 feet, and it has been reported that Boston is moving to obtain a 40-foot channel, and I wanted to know if this survey was in contemplation of that?

Mr. LAWRENCE. We hope to get a favorable report on a project for 40 feet, but we do not limit the engineers to that, but give them discretion to report on any additional depth they see fit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Boston, then, wants more than 35 feet?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Boston does; yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Connecticut River from Hartford, Conn., to Holyoke, Mass.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I trust this provision for a survey of the Connecticut River between Hartford and Holyoke will be approved by the House. Members will doubtless be surprised to find that another survey is desired, for I doubt if there is any similar length of river in the United States on which so much money has been expended for surveys, and yet there has been so far hardly any appropriation for the improvement of navigation, and I did not suppose that any further survey would ever be necessary. The previous surveys have all originated with the Congressman, but the need of this survey was brought to my attention by the engineers of the War Department. They said that the outlook seemed favorable for legislation this winter which would finally insure the long-awaited navigation by the charter of a power company which would build the dam and the lock, and that in connection with the plans of that company, and to adapt the Government dredging thereto, some supplementary investigation was necessary, and it is to supply that and bring the Government plans into conformity with this new enterprise that this survey is necessary.

I hope it will be adopted by the House and that the expectation of the War Department will be realized, and that this Congress will enact the bill now pending which will open to navigation this river.

The Clerk read as follows:

New York Harbor, N. Y., with a view to securing additional width in Bay Ridge and Red Hook Channels.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 46, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:
"Plattsburg Harbor and vicinity on Lake Champlain: For the deep-water connections with suitable terminals that are to be established at Plattsburg, N. Y., in connection with the New York State Barge Canal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Broadkill River, Del.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, on page 46, after line 24, the words "Frankford Creek, Pa."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, after line 24, insert "Frankford Creek, Pa."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I submit that that should go in for a survey, because it is a creek that does an international business. The engineers have found on several occasions that it was worthy of improvement, but have held that inasmuch as it is within the municipality of Philadelphia the city should pay for the improvement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. When was the last survey?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In 1911.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. So the survey was ordered in 1911 and a report has been made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been made to the effect that commercially it was worthy and commendable, but owing to the fact that it was within the limits of the municipality it ought not to be included in a Federal bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Have the conditions changed any since then?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To this extent: An effort was made by the War Department to obtain an appropriation of $15,000 in the last sundry civil bill in order to make the improvement with a view to reaching the Frankford Arsenal, which employs a great many hands and from which the Government makes shipments of a large amount of goods.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The conditions are the same as they were a year ago. Congress ordered a survey a year ago, and the engineers made an investigation and made their report. What further could the engineers do if a survey was ordered in this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman very frankly that the engineers did what precedent evidently required them to do, but in bringing the matter up before the House a little while ago I learned from the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that if this matter were brought up again it would have fair consideration. I think there is no question about the merits. It is simply a question whether, in view of the fact that you admit surveys of other streams that bisect cities, you will now admit Frankford Creek and the Schuylkill River on the same ground.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must admit that that is a matter for Congress to pass upon with the light that is now before us. There is no occasion to send this back to the engineers and put the Government to the expense of having the engineers make an investigation which they have just made in order to report to Congress the facts they have already reported to Congress. If Congress wants to put the creek on the bill with an appropriation, Congress is in a position to do that now. We have all of the information that the engineers can give us, and I submit to the gentleman it is an utterly useless waste of money, and the gentleman has made some remarks upon the waste of the public moneys.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not said anything about the waste of public moneys. Somebody else used those words.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I submit it would be an utter waste of the public funds to call for a survey when we have just had one, and I submit to the gentleman that the thing to do is to ask Congress to appropriate for this creek and not ask for an additional survey. We have all the information necessary, and all we have to do now is to put the matter on the bill for appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I urge the passage of the amendment, which is entirely meritorious.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I want to make this statement: That if we do this we will be discriminating in favor of this creek.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 3, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, after line 24, insert:
"The Schuylkill River, Pa."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 1, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 2, after the word "Delaware," add:
"With a view to removing shoals by dredging."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like the committee to carefully consider this amendment. I understand the Delaware River question fairly well, and believe the amendment the best thing possible for the interests which I in part represent. The Delaware River has been impeded from time to time, and the admission is just made here on this floor that Boston, a city one-third the size in population of Philadelphia, is now advancing to the 40-foot-channel stage, which New York already has. The Delaware River is being held down to the present depth of 30 feet, with a limited appropriation in this bill for 35 feet, which may continue for 10 years.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield now. It is all a part of an unfortunate system of postponement for the Delaware River; whether suggested by large interests or railroad competition, which sometimes is referred to by the Representatives of "the real people" upon this floor, I do not know; but five or six years ago there was injected into this bill a provision for a harbor of refuge at Cold Spring Inlet, N. J., 14 miles around from the Delaware Breakwater, and after a debate, which was in some respects sensational, Congress voted to build this harbor of refuge 14 miles away in spite of the great Delaware Bay, which is a natural harbor of refuge for vessels in distress at sea. Gentlemen on this committee in eloquent periods had the vessels turned out of the Delaware Breakwater by ice, all in defense of a proposition that a million and a quarter of dollars be expended around the corner to make a pinhole in the ocean.

Your Cold Spring Inlet has been built. It has retarded the progress of the Delaware River for five years. You spent a million and a quarter in the sands. Now, I want to know what you are going to do with the construction of the breakwater and the institution of a survey which means another expenditure of perhaps a million dollars to connect up the existing breakwater and ice breaks with the land and increase the shoals in that harbor of refuge.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman state what particular item he is speaking to?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am speaking of the Cold Spring Inlet.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. At Cape May?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. It may be of some interest to construction companies and of some interest to railroads more than it is to navigation on the Atlantic seaboard. It is one instance of real waste about which we may comment, if you please.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman was in Congress at the time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was, and opposed to Cold Spring Inlet.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not yet. I have offered an amendment here which proposes to be of service to the Delaware River. It is that inasmuch as shoals have grown up in the harbor of refuge at the Delaware Breakwater and around the breakwater you shall survey for an estimated cost of dredging out the shoals. If you do that I am satisfied, but I have before me a petition which was circulated in the district I represent where the large shipping interests are, where pilots and masters of vessels are, and it is so skillfully drawn that it looks as if some expert had prepared it in the interest of construction companies. It asks people to sign for a project connecting the northern end of the existing breakwater with the Delaware shore by joining up the ice piers and the construction of additional breakwaters.

To do a thing like that now would simply mean another holdup on channel appropriations; it would mean that some construction company would take your money and do a useless thing. If you pass my amendment, you will do something that the shipping interests would really like to have done. They want the breakwater harbor dredged.

Mr. BURGESS. Will the gentleman state his amendment again? I did not understand it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My amendment is that this survey shall be limited to an estimate for the removal of shoals by dredging.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago a proposition was brought into this House for the improvement of Cold Spring Inlet, Cape May. Innuendoes, insinuations such as we have just heard, were put forth then by certain gentlemen who love to exploit themselves and their honesty in the newspapers [applause], and it was charged that a job was being put up by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the improvement proposed at Cape May. A number of gentlemen had much to say in the public press at the time. When the bill came before the House, in order that no gentleman might be able to say the next morning in the headlines that it was slipped through Congress, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors himself, when that item was reached, rose and addressed the Chair and announced to all the House, including the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, that "We have now reached the item which has been so severely criticized in the papers, and if any gentleman on the floor now wishes to strike that item from the bill let him arise in his place and make the motion and we are ready to debate it."

Mr. Chairman, it was then up to all gentleman who believed the slander that had been circulated about the Rivers and Harbors Committee to speak or forever after hold their peace, but when that proposition was offered on the floor the gentleman from Pennsylvania failed to rise and meet that challenge. I was on the subcommittee that reported the Cape May proposition to the full committee. I was on the committee that reported it to the House. I was on this floor ready then to debate it with any gentleman who chose to strike it from the bill, but nobody made such an offer. If it was a job, it was the duty of every Member who so believed to stand in his place and make the motion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he was here at the time. Where was he upon that occasion?

Where, where was Roderick then?
One blast upon his bugle horn
Were worth a thousand men.

But he failed to toot his horn. [Laughter and applause.]

[Mr. MURRAY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts has barked up the wrong tree. I made no reflection upon his city whatever. I stated what is the fact, that we had three times the population in Philadelphia that they have in Boston. No one has heralded more than I have the virtues of that great city; no one has preached more the municipal liberality of Boston in regard to this $9,000,000 appropriation for the improvement of its own harbor than I have, and no one here has preached more the deplorable condition of Boston and New England in regard to transportation, in view of the fact that the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the most acute body of commercial men in this country, admits that it pays $70,000,000 per annum to get $30,000,000 worth of coal.

Mr. MURRAY. Why do you protest against the 40-foot channel?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say that if Boston gets a 40-foot channel and Philadelphia is held to 30, that Philadelphia ought to get a move on.

Mr. MURRAY. It ought to get some commerce before it tries to do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not second to Boston in that respect. The gentleman entirely understands me. As to the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE] makes a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOEHNE. Are we discussing the river and harbor bill or are we discussing a fuss between Boston and Philadelphia? I think it about time that we were getting down to busniess.

Mr. MURRAY. I was trying to discuss the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have three minutes in which to reply to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has not yet expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit to my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] that what he states about my being in Congress when the Cold Spring Inlet improvement was authorized is true. I was here, a brand-new man, coming down from the country, as it were, and meeting the great representatives of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for the first time. I had gone to the members of that committee and submitted my complaint to them. I had indicated to at least some of the leaders that the Cold Spring Inlet proposition was not good, and did not have the real sympathy of the shipping interests of the city of Philadelphia, and that it was in opposition to the Delaware River proposition.

I remember the occasion when that committee brought in its bill just as well as if it were yesterday, so firmly is that theatrical scene impressed upon my memory. The galleries were full to the utmost tier, and the Members of the House were all present, keenly interested in the 500 separate items contained in the bill for every one of the 47 States of the Union. Every man was insistent that the bill should go through, with no opportunity for discussion. The philosophic and eloquent chairman of that committee, one of the most powerful and forceful men who ever sat in this House, rose, and after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] had told of the building lots to be sold at Cold Spring Inlet dramatically inquired, "Is there any man on that side [indicating] or is there any man on this side [indicating] who is opposed to it?" And I, a young and innocent and diffident Member from bucolic Philadelphia [laughter], did not have the courage or the self-possession to rise up and object. But as time went on apace and I learned to know intimately and to love these distinguished members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I have taken occasion to interrupt my friends at times, even though it might test the temper of some. And even in this instance have risen in my place to make some slight objections to their bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, while we are on the subject I feel it would be well for me to say a word or two as to the Delaware Breakwater proposition, for which we have asked a survey. I would state to the members of the committee that I have received petitions from various public bodies urging the adoption of the project which was approved by the engineers several years ago.

Inasmuch as the recommendation of the engineers was of some years' standing, the committee deemed it advisable to have a new survey, and this is the cause, or, rather, the direct occasion, for the tempest to which we have just listened.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that my distinguished colleague from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE] was for several years regarded in that great city as the chief exponent of waterway matters. Since I have come here there has been a division of responsibility on that subject, with the result that quite a large number of the people of our city look to me to do some little things. [Laughter.] Some are so unkind as to say of my distinguished colleague that he is a little jealous. I should not think so at all. He is too big a man to be jealous. He would not claim credit for anything that he does not do himself. I am sure of that. And in that connection I will ask the Clerk to read this particular news item about which my colleague from Philadelphia, I believe, knows something.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MOORE WINS FIGHT FOR NEW WATERWAY—NORFOLK-BEAUFORT LINK APPROPRIATION IS INCLUDED IN RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL.

[Special to the Inquirer.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1912.

The rivers and harbors bill was again up for discussion in the House to-day, and at the instance of Representative J. HAMPTON MOORE, of Philadelphia, the Philadelphia items which were temporarily laid aside on Tuesday were again postponed in order that the Norfolk-Beaufort link of the inland waterway might be taken up. After a lively fight, headed by Congressman SMALL, of North Carolina, backed up by Mr. MOORE, the item remained in the bill. It was objected to by Mr. FOSTER, of Illinois, and others, which brought on a lively discussion, in which Mr. MOORE took an active part in the interest of eastern waterways.

Mr. MOORE instanced one of many western rivers which he said was 500 miles long and for which appropriations of over $2,000,000 had been obtained since 1874. "The commerce on this stream," said Mr. MOORE, "for 22 years was 57,000 tons."

"And yet you are objecting to an $800,000 appropriation for a waterway on the eastern coast involving the tremendous overflow of congested cities while asking for and obtaining appropriations of $2,000,000 on one of the many streams of this kind. In this bill are contained items amounting to more than $8,500,000 for the Mississippi River."

It is expected that the Delaware River item will be reached to-morrow, the House adjourning at 6 o'clock, when Mr. MOORE made a point of no quorum.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, the fight that my colleague [Mr. MOORE] won the other day in this House was really won in the committee more than a year ago by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] and the other members of that committee. [Laughter.] This bill provides a liberal appropriation for the canal project in question, and my friend has had sufficient experience here to know that there was no danger of it being knocked out by an amendment.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman does not mean to leave the impression that the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE] is guilty of having palmed off this misrepresentation on the country?

Mr. DONOHOE. I ask the gentleman to deny it if he did not do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman would like to know whether I wrote those headlines I would say "no."

Mr. DONOHOE. The article?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. I did not write the article. Will the gentleman consent to my having a moment or two after he has concluded his remarks?

Mr. DONOHOE. I surely will if I can have a little more time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not control the time.

Mr. DONOHOE. Now, Mr. Chairman, my good friend has not denied that he is the author of that article.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I beg the gentleman's pardon I have denied it in toto.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] has expired.

Mr. DONOHOE. I ask for additional time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes in which to explain this painful situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask how much more time will be wanted on both sides. We had an understanding that we would not run until half past 6.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will gladly divide my time with my friend.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am loath to object to this discussion or any discussion between these gentlemen, but we must make headway, and I would suggest to both of these gentlemen that when we return to the Delaware item later, where the appropriation is made, then each of them can have an opportunity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Florida will permit the gentleman from Philadelphia to go on now, he will save time on the Philadelphia item. I do not want to discuss it very long, but I really would like a little time now.

Mr. SPARKMAN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. MANN. Can we not have an understanding about the length of time to be spent on this item, and then that the committee shall rise?

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent has been asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to see if we can not fix a limit to this.

Mr. DONOHOE. I should like five minutes.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] desire?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like eight minutes.

Mr. DONOHOE. Then I should have eight minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania on my left [Mr. DONOHOE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania on my right [Mr. MOORE] each have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania have five minutes each. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, my good friend and colleague [Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania] has made repeated attempts of late to show that the appropriation provided in this bill for the improvement of the Delaware River is inadequate, and that he has discovered a "joker" in the bill, inasmuch as the period covered by these appropriations is unusually long. I want to ask the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee a few questions in that connection: First, are the appropriations in this bill to cover a longer period than was covered by the appropriations in the bill of 1911?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The estimates of the engineers, which were followed here, were intended to cover and do cover a period of about 16 months.

Mr. DONOHOE. And that was so in the bill of 1911?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; in 1911 that was so.

Mr. DONOHOE. Is the sum covered in this bill for the improvement and maintenance of the Delaware 35-foot project the full amount asked by the engineer?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The entire amount; yes.

Mr. DONOHOE. It would be inaccurate for anyone to say that the sum was inadequate, then, since the Government engineers say it is all that can profitably be expended until June 30, 1914?

Mr. SPARKMAN. The engineers do not say it is inadequate, and our committee were of the opinion that it is adequate.

Mr. DONOHOE. Has any river and harbor bill in the last 10 or 12 years carried as large an amount for this purpose?

Mr. SPARKMAN. This is the largest appropriation for this purpose that I know anything about.

Mr. DONOHOE. I send to the Clerk's desk an editorial from one of the great Philadelphia papers commenting upon my work here. That editorial results from statements furnished to the several Philadelphia newspapers by my kind friend [Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania].

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

AND WHERE IS MICHAEL DONOHOE?

So it seems that Philadelphia has been badly treated in the matter of appropriations for the Delaware River. The House Committee on Appropriations can find money in plenty for every other project that anybody may see fit to mention. The Mississippi River, with no commerce to speak of, can come in for tremendous sums. Mud flats can claim their "pork." But the great Delaware River, with its already big commerce—the Delaware River which needs only fair treatment to enable it to increase tremendously its payments to the United States Treasury through customs duties—is slighted.

An appropriation of $1,700,000 looked fairly well on paper, but when Representative MOORE drew the confession of the committee that $400,000 was to go for maintenance and that the remainder would be stretched over 16 months instead of over 12, it was found that the appropriation for the year available for practical work had been reduced to a beggarly $1,000,000.

At that rate of progress we should be digging the channel 10 years from now, whereas we ought to have the 35 feet in half that time.

It is a serious disappointment that the Democratic committee has given us. And where, it might be asked, is the Hon. MICHAEL DONOHOE in hiding? For surely this gallant statesman of the Democratic faith, chosen from a Philadelphia district because of his supposedly vast influence with his fellow Democrats, can not be "on the job."

Mr. DONOHOE. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is a very illuminating editorial from a great daily which circulates among a million and a half of people. It is the result of inaccurate information furnished the newspapers by a Member of this House, that the Delaware River was getting a smaller appropriation than it ought to get, and various other statements that are not true. I am glad to be able to convince the Members present—and I trust it will reach Philadelphia in the course of time—that the Delaware River is being well taken care of this year; that in this Congress, in this Democratic House, the appropriations for the improvement of that worthy project will amount to $3,750,000 before March 4, whereas the total sum appropriated for the six years before I was elected to Congress amounted to only $3,900,000. In other words, this Democratic House has given almost as much in two years as the Republican Houses gave for that improvement at Philadelphia in six years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But the serious part of it all is this: Members may smile and pretend to be good fellows, but cold statements reach a multitude at home, and I consider it manifestly unjust for any Member of this House to lower himself to the point of giving misstatements to the press that will reflect upon the work of any other Member. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The only extension of these remarks that I desire to make at this time is to quote the words uttered by two distinguished Republican Members while the bill was under consideration on last Saturday. Mr. MANN, the worthy leader of the minority, said:

Mr. Chairman, ever since I have served in this House alongside of my distinguished friend from Philadelphia I have recognized him as an exponent of the proposition that the Government ought to improve rivers and harbors. In fact, there was a time when I was led to believe that my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania was really trying to appropriate too much money for the improvement of rivers and harbors. But to-day my idol is shattered and falls to the ground.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania for the last two or three days, while this bill has been up for consideration, has done everything he could to prevent its passage, opposing various propositions that are in the bill, while assuming and assuring the House that he really was in favor of them. Think of my friend from Pennsylvania, whom we had placed upon a pedestal as being in the lead in the way of river and harbor improvement, now standing and fighting each of the items as they become a law. Why, I thought my friend from Pennsylvania was the president of half a dozen different associations designed to extract money out of the Treasury for the improvement of rivers and harbors. I have heard the gentleman time and again ask leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of inserting something in favor of great appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they have been denied.

Mr. MANN. Yet the gentleman is doing his best now to prevent the passage of this river and harbor bill in time for it to be considered at the other end of the Capitol so that it may become a law. I fear that in the future I may not be able blindly to follow my friend from Philadelphia along the lines in favor of river and harbor improvements, because I shall never know when he is going ahead and when he is backing up. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN, one of the ablest and most painstaking Members on his side of the House, said:

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to appeal to my colleagues on this side of the House to give us an opportunity, in the interest of public business, to go forward with the consideration of this bill. [Applause.] We have 31 working days before the final adjournment of this Congress. There are 11 supply or appropriation bills. There are 4 of them that have not been reported to this House, and only 1 of the 11 has passed both Houses of Congress, and that bill has not so far received the approval of the President of the United States.

Here is a calendar with thirty-odd pages of general and private bills. More than 400 or 500 general and private bills and 11 supply bills of the Government awaiting us, and here we are killing time—making motions and objecting and wasting valuable time.

This bill is a meritorious measure. This great committee that has brought it in is deserving of commendation on both sides of this House. It is not deserving of the unjust criticisms that have been made. This bill is practically above criticism and condemnation. No appropriation committee in this House is hedged about with more safeguards in the interest of the legitimate expenditure of public moneys than the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The chairman of it is a Member of long standing in this House, competent, worthy, and deserving the confidence of all his colleagues. The men who are associated with him in the preparation of this bill, Republicans and Democrats, have the interest of our country at heart. They have brought in for our consideration this measure which awaits our approval. Do not let us trifle away any more of the valuable time that belongs to the people of this great country. Here we have spent almost an entire afternoon on less than 3 pages of a great measure which runs into 60 pages. It is not creditable to the membership of this House. We can not change the paragraphs in this bill, for the Members are determined to sustain this committee, and I appeal to my Republican colleagues to let us proceed in an orderly and creditable manner, in the interest of the American Congress and to our own honor and credit. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I must bear up under the hallucinations of my friend, who seems to lie awake nights thinking of things to send the newspapers. I have been accustomed to this since he has arrived in the House, and I observe that when correspondents are outside he is busy going and coming. I do not think I have a monopoly of the business of getting my name in the newspaper, as I shall submit. Indeed, I have given points to the gentleman from the fifth district, which he has not been slow to accept. The gentleman is busy, as I observe, and is encouraging others to help him in the good work he undertakes to do. I hold in my hand a letter which I would like to have the Clerk read. It is addressed to one of my constituents, but how it got into my district I do not know.

The Clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 2, 1913.

——— ———, Philadelphia, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: Having been so decidedly successful in my recent election to represent the fifth district of Pennsylvania in the Sixty-third session of Congress of the United States, and having been so exceptionally successful at the last session in securing the largest appropriation ever known for the betterment of the Delaware River from Philadelphia to the ocean, it has been determined that I still further endeavor to have an appropriation for the improvement of the present incomplete harbor of refuge at the Delaware Breakwater, and some of my constituents have had prepared a petition, copy herewith inclosed, and you are requested to sign said petition and secure additional signatures, sending same to me at Washington.

Without reference to political conditions, it will be my great pleasure to seek the aid and influence of the powerful Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which I am a member, for this much-needed improvement at Delaware Bay.

Requesting your early cooperation, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

MICH'L DONOHOE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You see, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman has observed that he has received numerous petitions from citizens desiring him to do certain things, and now I give you an insight into the manner in which the petitions are collected. It will be a useful pointer to those who want to be extremely popular in their districts.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will if the gentleman will get me more time. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the matter of press notices, I notice that a press agency is working in Washington and sending to newspapers in Philadelphia information in relation to the matter of the Delaware River. I have occasionally read that the gentleman got an appropriation of $1,300,000 last year, when, as a matter of fact, the committee left him with $500,000 until I aided him to get $1,000,000; after which I went to the Senate and secured $300,000 more. But the gentleman is dealing with millions—two millions he now claims—although your bill cuts down the total for the next fiscal year to one million, when the engineers recommended two millions and a half. But the Democratic millions are still being reported to Philadelphia, as the following inspired article sent out by the gentleman's friends, will show:

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF WHARVES AND DOCKS, PHILADELPHIA—$2,000,000 TO PUSH PORT DEVELOPMENT—CONGRESS WILL DO ITS SHARE IF STATE DOES LIKEWISE—CONFIDENCE IN PRESENT ADMINISTRATION OF PHILADELPHIA PORT LED TO RECOMMENDATION FOR RECORD APPROPRIATION.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

With a recommendation of $2,000,000, the largest sum ever appropriated by the National Government to the Delaware River channel, Congress has placed its stamp of approval upon the projected greater port of Philadelphia, and within four years, it is estimated, the 35-foot channel will be complete, providing ample depth for the largest vessels built.

* * * * * * *

Describing the attitude of Congress toward the port of Philadelphia and explaining the Rivers and Harbors Committee's reasons for indorsing the full sum requested by the Government engineers for channel work, Congressman MICHAEL DONOHOE, member of the committee, and, with Representative LEE, of Pottsville, indefatigable worker for the river and port, said:

"GOVERNMENT WILL COOPERATE.

"It is becoming the settled policy of Congress that money for the improvement of waterways shall be appropriated only where those waterways lead to ample terminal facilities, controlled not by private interests but by the municipality or State, for the benefit of all the people. By ample terminal facilities, I mean not merely a sufficient number of public wharves and docks, but also sufficient railroad connections."

As the legislature will hardly ignore conditions which have been the Federal Government's incentive for a $2,000,000 appropriation, although the Federal Government's interest is only general, while that of the State is local and particular, Director Norris feels that the appropriations from the State will be forthcoming and also that he will not be refused the legislation by which he hopes ultimately to place the port of Philadelphia under public administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania asked for and received unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DONOHOE, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman to say that there is only $1,000,000 appropriated in this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman cares to discuss that now, I will take it up; but I thought we would take it up when we get back to the Delaware item. I want to help the gentleman to get through with his bill.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will now move to rise and ask that the House meet at 11 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to go on for a little while yet.

Mr. GARNER. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is not yet 6 o'clock. Why should the gentleman want to rise now?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas wants to be facetious, well and good. If he wants to ascertain the reason, I will tell him.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I do not want to inquire into the reasons.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is not seeking to filibuster. If the gentleman from Texas wants him to, he will.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I am not desirous about the conduct of the gentleman from Illinois, and I was simply asking why it was that at this late day in the session, when we must meet at 11 o'clock in the morning, it is necessary to rise before 6 o'clock. I think that is a legitimate question, and if the gentleman from Illinois thinks that is a facetious question or a question calculated to bring on a filibuster, of course he can construe it as he may wish.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have a resolution that I should be glad to pass to-night if we can rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to make a motion?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not make any motion. If the gentleman does not desire to pay any attention to my suggestion, he does not need to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to unnecessarily prolong the session to-day, but I would like to finish the reading of the bill if we can.

Mr. MANN. Then we will not meet at 11 o'clock Monday morning, and the gentleman may as well understand that now as at any other time.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, it is clear that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desires to have the committee rise at this time. I believe that it is better to rise now than to take three and one-half hours to approve the Journal on next Monday. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 28180, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE ON MILEAGE.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution that I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 794.

Resolved, That the following assignment of room in the House Office Building be, and the same is hereby, made:

To the Committee on Mileage, the room on the second floor of the House Office Building, No. 292, heretofore assigned to the special committee on the investigation of the United States Steel Corporation for its use until its report shall be made to the House.

Mr. MANN. Is that the room that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LAFEAN] formerly had?

Mr. PALMER. I think he had it once. This room 292 was used by the committee on the investigation of the Steel Trust, to be used by them until they should make their report to the House. That report has now been made. Since that time the room has been used by the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department. That committee is now about through or will be in a day or so. The purpose of this resolution is to give the room to the Committee on Mileage, which has never had a committee room.

Mr. MANN. It is not quite fair to say that.

Mr. PALMER. That is, since I have been here.

Mr. MANN. It has always had a committee room, but it was given just the same room that a Member was given.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF LIFE AND PROPERTY, ETC., PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURAL CEREMONIES, 1913.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 145.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1913.

Resolved, etc., That $23,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in said District from the 28th of February to the 10th of March, 1913, both inclusive. Said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to make all reasonable regulations necessary to secure such preservation of public order and protection of life and property and fixing fares by public conveyance, and to make special regulations respecting the standing, movements, and operating of vehicles of whatever character or kind during said period and fixing fares to be charged for the use of the same. Such regulations shall be in force one week prior to said inauguration, during said inauguration, and one week subsequent thereto, and shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia and in such other manner as the commissioners may deem best to acquaint the public with the same; and no penalty prescribed for the violation of any of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication. Any person violating any of such regulations shall be liable for each such offense to a fine not to exceed $100 in the police court of said District, and in default of payment thereof to imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not longer than 60 days. And the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby likewise appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the construction, maintenance, and expenses incident to the operation of temporary public-comfort stations and information booths during the period aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much will we have to pay for cab hire during the inaugural time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will find it convenient to walk; I will say to him I am not familiar——

Mr. MANN. Well, when the gentleman attempted to walk it was not convenient at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with the regulations made by the commissioners, but this gives the usual authority given to regulate cab hire, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. I thought probably the gentleman could tell us in advance so we could get it by small doses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois will help me out by permitting me to ride in his limousine.

Mr. MANN. I will when I have one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution based on the usual lines. The committee had the superintendent of police before it and inquired with some care into the purpose for which the $23,000 and the $2,000 were to be used, and the explanation was entirely satisfactory to every member of the committee. We believe that the money is properly expended and expended for a very necessary and beneficial purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet at noon to-morrow, Sunday, January 26, 1913, at 12 o'clock.
